THRESCORE AND TEN.

Threescore and ten!—the bygone years,
How rise their memories to my thought;
The joys and griefs, the hopes, the fears,
That fill the measure of my lot.

Yet these are but the wayside sheaves
We glean upon the field of years;
Oblivion, in its reaping, leaves
But here and there some scattered ears.

Perhaps 't is well we can but glean;
For could we harvest all the past,
Joys too intense and griefs too keen
Were e'er the present being cast.

Life's current duty must be met;
And 't is but glances we can give
The darkening past; the game is set,
And we must for the mastery strive.

Gird up thyself, my spirit, thou,
In him who gives all needed grace;
Thou canst not now afford to spend
Thy closing years in idleness.

The past thou canst not now regain—
The shortening future is thine own;
To Faith and Hope and Love attain—
These spurs from Time may still be won.

Consistency and Inconsistency.

BY LEWIS W. TEETER.

There is probably no word fuller of meaning than the word "consistency;" especially when used in a religious sense. The definition of it is: "Agreement or harmony of all parts of a complex thing with itself at different times; congruity; correspondence." Consistency, therefore, existing in the parts of any organization, gives to it power. Inconsistency destroys the power. Another truth; consistency, in a religious sense, is the near companion of the Christian; and inconsistency the near companion of the hypocrite.

Under the law and the gospel it always required at least two witnesses to establish a fact. Then, to prove to the world that we are Christians, we must have several witnesses. These witnesses are: (1) our teaching; (2) our works.

It is an established fact, in all courts of justice, that witnesses that agree not together can never establish a fact; but, instead of giving evidence, they become a mass of confusion; and consequently they are rejected. That our witnesses, as named above, may prove that we are followers of our Saviour, we must teach and desire all things whatsoever he commanded or taught us, and desired us to have; and as he always taught us by example, as well as by precept, we also must follow after in the example, to confirm our faith in him. Then we are consistent, when we believe the gospel, and teach what we believe, and practice what we teach.

Who can describe the influence, the power, that we can have when we are thus consistent? What a bright light we then are in the world! But as soon as we fail in either faith, precept, or practice, we become inconsistent—we become a mass of confusion to the world. They know not what to take us for; for the light has become darkness, and "how great is that darkness!"

The world is in possession of our rule of faith and practice, (the gospel,) and knows what kind of persons we ought to be. If it did not, how could we be either light or darkness to the world? A blind man cannot see light, neither can he discover darkness. As said above, Consistency gives power; and if we be inconsistent, we lose this power: we become a perfect counterbalance; there are two forces existing in us, in opposition to each other, and this causes jarrings and confusion. Where, then, is our influence or power to do good? This spiritual building must go up like the temple of Solomon, without the noise of a tool.

Some men have been described as being "devils at home and Christians abroad." This is as impossible as serving "God and mammon." But there must be some pretension. No man can pretend to be a devil and be a Christian; but he can pretend to be a Christian and be a devil. This is the medium through which the devil transforms himself into angels of light. The inconsistency in these cases is more obscure—more difficult to detect; but it can be done with our great detector—the Bible.

Again: What do we promise when we are received into the church by baptism? In the first place the whole order of the church is laid open before us. Then we are asked whether we can conform to this. This, of course, is generally answered in the affirmative. Also the questions, "Dost thou believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he brought a saving gospel from heaven?" "Dost thou deny all ungodliness and worldly lust, and promise to live soberly and righteously in this world?" are answered in the affirmative. They are of so great weight, that, if they should be answered in the negative, by an applicant, he would be rejected. It does seem almost impossible, for a person, after having been initiated into the church, to act inconsistently, or do contrary to his promises; especially when we consider the circumstances under which he promised: 1st, in the presence of Almighty God, who knows the secrets and intentions of every heart; 2nd, in the presence of the church, who also bears the frank promises and are rejoicing with the angels of Heaven; 3rd, in the presence of the world, who also hear, and are waiting patiently to see this applicant prove himself. It must surely bring condemnation upon an individual to act in opposition to his promises, when he knows that those by-standing witnesses remember the promises he made as well as he does. Therefore he must feel the guilty conscience; God is not pleased; the church is deceived; and in this condition he is in danger of losing his soul. He has already lost his power to do good, because of this great inconsistency. All lose confidence in him, because they see that there is no stability in him; and a person without stability and firmness is not fit for anything. He will not do in the church; he will not do in the neighborhood; and he will not do in the family.

Again: Let the minister be inconsistent in any particular, then let him urge the observance of duty with the eloquence of an Apollas, what does it amount to? It is without force. It is as "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." When the sound is gone there is nothing more of it. Then let a minister be consistent, that is, let him practice what he preaches. Let him do as the Saviour did—teach not only by precept, but also by example—give the testimony that he is faithful in what he teaches—and the truth will cut to the heart, though he may speak in a very prosaic manner.

There is a disposition in man to seek self-justification, and, if he finds it, also to make free use of it. Therefore, any one who sets himself up, or is set up, as a leader, must first set the example, then he has a foundation to stand on.

Let a teacher in our schools be inconsistent, and it is surprising how small a child will notice it. He tells them not to use profane language; then if he would make use of only one profane word, it would be sufficient for the whole school to justify themselves in the use of profane words. So he sacrifices his controlling power by using one improper word. Again, let him grant a privilege to one pupil, then let another approach him asking the same favor, if he refuses to grant it, it is remarkable how small a child,—and how quickly, will cite him to the former case, saying: "You let Henry or John do so, why cannot I?" A good argument. How will you get around it. You must show some good reason why you make this difference before it is contented.

The same applies to the parent in the family. Let the father or mother try ever so hard to instill principles and manners into their children, unless they act in harmony with their teachings, it will avail nothing. Therefore parents lose their power by their inconsistency.

The whole of the Scriptures is seasoned with consistency. I call special attention to the admonitions and exhortations of Christ and the apostles. They are full of it. It is hardly necessary to make any citations; but in your reading notice this feature. Let a few instances suffice.

In the Lord's prayer, we are commanded to pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." And the Saviour's remarks touching this point are, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matthew 6: 14, 15. "And why beholdest thou the mote in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam in thine own eye. * * * Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Math. 17: 3, 5. The Saviour admonished the people to be obedient to the Scribes and Pharisees that sit in Moses' seat; "But," says he, "do not ye after their works; for they say and do not." Math. 23: 3. (Read the entire chapter.) There is such a multitude of instances of consistency and inconsistency, that it is impossible to refer to them. But in reading the Scriptures let us notice this feature and be benefited by it.

The Diapason of Redemption.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Margaret Deardorff:

A few days ago I was in a dilemma. I was approached by a deaf man. He addressed me, and then raised his acoustic tube to his ear to receive my reply. I signified that I am speechless. Then I thought of your deprivation. We are both pushed to the outskirts of society by our physical infirmities. When the tympanum loses its vibratory capacity, and the larynx its power to vocalize, we are in a great measure shut out from the deeper social elements that add so much to the more refined zest of life. But your difficulty is local, and unaccompanied by pain; while mine is general, and the source of continuous agony.

The thought of your deafness led me to the contemplation of the glorified ear as the inlet of some of the most exalted raptures of the future life.

There is a foreshadowing of what Christ can do for us in the display of his illimitable power over the physical infirmities of our nature, in the case recorded in Mark, 7:32—37. Eye and ear, tongue and consciousness, have a common centre in God, and are designed as inlets and receptivities of the infinite. It is the soul that sees, and hears, and feels and speaks; the body is but the medium of reception and expression. The disembodied state is one of unalloyed bliss, yet conditioned and circumscribed by the absence of the glorified material half. "The manifestation of the Sons of God," in the resurrection of the body through the power of the Holy Ghost, will be, on the part of the Bride elect, the crowning event of Redemption. Rom. 8: 19—23. That august reconstruction will roll its Divine "Ephphatha" in upon your now paralyzed tympanum, and flood the heights and depths of your soul with the harmony which God has been to Himself from eternity. To have our glorified nature ring with the round, full gamut which has been eternally playing and hymning and caroling in the Bosom of Infinite Holiness and Love, would seem to be Heaven enough, with no other inlet to the soul but the ear. What must it be to listen to and participate in the "Song of Songs,"—"all the fullness of God breaking out in psalmody, and rolling in crystal tides of music through myriads of souls, and trembling in ecstasy on the strings of myriads of golden harps! Oh, how it will kindle into flame the countless intelligences of Paradise, when the Infinite Heart lets forth the thrills and trills, quavers, semi-quavers, and demi-semi-quavers of its poetic improvisings among all the choirs and lyres and cymbals of the great congregation!

The number that will swell that anthem is inconceivable. The disciple of Patmos "heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands." This was one tier of the Celestial Orchestra, and they breathed out their entrancing strains with a loud voice." "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, WHICH NO MAN COULD NUMBER, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." Among these were no children, as is shown by the fact that they "came up out of Great tribulation, and had washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," clearly indicating conscious guilt, and personal effort in salvation. This presents another immense addition to the throng of elect musicians who are to celebrate the glories and wonders of the Trinity forever. To the profound bass of seraphim and cherubim, angels, dominions, principalities, and powers, and the softer tenor of innumerable saints, we must add the sweet, exquisite treble of infant voices. A moderate computation will give us no less than fifteen thousand millions of these sweet-lipped choristers. Oh, the Song, the Song,—the Everlasting Song! What a chorus will that be! Think of it all ye that love the Lord, take down your harp from the willows, re-tune it, and sweep its strings with the hand of faith, in joyous anticipation of the great day of your final espousal. Ponder it ye that love sin, and contemplate the awful counterpart. As glorious and transporting as will be the concert of the redeemed, so soul-scathing, peace-blasting, and woeful, will be the discordant, blasphemous jargon of the damned!

All that vast concourse, rank on rank, will unite with lip and harp in executing the great love-song which the Holy Three have been humming together from everlasting. Oh, the living, responsive melody. The musical scale in which the eternal constitution of God is framed, is to be the law of the soul forever. Every note will be drawn out of the feelings of Deity. Oh! the rhythm and chimes and cadences of that upper-world diapason! It seems enough to make even the heart of Jehovah burst with rapture! Oh, what a Divinely-toned, Divinely-empowered soul, and what a Divinely-cultured ear are required to bear the stress of Emmanuel's praise! The cubic Heaven of fifteen hundred miles will ring with the Divine symphony till every soul in that countless choir quivers with Deific bliss. Nay, more. I doubt not that the silvery reverberations will swell over the Jasper walls, and undulate millions and trillions and of miles beyond the Metropolis of Glory. If Abraham and Dives could converse across the impassable gulf, who knows but that faint echoes, or perhaps stunning reverberations, of the everlasting song, may roll down the steep of Infinite space, and reach the caverns of hell, and mingle with the weeping, wailing chorons of damnation! "The Name above every name" will be remembered in Hell, and His authority and glory acknowledged even by the outcasts of the pit. Phil. 2:10, 11.

Oh, the Song,—the bliss-awakening, bliss-sustaining Song! After as many millenniums have elapsed as seconds have passed since God set His chronometer in the Heavens, the Name of Jesus will be as sweet and fresh and fragrant and glorious and musical, as when the soul first flies into His rapturous embrace across the pearly threshold of the Golden City. He is the song of Eternity. Is He the psalm of our daily life,—the prelude of our everlasting Hosanna?

Love Your Enemies.

BY MARY ROHRER.

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Matth. 5: 44.

To love our enemies is a command uttered by our dear Saviour, when on the mount, to his apostles, and is equally binding upon all who profess to be his followers. Our human reason, if allowed to speak, would say it impossible to do so; because our nature teaches us to hate our enemies, and to render evil for evil. This is the law of nature. The apostle Paul speaks of another law, which is spiritual, and is altogether reverse to the law of our nature. Having, then, the law of our natures changed by the operations of the Spirit of God, who fills our hearts with love, and inspires our souls with zeal, our minds are lifted in sweet adoration, and we are enabled to say, "They will be done."

"Love your enemies." Christian, stop and think. Do you love your enemies? Do you do good to them? Our reasoning often runs thus: "They would not do me a favor, and I am under no obligations." Yes; we are, in the strictest sense, under obligations. Whatsoever Christ has commanded is doubtless obligatory upon every one that professeth to be a follower of him. What right have we to confide in the promises of everlasting joys, while we please ourselves only? Let us take heed lest we fail in this point, and become guilty of all. It is utterly impossible to please God by choosing out such portions of his word as will suit our inclinations. No; it requires the strictest scrutiny on our part, and firm, devotional prayer, to enable us to see and know our duties and ourselves.

"Love your enemies." How can I do this? If I do them a favor, such as I can without injuring my own business, it will give a Christian appearance; and I can pray before the world that God would bless and do them good. Will this satisfy the demand? I tell you, Nay; we can do all this with a heart full of animosity and revenge. But the truly penitent Christian, who desires to know nothing but Christ and him crucified, will stop and think over these things. His heart's desire, is to know what is required of him, in order that he may please the Lord, and meet the approbation of his heavenly Father. He is grieved at the maltreatment of his enemy; but he perceives that he is "in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity." He pities his soul, and yearns for him. He prays the Father to pardon, and give him understanding, that his spiritual eyes may be opened. He speaks to him in kind, instead of harsh words. He favors him with kind acts, wherever he can; and thus manifests a Christian-like disposition and fulfills his command.

Funerals—The Burial of Our Dead.

BY D. P. SAYLER.

I deplore the degradation a professing christianity has fallen into in the burial of the dead. And as some of these degrading habits are insinuating themselves into our own dear Brotherhood, I think a word of caution, at least, will not be amiss. I scarcely know what part of the sad rite is most perverted, or where my word of caution should begin; I think the entire service needs reforming.

First. Fashionable christianity has adopted the habit of wearing so-called mourning clothing; not only all the members of the family, to be clad in black garments, but wearing crape scarfs, as mourning badges, on the hat, or around the arm; black gloves, which are for no service at all, but to be used on the present occasion, and to blacken the hands of the wearer, with a greasy, black dirt, which I have seen carry the marks of it on their hands for days after the burying. Poor families, under the vain delusion that they, too, must follow the fashion, incur expenses which they are unable to bear. Such a silly, useless, and foolish custom should be denounced and lived down by all well meaning people. I once preached on the occasion of the burying of a young man, whose father was no professor of religion, but moved in the circles of a political life, and was well able to bear the expenses incident to a showy funeral; but, to my surprise, I found the coffin in which the remains of his son were laid of the plainest kind, and all the funeral arrangements on the simplest order. I took the occasion publicly to commend him for his virtue and good sense displayed in the burying of his son, setting an example which christians will do well to imitate.

Second. Long continued custom has made it a law among us to hold religious services at the time of our burials. This I commend. I believe it may be profitable to do so if properly conducted. But here, too, fashion has its corrupting influences, and Christ is dishonored; for, during all the services, singing, praying, and exhortation, the friends and relatives of the deceased, for whom special prayer is made, sit with their hats on their heads, which is a positive violation of the word of God. All this is the result of imitating a worldly fashion which a corrupt christianity has introduced. When the minister is called to the bed-side of the sick member of the family, not one of the male members present would think of sitting in the room with his hat on his head, or decline to kneel in prayer, etc.; but as soon as the immortal spirit has left the body, it is out of fashion to kneel in prayer, or to take the hat off while others pray or preach. From this abomination in the eyes of the Lord let the brethren flee, and set the world the example that all the friends of the dead kneel, and the male friends all have their heads uncovered during prayer and service.

Third. As soon as the dead are buried out of our sight, and the religious services are closed, all are invited to return to the home of the departed, to partake of a sumptuous dinner, prepared for the occasion the day preceding the burial; and if that day happen to be Sunday, the christian's rest day, it must be devoted to baking, cooking, washing, etc. All this is done, because it is the custom to do so. This custom, or fashion, should be discontinued by all, and by christian brethren certainly, because it is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting. Then surely, the house of mourning should not be turned into a house of feasting; and as the poorer class of our citizens cannot well afford such unnecessary expense, the more wealthy should for their sakes abandon it.

Fourth. Another evil in the drama is the extravagant price the undertaker charges for the coffin in which the dead are buried, charging from $30 to $40 for a plain walnut coffin, with a pine board case, when the cost of all the material used in its construction does not exceed from $5.00 to $10.00, and the time spent in the manufacture of it is less than one day. If the undertaker be a cabinet maker he will sell a piece of furniture in which double the amount of material is used, and from eight to ten days labor expended in its construction, for less than half the amount he charges for a coffin. All this sin and extravagance in the undertaker is endured by the afflicted simply because custom and fashion have made it unlawful for the friend of the dead to bargain for the coffin, or to say one word in protest against the price. This is a growing evil in our land, and for the protection of all, it is high time that a protest should be entered against it. As a son, a father, a husband, an executor, or administrator, I have paid for many coffins. For a double coffin the price used to be from $12.00 to $16.00 and at those prices it was considered by the undertaker himself profitable business.

Brethren, if we are, as it is our high privilege to be, the salt of the earth, and the light of the world, let us not only separate ourselves from these evils, but protest against them where and whenever found. Let us come out from them and touch not the unclean thing, and God will receive us, and we will be his sons and daughters, not in name only, but in truth and in deed.

Substitutes for War.

BY AMASA LORD.

War is now tolerated only as a necessary evil; but there is in truth no more necessity for it than there is for duelling, the slave trade or any other species of folly or crime. War comes solely from the wrong choice of men. That choice may be changed; and whenever it shall be, nations, like individuals, will find other methods for the settlement of their disputes, far better than the sword for all purposes of protection and redress.

I. The first substitute, then would be NEGOTIATION. So long as nations keep cool and kind enough to adjust their own difficulties, this method is decidedly best of all. If the code of national honor did not goad them at once into blood; if they made the sword really their last resort, instead of their first; if popular sentiment should always hold them back from conflict till mutual forbearance, explanation, and concession had exhausted their utmost power, this expedient alone would, in nine cases out of ten, prevent an appeal to arms.

II. should this expedient fail, our next resort would be to ARBITRATION; a substitute adopted when the parties are unable to adjust their own difficulties, or prefer the decision of an umpire mutually chosen. Better for the parties to agree among themselves, if they can; but, if they can not, we wish nations in every case to settle their disputes as individuals do theirs, by some mode of reference. We urge this as an established, permanent principle. Nations should, in accordance with the recommendation of the First General Peace Convention in London, incorporate in every treaty a clause binding the parties to adjust whatever differences may arise between them, not by the sword, but by reference to umpires mutually chosen, and agree to abide by their decision, and to claim, if dissatisfied, only the privilege of renewing or changing the reference.

To such a substitute, what objection can be urged? It relinquishes no right; it sacrifices no interest; it would startle few, if any prejudices; it can offend neither the strong nor the moderate peace-men, neither the Quaker nor the warrior; it is adapted to the present state of the world, and consistent alike with the precepts of Christianity, and the dictates of sound policy; a measure level to the comprehension of all, and commending itself to their common sense as simple, feasible, and likely to prove successful. Nor is the principle new, but as old as human society; it lies at the bottom of every trial in our courts; we oft en find the wisest and best men preferring it in their own case even to a regular course of law; and we merely ask nations to use the same degree of justice, candor and good sense in adjusting their difficulties, that individuals do in theirs. Can they not do so?

III. Should both these expedients fail, we should still have in reserve the principle of MEDIATION. When rulers become so exasperated against each other, as to withdraw from official intercourse, and the strange, semi-barbarous code of national honor requires them to keep aloof, or to meet only on the field of battle, a third power friendly to both, interposes with the offer of its services as mediator; such services the parties are now bound in courtesy to accept; and this expedient, a new development of the pacific tendencies of the age, promises to obviate the most delicate and difficult cases of misunderstanding. It is well known that duellists can not fight so long as a mutual friend stands between them as mediator; and if so effectual for the prevention of duels, the principle, equally applicable to war, would be likely to prove still more successful here, from the longer delay necessary, from the greater publicity of the transaction, and from the overwhelming majority on both sides interested in a peaceful issue of the dispute. Thus might a single cabinet by the well timed tender of its services, hold in check, the war spirit of the whole civilized world, and keep its nations in permanent peace. Not unfrequently has this expedient been employed since the downfall Napoleon; and every one can remember with what speedy and signal success England alone acted, in the course of a few years, as mediator between France and ourselves, between Holland and Belgium, between Sweden and France, and between France and Switzerland. It is a new antidote to war, and may do much to insure the steady and lasting peace of Christendom.

IV. But the perfection of all substitutes for war, would be a CONGRESS OF NATIONS. By this we mean a congress or meeting in convention, of as many nations as could be brought into the measure, to agree upon a full code of international law, and next a High Court of Nations, or board of international arbitrators, to interpret and apply that code, to adjudicate whatever cases might be referred to them by consent of parties; and to act for the great brotherhood of nations as the guardian of their common rights and interests. It would perform for nations substantially the same services that a civil tribunal does for individuals, or the Supreme Court of the United States does for the different States in our confederacy. It would have no right to touch any case not voluntarily referred to it by the nations in dispute; and all its decisions would be merely advisory, and become binding only by the consent of each party, and efficacious solely by the force of public opinion in their favor. There would be at its command no fleets, no armies, no power whatever besides the influence of its own reputation, the voice of the civilized world, and perhaps an application in extreme cases of peaceful penalties, to awe refractory states into acquiescence. An expedient founded on the very same principle with our codes and courts of law; an expedient as old, in one form or another, as civil government or human society; an expedient just as applicable to nations as to individuals, and likely, if once established, and used aright, to prove as successful in the former case as it has in the latter; an expedient that could certainly do no harm, and might suffice at once to prevent forty-nine wars in fifty, and eventually supersede forever the whole war-system.

Here, then, are four substitutes for war, each simple, easy and effective; substitutes which every man of the least sense or candor must admit to be infinitely better than an appeal to the savage argument of lead and steel; substitutes which recognize right instead of might, reason in place of brute force, as the arbiter of national disputes; substitutes which nations could, if they would, adopt in part, without delay, and ere long, the whole of them; substitutes which would at once supersede every plea of necessity for war, insure far more justice in the intercourse of nations, and guarantee in due time their permanent peace and prosperity.

Now, we insist on the duty of nations to adopt such substitutes as these. If they are moral agents like individuals, they are equally bound to an amicable, bloodless adjustment of their difficulties; and, if war is held by none to be justifiable except as a last resort, and should never be employed till after all other expedients have failed, then must nations, on the lowest principles of common sense, abstain from the sword until they have not only tried in good faith negotiation, reference and mediation, but established a congress of nations, and submitted their disputes to its high and impartial arbitration. All this they can do, if they will; and, until they do it, how can war be called their last resort?

"But nations have no common judge, and hence they must decide each its own case." True they have at present no such judge; but they might have, if they would; and we call upon them by every motive of reason, duty and self-interest, to establish one as soon as possible.

"Meanwhile, however, what shall settle their disputes?" Surely not the sword, but some one of the substitutes we have proposed. War settles disputes! Never! The parties invariably sheath the sword before they dream of a settlement, and then dispatch, not men of blood to fight, but men of peace, plenipotentiaries, to negotiate. And why not do this before fighting, and thus obviate all necessity of war? We had a controversy with England about our northeastern boundary, and another respecting the Alabama matter. Had we gone to war, would that have settled these disputes? No; it would only have aggravated the difficulties. There is no logic in bullets and bomb shells; the butchery of millions on the disputed territory could not have thrown a single ray of new light on the points in controversy; and after wasting myriads of treasure, and shedding oceans of blood, we should have been obliged to employ for the final adjustment the very same pacific means that might have been used even more successfully before the war than after it.

"True, if the parties were willing; but can you make them willing before they have fought awhile?" Yes, we could, if we would; but how little effort is made for peace in comparison with what must be for war?

No two nations could begin a war in earnest without sacrificing, in one way or another, scores of millions; but a tenth or even the hundredth part as much, if wisely spent in the use of moral means for the purpose, would form such a public sentiment, that no power on earth could goad the parties into conflict. Unwilling for a peaceful adjustment? Who is unwilling? Am I? Are you? We resent the charge; and, should you go through both countries, you would find scarce a man that would not profess to be equally anxious for a bloodless issue of the dispute.

"Perhaps the people are willing; but the rulers are not." Rulers not willing! Why not? Because the people do not call loud enough for a peaceful settlement. Rulers will generally go either for peace or for war, just as the people go; they can, if they will, settle their disputes without war, quite as well as individuals can theirs without duels; they will do so whenever the people shall come every where to demand it aright; the people will thus demand it, whenever they shall be duly enlightened on the subject; and hence do we urge the pulpit and the press, every sect in religion, and every party in politics, all Christians, philanthropists and patriots, to unite in filling every community with such an abhorrence of war, and such strong desires for peace, as shall hereafter constrain rulers to employ pacific expedients alone for the settlement of all national disputes.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Death and Judgment.

BY LANDON WEST.

These are two conditions to which our race is subject, and from which there is no escape; and although we must meet them in some form or other, it is in our power to greatly influence the form in which they meet us. Death is decreed to Adam's posterity; and it has prevailed universally, (only two exceptions in more than five thousand years,) until the present; and those who now live have not the gleam of a hope that their condition in this respect, will be any better than that of those who have gone before them, and whose bodies now lie in dust.

It is remarkable that the children of one common parent should, in fifty centuries, become so diversified in so many respects. We see it in intellect, in language, in occupation, in color, in habit, in government and religion, and, in fact, in everything but one, which, of itself, is quite enough to show their common origin: it is this,—They all die. Associated with this common fate, and very closely, too, is the almost universal belief in an awful judgment, or the rendering of man's account, and upon which hangs every hope of his future happiness. This going down to the grave is looked upon with horror, and met with a shudder, if we feel any doubts as to our condition in the future. And why need we wonder at it? There is implanted deeply in man's breast an undying love of life, and that plant has taken deep root.—Should he feel that he has reason to fear that his long-cherished hope of an endless and happy life will not be realized, it is natural to suppose that he will dread the moment which puts an end to that of the present. Who of all men does not look upon this moment of change with the most intense interest? As much as we may discard the thought of God's Providence in life, we all allow that the change called death, and the entering into a future existence, is entirely subject to his all-wise control. Therefore, we should, while in life, prepare for death, for without preparation the farther end of the bridge over which we must all pass, is shrouded in an awful darkness. What a soul-cheering thought it will be at that moment, to feel that "I shall fear no evil for thy presence is with me." Kind reader, give one serious thought to that time which shall mark the close of thy present existence.

The other condition to which our race is subject is that of accountability, and the time fixed for the allotment to all the race of rewards and punishments, is called, by way of importance, "The Day of Judgment." We think there has been no time in the past, neither will there be in the future any event which can compare in importance and intense interest with the day of final reckoning, when all the world shall be weighed in a balance.

That man is a being held responsible for the blessings and benefits conferred upon him, we believe to be as plainly set forth in the Holy Scriptures as are the facts of his creation, his fall, his redemption, or the promise of his resurrection from the dead. And we think it not too much to say that not only man is subject to this condition, but all the intelligent beings whom God has made, whether in heaven, on earth, or in the countless worlds we see around us, all are alike subject to the same,—all of them held responsible for their conduct, and to their great Creator must they account for it.

That the Scriptures present the subjects of death and judgment as marking the most important points in man's existence, we think will require no proof from us. And we do believe, if these two events, which are of so great moment to our guilty race, could be properly impressed upon the minds of all, that such a step would entirely revolutionize the world.—What changes it would make! Every thought would be pure; every word would be kindly spoken, every motive would be good, and every deed done in the fear of God.

The changes such a condition would produce, we cannot conceive of, but we think it would be to restore Eden again to the world, and to give to the whole race the most happy relationship with the beings who now look down upon our degraded and unhappy condition.

My dear reader, please to give it one thought before you leave it. "For we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. How can we endure a look from Jesus then, unless we have made him our friend?"

You had better be poisoned in your blood than in your principles.

For The Young.

Don't be in a Hurry to Go.

Come boys, I have something to tell you,
Come near, I would whisper it low;
You are thinking of leaving the homestead,
Don't be in a hurry to go.
The city has many attractions,
But think of the vices and sins;
When once in the vortex of fashion,
How soon the course downward begins.
You talk of the mines of Australia:
They're wealth in red gold without doubt;
But ah! there is gold on the farm, boys,
If you'll only shovel it out.
The mercantile life is a hazard,
The goods are first high and then low;
Better risk the old farm a while longer—
Don't be in a hurry to go!
The great busy West has inducements,
And so has the busiest mart;
But wealth is not made in a day, boys—
Don't be in a hurry to start!
The bankers and brokers are wealthy,
And take in their thousands or so;
Ah! think of the frauds and deceptions—
Don't be in a hurry to go!
The farm is the safest and surest;
The orchards are loaded to-day;
You are free as the air in the mountains,
And monarch of all you survey.
Better stay on the farm a while longer,
Though profit comes in rather slow;
Remember you have nothing to risk, boys,
Don't be in a hurry to go!

Your Tongue.

Nellie Gordon was one of the most lovable children I have ever known. Every one loved her, old and young, rich and poor, all rejoiced when she came to them, and sorrowed when she was gone. Do you ask whether she was very pretty, and very clever and amusing, or very accomplished? No, Nelly was none of these things; nor was she rich, for her father was a poor clergyman with eight children, so you may fancy that very little pocket-money fell to Nelly's share, and accordingly she had very little to give away. Then would you like to know the secret of her being so beloved? I will tell you it in her own words, for once, when she was nearly grown up, I said to her: "How is it, Nelly, that you manage to win people's hearts in this way? I want to know," and she answered so humbly and sweetly:—

"It is since God has helped me to keep my tongue, Mr.—. A long time ago, when I was quite a little girl, I used to be dreadfully unhappy, because nobody loved me—you look surprised, but it is very true—and mamma told me it was because I said such hasty, unkind things to everybody. If any of the boys did anything naughty, I used to love to tell of it instead of speaking to the boy about it, and I used to like to see the people laugh at what I said, as they did sometimes, I did not care a bit how much it vexed anybody else. Oh, it was very sad! But when I learned to watch over my tongue, it became different. It was hard at first because you see I had got into such a dreadful habit of it, but God helped me, and that made it easy."

Now if any of my readers are grieving that they are not loved, and nobody cares for them, let them look into their hearts, and I think that they will often find that an evil tongue has a great deal to do with it. Words have a wonderful power for good or evil. Many a little unkind word sticks in the mind like a thorn, and makes oh, such a sore place; and gentle, kind words are like rays of sunshine, so bright and comforting, and often more precious than gold. Do try to say kind words, and not to say unkind ones. Pray to God David's prayer, "Lord keep the door of my lips. Set a seal before my lips." Say it when you feel inclined to be angry or discontented; when you feel an ungente answer rising in your heart. Don't be satisfied when you go to bed at night unless you have gained some victory over your tongue during the day, and said something kind and cheerful whenever you could. Do but try this earnestly, prayerfully, humbly, and I don't think you will have long to complain that nobody loves you; and, what is more precious still, you will be following the steps of our Lord Jesus Christ, "who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."—Children's Friend.

Bessie Barton's Test.

"I wish I knew just what to do about it," were the words that again and again fell from Dr. Barton's lips; for the matter to be decided was a weighty one.

Each time they were uttered, the soft eyes of a young girl, who sat sewing near by, were lifted wistfully toward the gentleman, till at last he noticed their expression, and asked: "What is it, Pussy? What do you think about it?"

"I should go by papa's rule," she replied, the crimson creeping into her fair cheek.

"And what may papa's rule be, little Bessie?" asked her uncle.

"Never do anything, or say anything, or go anywhere, where we cannot ask God's blessings to rest upon us. He says it saves a world of trouble, and is always a sure test."

Dr. Barton was a worldly man, who sometimes scoffed at the simple confidence of pious souls; but no such feeling tempted him now, and silently kissing the fair forehead of his niece, he left the room.

Uttered in weakness as it was, Bessie's lesson of trust proved the "word filly spoken; and not many months passed before he, too, claimed this test as his rule in life's duties and trials.

When our journey through life seems a tangled pathway, have we as sure a rule to guide our weak steps? Not all the wisdom of philosophy can yield so perfect a test. Do nothing but what you can ask God's blessing to rest upon. What a safeguard against the wiles of the tempter, be the lure ever so seductive! What a beacon in the darkest hour of the night! To feel that God will bless our efforts, is a stronger staff to uphold our trembling steps than the most powerful of earthly helpers.

"Nothing but what God will bless." Write it on your heart; have it graven as a breastplate; yea, I will help thee; I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. So he has promised, and never fails to fulfill.

How to Get Along.

Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If you have a place of business, be found there when wanted.

No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons.

"Never fool" in business matters. Have order, system, regularity, liberality and promptness.

Do not meddle with business you know nothing of.

Never buy an article you do not need, simply because it is cheap, and the man who sells it will take it out in trade.

Trade in money.

Strive to avoid hard words and personalities.

Do not kick every stone in the path. More miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping.

Pay as you go.

A man of honor respects his word as his bond.

Aid, but never beg.

Help others when you can, but never give what you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable.

Learn to say "no." No necessity of snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Have but few confidants, the fewer the better.

Use your own brains rather than those of others.

Learn to think and act for yourself.

Be vigilant.

Keep ahead rather than behind the times. Ex.

INTRODUCTORY.

In April, 1851, nearly twenty-five years ago, brother H. Kurtz published the first number of the Gospel Visitor, a monthly publication. On the 10th of May, 1864, over eleven years ago, brother H. R. Holsinger published the first number of the Christian Family Companion, a weekly Christian journal. In 1873 we purchased both of the above periodicals, having been editorially connected with the first for about sixteen years. We united the two together, and called our paper The Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor. We have published two volumes since the union of the two papers. The name being too long to be used conveniently, and also too long to suit the form of our paper, we came to the conclusion, after considerable reflection, to adopt the name of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN as the name of our paper. We did this, not because we are fond of changes, but for convenience.

We now begin a new volume of our paper under the name of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, enlarged and improved. And we shall endeavor to make it in every respect as useful as we possibly can. The liberal patronage our brethren and friends have given us, and an ardent desire to make our position as editor subservient to the promotion of Christian truth, are inducements to diligence and faithfulness; and prompted by them and other lawful considerations, with the experience we have had in publishing a Christian journal, we hope to furnish our brethren and all who patronize us, with a paper that will give satisfaction to such as will appreciate the work.

To such as are acquainted with the character of the periodicals with which we have been connected, it is sufficient, perhaps, to say, that the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will advocate the same doctrines and labor to promote the same type of Christian character, in general, that its predecessors have done. And to such as know but little or nothing of the character of the periodicals whose places the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN now occupies, we would say, that we design to give our paper as much as we possibly can the character that its name implies. The form of doctrine taught by the Apostles, and practically carried out in the first ages of Christianity, formed the character of primitive Christians. The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will strive to be a representative of that type of Christian character, both in the principles which it inculcates, and in the spirit which it manifests.—Primitive Christians gave such striking proofs of their divine or supernatural character that they were the wonder of the world, and the admiration of heaven. And this character of primitive Christians should be the character that modern Christians should strive to cultivate. It is the only character that forms the basis of a well-grounded hope of heaven. The fraternity of Brethren or German Baptists, the body of professing Christians whose principles the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will advocate, and with whom we are in fellowship, have ever maintained as a distinctive peculiarity of their faith and practice, the form and life of godliness as held by the first, or primitive Christians.

The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will contain the various departments of reading that we shall judge conducive to the instruction, edification, and general improvement of our readers in useful knowledge and gospel holiness. Through our correspondents, in different parts of the brotherhood, we hope to be able to give to our readers whatever may transpire in any of the churches, that will likely be of interest to them. We design giving more attention to the Querists' department than has heretofore been done. The Youth's department will be supplied with reading adapted to the young. The Essay department will have special attention given to it, and we hope to give our readers essays on various Christian subjects both edifying and profitable. With whatever interest other subjects may be read, in our humble judgment, good essays on Christian doctrine, precept, and practice, written in suitable language and style, are among the most useful reading furnished by a Christian journal. We hope to introduce some new features in our paper, and shall try to give as great a variety of subjects as we possibly can. As the enlarged sheet that we shall use in the current volume, will give us more space, we can give more reading matter. And we shall endeavor to use our space to the best advantage.

Brother Boer being associated with us again as assistant editor, our readers will hear from us through the editorial department as often as our time will permit, upon such subjects as we think will edify and profit them.

With our new name and improvement in size and quality of our paper, we hope there will be an improvement in its literary character as well. And we hope all our correspondents and contributors will continue their labors and work with renewed energy to make our paper useful. We expect to add new contributors to our number.

We are willing to assume the responsibility that belongs to our position and work, and shall labor to meet it, and to make our paper all that can reasonably be expected of it, but we hope our readers will not expect too much, or be too ready to find fault. And let not what is good and truthful be overlooked, or fail to be appreciated, because it may be remotely, or even closely associated with something of doubtful propriety. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Now as the improvements we have made increase our expenses considerably, and give our subscribers a larger amount of reading, will not all the friends of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN do their utmost to obtain subscribers for us, and to enlarge our circulation, which is very desirable? We hope they will.

We commend our work to the Lord, and hope the brethren will pray for it, that God's blessing may rest upon it, and then it will prove a blessing to the church and to the world.

RESOLUTIONS—THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

A new year is a new period in life; and all those who have an object in living, will begin every distinct period of life with new resolutions. But there are many that have no special object before them to which their lives are devoted. There are others who have objects before them by no means worthy of the chief attention of rational and accountable intelligences. All who have great objects in view may not always accomplish great things, or become great, but if we have no object in view, we may expect to accomplish little or nothing.

All should have a worthy object in view and strive to secure that object. All will probably admit the importance of resolutions in prosecuting a work attended with difficulties. And we all should understand that the way to goodness, or true greatness, or to success in anything, is always beset with difficulties.

The student who wishes to ascend the hill of science to an honorable height, must not expect to make that ascent without encountering difficulties many and formidable. The same may be said of the man whose heart is fixed on wealth, and whose mind is set on making a fortune. Every business transaction will not bring him gain, nor everything to which he sets his hand prosper. But his reverses do not discourage him; and he resolves to apply himself to the object of his pursuit with increased application.

There is great power in resolutions, and men under strong resolves have accomplished either good or evil according to their characters and according to the moral character of their resolves. It was resolution that made Job bear his losses and afflictions with such magnanimity and patience. David was a man of resolutions. He resolved to maintain fearlessly the cause of his God. "I will speak," he said, addressing God, "of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed." Psa. cxix. 46. And again, "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me." Psa. xxxix. 1. Here he resolves to control his tongue that he might not use unbecoming language when the wicked were before him, and thus bring reproach upon his God and his religion.

We should all, then, take advantage of the power of resolutions, and make them, as we may, subserve good purposes. Whatever is our duty we should resolve to do, for it can be done. The idea that we cannot do our duty is an absurdity. What is impossible for us to do cannot be our duty while we are under the government of a Being among whose prominent attributes are wisdom, mercy, and love. We should resolve to do no evil, and to abandon every sinful habit. We should also resolve to do whatever we find it is our duty to do.

But who has not, time and again, broken his resolution? And it is true that many resolves have been made without any good results. And this often operates as a great discouragement against forming new resolutions. But this circumstance should not discourage any. Though a man may lose confidence in himself because of his repeated failings to keep his resolutions, it does not follow that he must continue to break his resolutions. Neither should any become discouraged and conclude that it is not worth while to form any further resolutions, thinking they may be as fruitless as those already formed. If a man has become a slave to intoxication or any other vice, and has resolved to reform, but has broken his resolution, afterward, when he resolves again to reform, the tempter will be very likely to try to make him think that as his first resolution was broken, it is useless to resolve again. And so with the Christian who is dissatisfied with his attainments in the divine life, and resolves to be more prayerful, and watchful, and holy: He has so often resolved upon improvement, and failed in his resolutions, that he is tempted to think he will form no more, as they will not be kept.—This is one of the ways that Satan pursues to accomplish his ends with both sinners and Christians. But the temptation should be repulsed with firmness, and the idea spurned that vice cannot be conquered or virtue practiced. Is sin stronger than grace, and Satan than God? Surely not. Then there is hope.

Our resolutions, to be successful, should be made with an humble dependence on Christ. On him our help is laid. And it is laid "on one that is mighty." With his help there can be no failure in efforts to become good or to do good. "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me," said the Apostle Paul. "I will go in the strength of the Lord God," said David. Peter said to his Lord, "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." This was a noble resolution, but he failed to keep it. He trusted too much upon his own strength. But when he learned, as he did in after life, that his strength was in the Lord, and trusted in him, then he was fearless of danger and strong to suffer, and died with his Lord as a martyr to the truth.

Dear reader, in entering upon another new year, which we have, through the goodness of our heavenly Father, been permitted to do, would it not be well for us all to consecrate ourselves to God if we have never done so, and if we have, would it not be well to renew that consecration, and, if necessary, make it more complete? Let us resolve to do so, and with the poet say,—

"Now I resolve with all my heart,
With all my powers to serve the Lord:
Not from his precepts e'er depart,
Whose service is a rich reward.

"O may I never fajar nor tire,
Nor wand'ring, leave thy sacred way;
Great God accept my soul's desire,
And give me strength to live thy praise."

A VISIT TO THE MIDDLECREEK AND QUEMAHONING CHURCHES.

On Saturday, the 18th of December, we left home to visit the Middlecreek church in our county. On Saturday evening the appointment was in the meeting house on the old plank road, about three miles west of Somerset. On Lord's day morning the meeting was in the Kimmel meeting house, still farther west. On Lord's day evening it was in the large meeting house on Middlecreek. The weather was extremely cold, and although there was some snow on the ground, there was not enough to make the sledding good, and as the roads were very rough and the weather very cold, the congregations were not large, though as large as could have been expected under the circumstances. Although our congregations were not large, we had pleasant waitings upon the Lord, and the privilege we enjoyed of meeting as Christian friends in the sanctuary of God, and there mingling together in the exercise of Christian devotion, was refreshing to our spirits.

Having promised to spend Christmas with the brethren of the Quemahoning congregation, in the northern part of our county, and no providence interfering, we met with the brethren in their meeting house near Sipesville, on Friday evening, the 24th of December, at which time and place our first meeting was held. We closed on Sunday night, having held five meetings in the same place. There was a very hard rainfall on Friday which interfered considerably with our first meeting. There was also a rain and thunder storm on Sunday night which caused our meeting for that night to be small. The rest of our meetings, however, were very well attended, and were solemn, and the people seemed to listen to the word preached with interest, and to feel its power. The brethren seemed to enjoy themselves, and thought we had a good meeting. The brethren generally enjoy visits from ministers of other congregations, and we think it good to make such visits, and recommend it, though our other duties will not permit us to do as much of it as we would like to do.—And while such visits are generally very acceptable to the churches, they are also usually profitable to the ministers themselves, especially to young ministers.—Such visits should be encouraged by both the officers and members of the churches.

Almanacs! Almanacs!!

We have sent out all the Almanacs for 1876 that we had on hands; and have yet several hundred orders to be filed, which we expect to fill in a few days.

Since the above was set up, another box of Almanacs arrived, and hence orders will be filled promptly. We have also just received a box of Hymn Books.

Gleanings and Jottings.

First, in our Jotting and Gleaning department, we wish to meet you with a hearty greeting. We have crossed the threshold of another year, and, in entering upon its realities, we wish you all much happiness and prosperity. But while this is the sincere wish of our heart, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that, among so many thousands of readers, the great probability is, that at least some will meet with misfortune and unhappy experiences during the year. The truth is, as none of us have had all sunshine throughout any of our past years, so none of us should be over sanguine that this year will be free from clouds and storms. Wisdom would suggest that we prepared to meet these, and then, if we should escape them, we will the better appreciate and enjoy our good fortune.

The beginning of the year is generally a season of good resolutions and lofty expectations; but its close, too often, sees our resolutions broken and our expectations turned into almost so many failures. Just why this is, would be a little difficult to tell; but the probability is, that, in the first place, we are too extravagant in our desires and expectations; and secondly, we are not as zealous in carrying out our resolves as we might be. We read somewhere—and thought it well said—that we live in an age of big resolutions and little work. There is certainly some truth in the remark. Of course it is not meant that there is nothing accomplished, for we know that the world is full of great achievements; but when we consider the many purposes, aims or resolutions that are never realized, we feel that, comparatively, there is too little work. We ought, therefore, to apply ourselves the more assiduously, or make our calculations a little more moderate, or both. The atmosphere is full of balloons and airships that are too light and flimsy to come into contact with the substantial world. They are very beautiful so long as they float along in the clear sky of the imagination; but when they are met by the winds and storms of real life, they are driven and scattered like the fine dust.

In making our calculations for the future, we should have in full view our circumstances, our surroundings, and our ability to execute our plans; and then we should make due allowance for unforeseen hindrances. If this be carefully done, our expectations will be more moderate, and, with proper watchfulness and diligence, we will meet with fewer disappointments. When all is said that we can say, no doubt, the advice of our Master is still the best—"Take no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Our aims should be noble; our plans should be wisely laid; and then, without being unpleasantly solicitous, we should go on in a faithful discharge of duty, improving each moment as it is given, and then leave the result with God. Do this, and, if the year 1876 should not be all pleasure to you, it may be all profit.

In the last volume of the Companion and Visitor, No. 44, in the article headed "A Full Report," &c., by brother Wampler, in the next to the last line, read Josiah, instead of "Joseph."

The article in this issue from the pen of brother Balsbaugh, headed, "The Diapason of Redemption," should have been in No. 49 of last volume, instead of his "Letter to a Beloved Young Saint in the Manor Church, Maryland." The articles somehow were interchanged, and the mistake was not discovered until it was too late to correct. We suppose, however, that there can be no harmful results from it.

As this is the initial number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and as we have a number of applications for specimens (and expect many more,) we will make a few statements that may be of advantage to such as have not heretofore been subscribers.

1. Fifty numbers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN constitute a volume.
2. Every number shall contain sixteen pages, making 800 pages in a volume.—The first number contains the title-page, and the last number of each volume a complete index of the contents of the volume.
3. The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is only $1 60 a year, the publisher paying the postage. Of course, the terms are $1 60 in advance; however, in some instances, we give a little time.
4. Any persons sending three or more subscribers will be entitled to 10 per cent. commission; but it is preferred that agents take their commission out of the price of their paper, or some of the books and pamphlets for sale at this office.
5. In addition to the regular commission of 10 per cent., we offer the following premiums:

1. A VALUABLE COMMENTARY ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS. By Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown, Price, $7 50. This is to be given to the agent who sends in the largest list of new subscribers between Nov. 1st, 1875, and Feb. 1st, 1876.

2. WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTION-

ARY. Price $12. To be given to the agent who sends in the greatest number of subscribers between Nov. 1st, 1875, and Feb. 1st, 1876.

Non-paying subscribers are not to be counted.

We wish to have it distinctly understood that those who receive these premiums will still receive their commission of 10 per cent.

We will farther state that any one who will give his commission and the difference between that and $12 may have a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary.

BROTHER Eshelman requests us to say to our readers that no more money is needed to publish Danish Tracts, but that contributions to the Danish Mission will be thankfully received. Send your contributions to John Rowland, Lanark, Carroll Co., Ill.

Save Your Meat--To Cure Hams.

In No. 50 of last volume we published a recipe to cure hams, but made a mistake that might prove injurious. We now re-publish it correctly as follows:

When your meat is cut in pieces, rub it well with a mixture of sugar and saltpeter, in the proportion of one-fourth pound of saltpeter to one pound of sugar. Then let the meat lie until it is perfectly cool, but be careful not to let it freeze.—When cool rub well with hot salt, each piece eight minutes. Then let the meat lie in a cool place for eight days, and it will be ready to hang and smoke. We have tried it with excellent satisfaction.

H. D. DAVY.

Cassstown, O.

BROTHER Hope and his companion expected to leave their home at Lanark, Ill., on their Danish Mission, on Monday the 3rd inst. We are sorry that they could not arrange to stop with us on their way. They intend to spend a week with the brethren in Montgomery county, Pa.—They expect to leave New York City on the 15th inst., in the ship Neckar, for Bremen. May they have a successful voyage and good success.

You now have the first number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and we hope you are pleased with it. Will you show it to others and urge them to subscribe? We shall feel thankful for all such favors.

Missionary Work.

EDITORS OF PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:—

My heart has been made glad, and my soul filled with thanksgiving to the Lord, for the operations of his Holy Spirit on the hearts of our dear brethren in Illinois, in the missionary cause. I consider the commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" as plain a command as is contained in the New Testament. There is no evasion of it: it is a part of that word which shall stand when heaven and earth shall pass away.

Brothers and sisters in the Lord, let not this good work be a failure for want of a few dimes or dollars which our Master has entrusted in our hands. I am sorry to know that the Brethren have failed in some important things through want of money to carry them out; notwithstanding the church has her thousands and millions. It is supposed by some, that, according to our numbers, there is as much wealth in the church of the Brethren as there is in any protestant church in the United States; and yet we have done nothing in the missionary cause, while the M. E. church, it is claimed, gives over a million dollars a year for the cause. Some among us claim that there is no salvation outside of the church of the Brethren, and yet they are unwilling to give even one dime toward having the gospel preached to all nations.

Paul says, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing, by the word of God," and, "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Who is to send those who are to preach? I claim that it is the duty of the church. The Lord calls his ministers through the church; then the church sends—or should send—his ministers into all the world to preach the gospel. This cannot be done without money. Thank the Lord, the church has plenty of it; and as it has, God will hold the church responsible for it. I expect soon to send, at least, $30.00 from the Saionmy arm of the church, contributed by our dear brethren and sisters and children especially for the Danish mission. If others will do so much, it will make about $600.00 dollars from the state of Indiana; and I think we could soon have enough to do some good. Dear brethren and sisters do not let the cause suffer for the want of money, when you have your thousands.

SAMUEL MURRAY

Lancaster, Ind.

To C. H. Balsbaugh.

"Cast your bread upon the waters, and it will return to you after many days."

Dear brother in Christ, I have often been impressed with the duty of writing a few words to you, in order to acknowledge, to some extent, the spiritual enjoyment, comfort, and consolation which I have often derived from the perusal of your contributions to the Christian Family Companion. I feel confident that it was through your writings, "by the grace of God," and the instrumentality of the Christian Family Companion that I was converted to the faith of the brethren.

Being brought up under Methodist discipline, I, very naturally, would not exert myself much to attend the Brethren's meetings; but having access to the Christian Family Companion, and always being very fond of reading, I would occasionally improve my leisure moments by perusing it. I was not really much interested in the paper, until, from cause, I began to take especial notice of your articles, and soon became interested, and took great delight in reading them. By the way, to be honest about this matter, I must confess that it was not for love of the cause or doctrine that you advocated, nor for the desire to investigate or be instructed; but at first your learned and fluent style pleased my pride and ambition. (Now do not infer from this that I make any pretensions to scholarship; for on the contrary, I am very ignorant, not possessing even a common school education. But I always took great delight in reading after learned authors, and in associating with those far superior to myself in intellect and education.) And now brother B., if you were ever accused of or reproved for using language "too highflown" as some are pleased to express it, I, for one, can testify that it did good in one case; for the use of such language certainly attracted my attention at first, and then I soon became interested in your subjects and argumentative powers, and so on till I became anxious to read the paper thoroughly. Thus I became acquainted with the faith and practice of the Brethren; and, finally, was made willing to take up the cross, and in my weak way, follow in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus.

As I said at first, I had often thought of writing to you; but when I considered my inability to write anything that would be interesting or encouraging to you, (which I would much love to do, knowing, as I do, that you have been an invalid for years,) I for this reason postponed writing, from time to time. But lately I noticed something in one of your articles to the effect that you did not intend to write much more. It made me feel very sad to think that we must lose one of our best contributors to the Christian Family Companion. Brother B., I would beseech you not to give up as long as you can wield the pen with such fluency and power. Know you not that you may receive many stars in your crown, "When you have the crown to wear," in that eternal world of joy and bliss? And if it costs you pain and suffering to use your pen in the good cause in this present world, you will surely receive a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" in the world to come.

"Fight on, fight on, your crown will soon be given."

Ever your unworthy sister in Christ,
Carrie Holsinger.

COST OF PRINTING IN DENMARK.

A recent letter from Denmark enables us to lay before the brotherhood the cost of publishing tracts in the Danish language. The following estimate is based upon the terms received in said letter.

"Perfect Plan of Salvation," 5,000 or more copies, $10.00 per thousand.
"Trine Immersion," 5,000 or more copies $13.00 per thousand. It will thus be seen that had our "One cent" proposition been fully carried out, a sufficient amount would have been raised to publish and distribute 100,000 copies. Thankful are we, however, for the prompt response of so many brethren and sisters. Enough has been contributed to publish a large number of tracts; and we feel like urging the brethren and sisters to never despise little givings, for in this way a great work may be done. Atom to atom, particle to particle make the mighty globe; knowledge to knowledge makes us wise unto salvation; therefore, be encouraged, beloved brethren, and go on to victory in Christ Jesus our Lord,

MISSIONARY WORK.

Eight of our ministering brethren are now in different parts of the Union, laboring for the conversion of sinners. Two of these, brethren Eby and Hellery, have been laboring in central Illinois, for several weeks, with success. "Go and teach all nations" is no less a command now than it was in the apostles' time. Scripture does not become truthless or ineffective by age: its power and demands are the same in every age. And we are very glad that it is so; for this is one proof of its divine origin, and no man is able to pick portions for himself, and say it is for me only, or for you only. Thank God, go means just as much now as it did eighteen hundred and forty years ago; and teach means no less than it did when it fell from the Savior's lips.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

Sabbatism.—This work is now ready for delivery in any quantity desired. It treats upon the imperfection of the Law, and the perfection of the gospel. It discusses the subject of "Sabbatarianism," and clearly shows that "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy" is not found anywhere in the "New Covenant." It also shows that "the first day of the week" is the preferred day for Christian's to assemble to worship God.

One copy 10 cents; 3 copies 25 cents; 7 copies, 50 cents; 15 copies $1.00.

Christianity Utterly Incompatible with War.—By J. W. Stein. This work advocates the doctrine of Non-resistance—the peace principle which the Brethren so earnestly contend for. Here, brethren, is an opportunity to send abroad those principles. Here is a chance to put the peace principles of the gospel into every family in America. One copy, 35 cents; 25 copies, $6.00.

The One Faith Vindicated.—This work has been thoroughly revised and greatly enlarged. In this the writer has carefully labored to present the wise and pure doctrine of Jesus in a simple and soul-stirring manner. One copy, 20 cents; 2 copies, 35 cents; 5 copies, 75 cents; 7 copies $1.00; 15 copies $2.00.

Send for circular and tract entitled, Truth Awakener, which treats on baptism. All who order one or more dollars worth of the writer's works, will receive a bunch of tracts for free distribution. "Grace and Truth," Lesson 2, will treat on Feet-washing. I should be pleased to have the address of every brother and sister in America.

A CONFESSION.

Like David, I am the man, I have no desire to injure the feelings of any of the faithful in Christ, either by pen or word. I have been informed by kind and loving brethren, who, I believe, have the "love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost," that my pen seemed to have lost that loving and gentle spirit while writing the article found on pages 631 and 632 of the Companion and Visitor of 1875. Surely, I had no desire to injure the feelings of any one; nor did I have any unkind feelings toward our beloved brother Samuel Kinsey. But the face of the article would indicate ardent feelings to those who are not personally acquainted with me.

Two things in that article I regret: I wrote that I could not send any more copy for the Vindicator nor receive the paper into my house. Those were unguarded and rash expressions, and deserve the severest censure. I am judging M. M. Eshelman now, and I want him judged justly; and I think, by the grace of our kind Father, I can do it successfully. He is inexcusable for letting such thoughts go before the public; therefore he comes before you, and his God, confessing his wrongs, and beseechingly asks you, and, especially, brother Kinsey's forgiveness. As to the argument in defense of the supper on the table during feet-washing, I have no regrets. I think I wrote the truth; but even in writing the truth the dose may sometimes be made too strong.

Dear brethren, let us endeavor to be kind and courteous, and not send forth anything that will tend to impede the advancement of our Redeemer's cause. I have felt that confession is good for the soul, and that I am the one to bring myself into judgment, hence tried to write by the influence of the Holy Spirit, by which I desire to be governed.

Yours in the love of the truth.
M. M. ESHELMAN.

Brother Quinter:

I thought I would pen a few lines, as church news, for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. We are soon to enter on another year, (1876,) to meet with its blessings or the troubles and trials that are in store for us through the coming year; and as the Companion and Visitor has often cheered, strengthened, and encouraged us, as it makes its weekly visits to us, so we hope and pray the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN will do on its mission of love through the coming year. When I look back over the year just passed, many solemn thoughts are brought to my mind; many changes has been made with us, on Bachelor's Run, as well as elsewhere. Death has been making his inroads here. Sixteen of our number have died and gone to their long home. Fourteen of these were members of the church; two of them being our oldest visiting brethren, John Flora and Solomon Young, with whom we of ten have taken sweet counsel. It fills our hearts with sorrow to think that we are deprived of their company and their counsel. How often have they rode through heat and cold to labor any serve the church in their office! But, on the other hand, we rejoice to think and to know that so many have died in the faith, and consequently will hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, faithful, servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The church here is in a prospering condition at this time. About twenty have been added to the church by baptism this summer, and two reclaimed. One middle aged man who was confined to his bed several weeks, became alarmed about his eternal state and requested to be baptized; which was done in gospel order to the comfort and satisfaction of his soul, and in a few weeks he fell asleep in Jesus. Also a youth being sick, not able to sit up, desired to be baptized. He was also hauled to the water, and was baptized in gospel order. The Lord has spared his life and he is about well again, going on his way rejoicing. It seems to me that there are still some more that desire to come and are counting up the cost. May God help them so that they speedily will come and accept the offered terms of salvation before it will be eternally to late, is my prayer.

CHRISTIAN LESH.

Our Propriation Renewed.

As the Danish fund is now completed, we renew our call to our dear brethren and sisters for funds to publish and mail 13,000 copies of "Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles" to the thirteen thousand Baptist ministers of America. These thirteen thousand copies will not be printed until the fund ($1300.00) is completed, when they will be stamped and all mailed from Bro. J. H. Moore's office under the supervision of brethren appointed to superintend their distribution. Funds can be sent to, the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, Vindicator, Pilgrim, or Bro. J. H. Moore, all of whom will receive and acknowledge the same. Brethren my heart's desire and prayer for my people is that they may come to the knowledge of the truth. Help, with little or much, as God may incline you. I know wherefore I affirm when I say that the question of immersion to each name of the Trinity, notwithstanding its adherents (including the Greek and Oriental churches,) outnumber single backward immersion sects fifteen to one, is a question never considered by the great mass of the Baptist ministry of America.

J. W. STEIN.

(Pilgrim and Vindicator please copy.)

My Dear Brother:

I will give you a few lines as news. We lately had a visit from brethren Rush and Clapper, of Hopewell congregation, who preached six sermons in our neighborhood. There was one added by baptism. Attendance was very good. The order was not as good as we would have wish to see it, principally on account of there not being room to accommodate all. Our great desire is that some of our brethren will visit us again before long. One soul is worth every effort we can make to gain it; and what, then must be the value of the very many who are yet out of the ark of safety.

Yours in love,
JOHN BENNETT.

In Answer to Bro. E. K. Buechly.

In No. 49, page 779 Companion for 1875, Bro. Buechly, referring to my essay headed, "The Sure Foundation," says, "Not intending to criticize or comment upon its merits or demerits, yet I am safe to say that I am but expressing the feelings of numerous brethren and sisters, to ask our wor- by brother D. P. Saylor, to give us an exposition on the 15th verse of the chapter by him designated. We think the brother's essay is incomplete until such an exposition be made. We shall look for it."

Reply. Who the We are, I am not informed, but am much inclined to think the "We" are only I, as I am in receipt of several letters from brethren who are fully competent to judge, who have very highly commended that essay.

I will, however, tell brother Buechly and "We" the reason I did not drag the verse referred to into the essay; which was simply because it was not pertinent to the subject. I was writing salvation by the gospel method—by the common salvation as revealed into gospel. Repentance Faith and Baptism, the beginning, with all the Christian graces added, and all built upon Jesus Christ the sure foundation; holding forth these as the gold, silver and precious stone materials; and so did not urge upon the reader salvation by fire. As I expect myself to be saved by the common salvation, I neither preach nor write salvation by fire to others; and hence did not, and will not give an exposition of the verse referred to, though "We" may require it.

Brethren Moomaw and Leedy have recently given expositions of the verse; perhaps they may be acceptable to brother Buechly. I for my part will with David sing, "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me." Ps. 131: 1. My calling being to tell people how to keep out of the fire, I leave it to wise men to tell them how to get out of it once they are in. So brother Buechly and "We" will please excuse brother Saylor for not giving an exposition of the verse named.

D. P. SAYLER.

GREAT CROSSING, KY. }
DEC. 10th, 1875. }

Dear Brother Quinter:

A few days ago brethren Samuel Murry and William Cassell left us to return to Ohio, after holding several days' meetings. The membership here are few and far between. There are seven of us, and we live in three counties; but we have a flattering prospect of more. We have a promise of three that will be baptized the first opportunity. There are several more inquiring and searching into the matter. We would like to offer our thanks to the brethren of Ohio for the kindness they have shown us in sending brethren to preach for us. It is truly a season of rejoicing. We look forward with anxious anticipation until the brethren came; and while they are here, we enjoy the time greatly. When they are not preaching, we gain considerable instruction by conversing with them. They are so kind and patient with us, that we feel no delicacy in asking any questions in regard to the rules and customs of the church, which is something that we were not very well acquainted with. You that have preaching every Sunday, if you enjoy your meetings as much as we do ours, which we only have every six weeks, must be greatly blessed. The Holy Spirit must be moving the matter along, for there are calls for the Brethren to preach around in different places, and we are frequently called on for papers and tracts, by different persons. I feel very much encouraged in the hope that the day is not far distant a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read THE SUN will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The WEEKLY SUN, which has attained a circulation of eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in its condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the WEEKLY SUN the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The WEEKLY SUN, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to clubs, agents, postmasters or anyone.

The DAILY SUN, a large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year. SUNDAY edition extra, $1.10 per year. We have no traveling agents.

LET IT ALONE.

Don't think you can tamper and trifle with sin,
And yet escape danger and shame;
When once on the pathway of wrong you begin
'T is just like the moth in the flame.

The cup that entices, the pleasure that lures,
Are baits by an evil one thrown;
Indulgence your ruin forever insures:
You're safe if you let them alone.

The winds that in autumn so savagely roar,
Were once the soft breezes of June;
The waves that in melody break on the shore,
At sea sing a different tune.

So fair and deceitful are joys that entice;
So brightly their colors they blend,
We tread all unconscious the pathway of vice
Nor think how the journey will end.

One moment's delaying or trifling with sin,
May lead into perils unknown;
'T is hard to escape from the whirlpool you're in;

Avoid it, by letting alone.

The Gospel in a Shoe.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother Washington Shakspeare, of Manadaville, Dauphin Co., Penn'a.

Christ did not go out of the way to find occasion, or illustration. The ordinary was to Him the embodiment and vehicle of the extraordinary. Nature was His product, and was pre-arranged for His incarnation and ministry. It is a series of school-books designed to train for the celestial sphere. In it we have alphabet, primer, and all the numbers for the higher classes of students, and even mysteries "which the angels desire to look into." Well for us if we rightly learn the a, b, c, although we should ever aim at the highest attainments within the reach of the talent committed to us. The sower, the wayside, the stony and thorny ground, and the well-tilled acre, are made the repositories of the grandest wisdom the Gospel contains. So the lost coin, the lost sheep, the baker's leaven, the well of Jacob, the fish and fisherman of Gennesareth, the lily, the hair of our heads, and every article of needful apparel, preach the Gospel of the Kingdom. We are to "put on Christ." He is a full suit for body and soul, and must be worn within and without, as the only fit in which our immortality will be comfortable.

He is the only tailor that never makes a misfit. He has an exact measure for every soul. No one was ever "straitened in Christ." He is a garment of perfect adaptation, and yet so capable of endless variations, that the saints eternal progress will never outgrow it. It fits the babe a day old, and "the just made perfect" who have grown into gigantic stature in heavenly wisdom.

With this Divine Clothier, your occupation stands in close relation. The artificial covering is composed of various parts, each having its special use, and yet the whole a unit. You are a shoemaker, and a noble calling it is, and replete with spiritual instruction, as is every trade that meets natural wants, and is conducted on honorable principles. Your vocation is a natural preacher of humility. It turns your attention downward. Your whole concern is to look after people's feet. In its moral teaching it has affinity with that institution of grace which bows us in mutual service to the lowest members of the body. John 13:5-17. By Jesus Christ "all things consist," and He has planned and placed all things to serve the interests of His Kingdom. All the wood and pitch that made the ark, and every drop of water in that mighty deluge by which it was floated over a sin-wrecked, God-smitten world, served a Divine purpose, and became an illustrator of the Divine attributes. The seed out of which grew the tree of the Cross, was in the Divine Mind before it was in the earth. Gen. 2:5. God has no after-thoughts, notwithstanding the form of language in which he has expressed His feelings to meet our comprehension. He wants to save us, and puts everything to preaching from the hyssop to the cedar, from the meanest insect to the loftiest angel, from the dimmest glow-worm to the dazzling luminary of the heavens, from the king on the throne to the beggar on the highway. The honorable trades are not left out of the account. A shoemaker can use knife and hammer for God, and be the help-meet of Christ in the revelation of truth, equally with the potter and wine-dresser. Every time you put your knife to the leather, you cut into the central truth of the Gospel: you not only cut out a shoe, but you make a moral incision deep enough to cut out a whole body of divinity—not according to Calvin or Luther, or any other creed-maker, but according to the predestination of Him who worketh according to the good pleasure of His will. Eph. 1:5 You can make no shoe without material, and you can have no material without first destroying animal life; and, behold, the great doctrine of vicarious sacrifice shadowed forth in the humblest employment! The leather under your hand has blood on it—not only "the blood of bulls and goats," but the "precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot." All the treatises on Natural Theology I have ever seen are at fault in their limitation to the lowest and least instructive form of argument. They think if they can make out the existence of God by the demonstration of design in Nature, they have gained the grandest point that the argument admits. Whereas they totally miss all that is supremely grand. The last end of God in all material things, is their moral uses; and it is this alone that has given us a Gospel. There is not a single truth in the Bible that is not clothed in a terrestrial vesture. Heavenly realities presented in images not found on the earth, would be all abra-cadabra to our comprehension. I put the challenge boldly to the world to find in the oracles of God a single idea in which the Divine is not wedded to the material, just as the realms of Spirit and matter blend in the Person of Jesus Christ. O how little note we take of the all-sweeping significance of that Name of names—EMMANUEL. So far as His Prophetic office goes, He is in every rain-drop, zephyr, sun-beam, star-ray, leaf, flower, seed, and atom of dust. And perhaps if we were wise enough we would discover that His Priestly office is co-extensive. It requires no great depth of penetration to see Him both as Prophet and Priest in a shoe-latchet. That He is King over all is universally admitted. But we have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, and, consequently, crowd Him out of all His offices in the things which we daily "handle and look upon." You can no more cut a shoe string without blood, than Christ can save the world without emptying His heart of its warm, holy, precious contents. What Intelligence creates is created for intelligence. Here is Christ the Prophet. Every intrenchment of one order of nature on another, one part giving itself for the support of another, preaches substitution. Here is Christ the Priest. Who will venture to assert that a gnat can exist independent of the Creator any more than Gabriel? Here is Christ the King. Have we not all abundant reason to offer up the prayer of Bartimeus, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened," so that day may utter speech unto day, and night unto night show knowledge. Ps. 19: 2. Somehow the idea that nature and sin are synonyms has taken possession of many minds in the Brotherhood; whereas nature is the essential medium of reciprocity between God and man, and between man and his fellows. What is bread to most persons but so much flour and yeast and milk? And what is digestion and assimilation but an obscure, indifferent physiological process? And yet Christ announces Himself as the True Bread, and declares that unless we "eat His flesh and drink His blood we have no life in us," thus putting us to the task at least three times a day to extract the highest wisdom out of our meals. How sacred and elevating everything becomes to a genuinely Christian intelligence. Then the shoe shines "like unto fine brass, as if it burned in a furnace," because it comes from the wardrobe of the Faultless One, and reflects the glitter of the seven Golden Candlesticks. Rev. 1: 12, 15. To be shod with Gospel shoes is to "walk even as He walked." Eph. 6: 15. You can make Manadaville the suburb of the New Jerusalem, and its streets sanctified approaches to the golden pavement of the God-built City, by the attraction of your Heaven-manufactured shoes. Let your feet be beautiful, bringing good tidings to the disconsolate, publishing peace to the penitent, preaching salvation to the lost, a perpetual witness for God. Is. 52: 7. Having been shod out of the blood of Jesus, let every stroke of your hammer, and every movement of your knife, be for the glory of God.

Holding Office.

BY J. M. ZUCK.

Here are a dozen reasons why Brethren should be permitted and even encouraged to accept the office of School Director, as that office exists in Pennsylvania.

1. It does not, or, at least, need not and should not lead to active participation in politics. It is acknowledged on all hands that politics should be kept out of school affairs.

2. It is not an office of pecuniary profit, and hence is not sought by those who are after "the loaves and fishes." Directors need not associate with office holders of that class.

3. Being an office of trust, and a thankless one at that, it must seek its incumbents; and the best interests of the schools and of the community at large demand that it should find men who are honest, conscientious and faithful in the discharge of duty, whether public or private—just such men as Brethren usually are, in the above particulars. But suppose that when the office finds such men they refuse to accept it—what then?

4. The proper education of youth is acknowledged to be a good and necessary work, and Brethren should take part in every such work, provided it does not interfere with some higher and better work.

5. Serving as a School Director does not necessarily interfere with any higher or better work, except, perhaps, in the judgment of some self-appointed critics, whose opinions are sometimes based upon personal fancies rather than upon undisputed facts.

6. If more education is needed in the brotherhood one step in the right direction would be for Brethren to interest themselves in schools, and school affairs, and thus become more familiar with educational means, processes and ends.

7. Schools and teachers have much to do in molding the sentiments of the young, and of society at large, and if Brethren become Directors, they will have a voice in the selection of teachers and in the management of the schools, and in this way they may exert a greater or less degree of influence upon the moral and intellectual tone of the community.

8. This influence must lead to a greater respect for the doctrines and practices of the church. That this "greater respect" is sadly needed in many communities none who base their conclusions upon facts will deny.

9. The common school is conceded to be a benevolent institution, and one whose utility and necessity but few Brethren will question; and in proportion as we absolve ourselves from all connection with such institutions—except so far as purely personal and selfish ends lead us to avail ourselves of their benefits—in that proportion we curtail our influence for good and belittle ourselves in the eyes of men and of angels. If a brother dare not serve as a Director, perhaps, to be consistent, all

Brethren should withdraw their children from the public schools, and no brother should be allowed to serve in the capacity of teacher in said schools. If the tree of knowledge yields such wholesome fruit that we can safely send our little ones to pluck it off and pick it up, how can those who have the tree in charge, who see that it is tilled and pruned and well cared for—how can they be so very bad or their work unworthy of our highest praise and commendation?

10. The duties and prerogatives of Directors can be shown to be as much in harmony with the principles and doctrines of Christianity as are the duties and prerogatives of teachers. Then as we do not object to Brethren acting as teachers, why should we object to their serving as Directors?

11. It will hardly do to affirm that no brother should exercise the functions of a civil officer, for every minister in the second degree is a civil officer if he exercises all his prerogatives, and may subject himself to fines and penalties as severe as any that pertain to the office of School Director. "Blessed is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth" (not).

12. Annual Meeting has set its seal of sanction upon the office of Postmaster, and it can very easily be demonstrated that this office has more objectionable features connected with it than has that of School Director. The Postmaster is an officer, not of a town or township, but of the general government; he is under bond and oath, (neither of which is true in the case of School Director,) and is by no means exempt from temptation and the corrupting influences that are so often brought to bear upon such officials by those in authority and who may wish to maintain that authority, by fair means if they can, by foul if they must.

The above list of "reasons" could easily be extended to twice its length, but such extension is not deemed necessary at present.

Secret Societies.

BY SILAS THOMAS.

"Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather rebuke them." Eph. 5: 11.

I was once at a meeting in the basement of a hall in the third story of which was a lodge room of the Odd Fellows. At intervals, during the evenings, a loud and startling noise proceeded from said room, which caused the building to quiver to the foundation. It sounded as if heavy wheels or rollers were propelled over the floor, intermingled with the stamping of hundreds of feet. Upon inquiry, it was said they were initiating members.

The conviction at once forced itself upon the mind that these noises were not made by the children of God, "walking in the light," but were a part of "the unfruitful works of darkness" in which the enemy of souls delights. Another evidence of the unholy nature of the conclaves of these secret orders is that they are held at night, in apartments high up in the buildings, where their performances cannot be seen, nor their words understood by those below. "They will not come to the light because their deeds are evil."

It may do for an apostatized Christianity, that his abandoned the non-resistant, anti blood-shedding and anti-oath-swearing principles taught by the Son of God, to patronize and enter into these secret organizations, but how can his true followers do it?

When the writer was a young man, one of the secret orders was under the ban of an indignant, demonstrative, public opinion for having inflicted the bloody penalty for the violation of one of its obligations upon a man by the name of Morgan. Then, as probably there are now, many who professed to be preachers of the gospel were members of those unchristian organizations. Morgan's "revelations," and other corroborative evidence brought to light that they had taken upon themselves vows, the violation of which was punishable with a remorseless double death penalty; at the same time that they professed to promulgate the principles taught by him who said, "Swear not at all; but let your communications be yea yea, nay nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

Is it possible that Brethren, professing, as they do, to follow Jesus in all his cross bearing precepts will take upon themselves the heathenish obligations, and swear the heaven imprecating oaths by which members are initiated into the secret orders! Would it not be a sad and fatal violation of their solemn baptismal vows in which they promise to "Renounce the sinful maxims and customs of the world, and to live true and faithful to the Lord, by his help, until death?"

Let the Brethren beware! The influence of secretism, once in the church, will be hard to eradicate. Through signs and grips the members of secret societies are known to each other alone, and a few such in an arm of the church might work in such a way as to cause even a committee, called from neighboring arms to investigate their case, to be so composed that they would report adversely to the discipline of the brotherhood against secret societies, and in favor of retaining members of those in our fraternity; and thus cause untold wrong and offense in the church. Brethren beware of the baneful influence of secretism!

Happiness.

BY A. E. KEAGY.

No man that has passed the middle point of life, can sit down to feast upon the pleasures of youth without finding the banquet embittered by the cup of Sorrow. Many days of harmless frolic, and many nights of honest festivity will recur. He may revise the memory of many lucky accidents, or pleasing extravagances, or, if he has engaged in scenes of action, and been acquainted with affairs of difficulty and vicissitudes of fortune, he may enjoy the noble pleasure of looking back upon distress firmly supported upon danger resolutely encountered, upon oppression artfully defeated. Eneas very properly confronts his companions, when, after a storm, they have landed on an unknown and desolate country, with the hope that their miseries will at some distant period, be recounted with delight. There are, perhaps, few higher gratifications than that of reflection on evils surmounted, when they were not incurred by our own fault, and neither reproach us with cowardice or guilt. But this kind of felicity is always abated by the reflection, that they with whom we should be most pleased to share it, are in the grave. A few years makes such havoc among the human race, that we soon see ourselves deprived of those with whom we entered the world. Such is the imperfection of all human happiness; and every period of life is obliged to borrow its enjoyments from the time to come. In youth we have nothing past to entertain us; and in age we derive nothing from the retrospect but fruitless sorrow. The loss of our friends and companions impresses hourly upon us the necessity of our own departure. We find that all our schemes are quickly at an end, and we must lie down in the grave with the forgotten multitudes of former ages, and yield our places to others, who like us shall be driven awhile by hope or fear about the surface of the earth, and then like us be lost in the shades of death. It is not, therefore, from this world that any ray of comfort can proceed to cheer the gloom of the last hour. But futurity has still its prospects; there is yet happiness in reserve sufficient to support us in every affliction. Hope is the chief blessing of man; and that hope only is rational which we are certain cannot deceive.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Christian Sympathy.

I will notice first, the natural sympathy of mankind for their fellow-beings; and, to be brief, I will use for illustration, at once, the most forcible case that has been presented to my mind, namely, the blind. Who can be so callous to all feeling as not to sympathize with those that walk in total darkness? Who would not lend a helping hand to guide the blind one in safety past a pitfall in his way? Were we to see a blind person walking toward some terrible, deep chasm of great terror to all, its depth unknown to man, none ever being rescued from it, what would we do? Who would not fly to the rescue of one in such great danger?

I will try to show what is Christian sympathy, and, for the most forcible illustration. I will use the case of the spiritually blind. Do we sympathize with such as we should? I ask, then, how can we see them walking in darkness, and in imminent danger every hour, and not sympathize deeply for them? I fear we, too often, think more lightly of everlasting destruction, than of temporal death. Surely, we should feel for the ills of the soul more than those of the body; yet we see those professing Godliness, often in more trouble about their friends on account of bodily ailment than because of their being strangers to God. Terrible infatuation! I sometimes think that the praying people of our world, will be held responsible for the sins of our day. In many cases, in this our day, the human or natural sympathy of mankind for their fellow-beings is truly commendable, and should be honored. This all true Christians must have, and have also a still greater sympathy for the souls of their fellow-beings; as the soul is of so much greater importance than the body. Natural blindness is a dread affliction, yet spiritual blindness is far more dreadful.

NEW YEAR.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Now another year is finished;
Now another round is made;
In the cycles of the ages,
Time and tide cannot be staid.
Many weary hearts are waiting
For the moving of the waves:
Many, too, are waiting longer,
Till they drop into the grave.

High in hopes, and expectations
Of a long, illustrious life,
Many youthful hearts are beating
Onward in their daily strife;
In the duties of the present,
In the pleasures of the day,
Caring nought for the hereafter,
Nor about the better way;
Till, a length, at morn or even,
In the gush of youthful prime,
Conces the summers of departure,
Unexpected in its time.

In the year that now is finished,
Many thousands passed away;
And many thousands are returning
Back again to another clay.
Yet among the lofty number
That have gone to their reward,
Very few had turned sincerely
To the precepts of the Lord.

In the year that has departed,
God has called aloud, "repent,"
And by special visitations,
Fire and floods to some were sent.
In the West, Virginia city
Awfully has felt the rod:
In the South, the Mexic billow
Lensed before the dreadful God.
By the awful conflagration
Many have been homeless made;
By the Texan inundation
Towns and cities waste were laid.
Far beyond the great Atlantic,
Up along the lordly Rhine,
Swelled the streams by rains superfluous,
And their bounds did not confine.
Thus by fires and floods tremendous,
By disasters on the sea,
By calamities and sufferings,
God has spoken, "Turn to me."

Every year is making changes,
Every day its burden bears,
Every hour is full of troubles,
Every breast is full of cares.
Temperance Crusades are concluded,
Leaving little good result;
And the Granges, too, have fallen
With their disciplines occult.
Now the Moody-Saukey pacio
In the world is rousing high;
And these mortals are applauded
Like two angels from the sky.
Moody preaches faith, repentance—
Saukey sings anaesthetizing airs;
Thousands come to thousands joining
To be blessed by Moody's prayers;
And the road they go is easy,
Broad and smooth, it leads around
The commandments of the Savior,
Rather on a dangerous ground,
Then beware of Moody-worship;
Do not let us be deceived,

Baal priests and Baal service
Evermore the Lord have grieved.

In the year that now commences,
If we rightly understand,
We expect to send apostles
To the Scandinavia land.
There to raise the gospel standard
On the ruins of the age,
To proclaim the plain commandments
Written on the sacred page.
There to preach to hardened sinners
All the precepts of the Lord,
Them to urge unto repentance,
To obey the Savior's Word.

Over the Pulpit.

BY D. P. SAYLER.

"Over the pulpit of a Michigan church, according to the Odd Fellow, published in that state, is this inscription: 'No man shall pray in this church who does not kneel when he prays; no man shall preach in this church who uses manuscript; no man shall preach in this church who belongs to any secret society.'"

This inscription should be over every professed Christian pulpit throughout the Christian world; not put up to be looked at, but its precepts rigidly enforced. And the German Baptist Brethren will do well to add one more precept. No brother will be allowed to preach in any of the Brethren's churches who does not strictly conform to the order, and style of dress common to the general brotherhood. I am glad, and rejoice to hear that some churches in Pennsylvania have passed resolutions to give no brother liberty to preach in their churches who does not conform to the order of the brethren in plainness of dress. Brethren, this is a step in the right direction, go on, enforce your resolution faithfully, by the time the spring District Meetings are over you will have company; other branches of the church will follow.

The preachers are the creatures of the church; she first calls him, second, advances him, and thirdly ordains him, and she has a right, and it is her Christian duty to demand of him holiness of life, and plainness of dress, as has always been common with our preachers professing godliness. And should a branch of the church who has called a brother to the ministry fail in these demands of him whom she has created a preacher, it is the duty of other branches who labor to keep the fashions of the world, and of a corrupted Christianity out of their folds, to forbid such to preach in their churches.

All close observers know that like begots like; and that if any are brought into the church through the instrumentality of a fashionable dress by the preacher, the church will always have trouble with such members; while sin, and pride will be strengthened and encouraged. "The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits." 2 Tim. 2: 6. So the preacher with a fashionable coat on his back, and a dandy's hat on his head, with imposing shirt bosom and cuffs, will never preach the idea of non-conformity into his hearers; nor into his converts. Brethren, I bid you God-speed in your godly resolution to suffer such not to preach in your churches.

Brethren, don't we know that the pride in the Methodist church came in through her preachers. Some of us remember the time when her preachers were common, plain men, and so were her members. More than once did I see a Methodist preacher sit by the side of my grandfather at a funeral service, the only apparent difference was, my grandfather let his beard grow long, while the Methodist scraped his clean off. But no sooner did she manufacture preachers through the college mills, than lazy, fast young men, fit for nothing else, took upon them the ministry for their profession; and where is the Methodist church to-day. Brethren take heed, learn lessons from the wreck of others.

"And yet there is Room."

BY A PILGRIM BROTHER.

The Lord Jesus Christ, our adorable Redeemer, in the days of his humiliation, whilst sojourning amongst the children of men, was constantly and continually engaged in doing good unto the fallen sons and daughters of Adam. In addressing the people, he would generally speak to them by way of parables and similitudes, hence the symbolic language made use of by him, in Luke, 14: 16-22, "A certain man made a great supper and bade many * * * "and yet there is room."

Sinner, have you ever considered and pondered upon the important truths couched within the short passage above quoted? Has the thought ever occurred to your mind in reading it, that you are one of these bidden guests to the great supper? And, dear sinner, are you aware of the fact, that you are one of those very identical person that have thus far stubbornly and persistently refused to come, although the Lord's servant gave you a special bidding? He entreated you; he urged you; he reasoned the matter with you in the most inciting, and pleasing manner possible. With tears rolling down his cheeks, he bade you. He beckoned you to come. Oh, come, "for all things are now ready."

Are you aware, dear sinner, that by your obstinacy and indifference you have greatly incurred the displeasure of the great Master of the feast? He is angry with you: "God is angry with the wicked every day." Ps. 7: 11. He now tells his servant, "Go into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." As much as to say, "Those guests whom I had invited, make light of my invitation; they slight my well-meant offers of kindness. Go, now, go quickly, go without any delay; bring in the poor, &c.; make haste and bring them in so that my house may be filled with guests, 'for all things are now ready.'" The servant said, "Lord it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room."

Dear sinner, how thankful ought you to be to your heavenly Father, that there, yet is room for you. The door of mercy is not yet closed against you. Come, then, whilst time and opportunity are still afforded you, resolve with the prodigal son, to return to the Father's house. Come—come quickly. "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain. Escape to the mountains, lest thou be consumed." Gen. 19: 17.

Sinner your case is desperate; yea, very urgent. You have no time to waste; your eternal welfare is at stake; "stay not in all the plain." Make haste, then, delay not, the avenger of blood is in close pursuit of you. "Run with patience the race that is set before you." Yea; "So run that ye may obtain." Run to Christ, to him that bids you—"Come unto me." He stands with outstretched arms ready and willing to receive you. Yet bear this in mind, you must come; all though all things are ready, yet it will do you no good unless you come. Then, sinner, come now—come today. "To-day, if ye hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Come in God's own appointed way and time. It is possible you may come too late. Think of the foolish virgins. They came, but alas, alas! too late! the door was closed—the day of grace was passed with them. Felix waited for a convenient season Agrippa was almost (but not quite) persuaded to be a Christian. I ask you, did Felix' convenient season ever come? Did Agrippa ever become a Christian? Echo answers, "Never; nay, never; they both lived, and died sinners." Then, dear sinner, a last appeal to you: I pray you to consider and reflect upon your ways. Remember how repeatedly you were entreated, invited, and so earnestly solicited, by the Lord's servants, the ambassadors of Christ, to forsake your sins, and to come to Christ and be saved upon the easy terms of the gospel? Remember how often, in hearing the gospel, so powerfully preached unto you, were the tender cords of your sinful heart, touched! How often have the servants of the Lord told you of the danger of procrastination. Yea, how often were the briny tears rolling down your cheeks, and your hearts melted, almost to bursting? How often, think you, that your father and mother, and other Christian friends, were engaged upon their knees in their closets, in fervent prayers, when you were, probably, revelling in sin and wickedness? I, as your friend, would ask you, in all sincerity, how long think you will God suffer you to scorn all his proffered mercies? How long will the scepter of mercy he held out unto you? May this not be the last time that you may even hear it said, "And yet there is room?"

But if you persistently refuse to come, you will finally have to hear that awful sentence: "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Matth. 25: 41. Think of these solemn truths, dear sinners, before it be too late. You have only the promise of to-day. You know not what to-morrow may bring forth. To-morrow may find you beyond the reach of mercy. Remember that the Almighty said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." An other step farther in sin may seal your doom eternally. Remember, that the man that went on in sin—the rich man—unrestrained, unconcerned, unconverted, died in his sins, but "in hell he lifted up his eyes." He thinks he was greatly astonished. He closed his eyes in death, and lifted them up in hell, being in torments. Horrible to think of! Yet, a hundred thousand times worse to realize it! May God grant us grace, that we may come whilst yet there is room.

The Hired Assassin.

BY REV. GEO. C. BECKWITH.

Everybody in Massachusetts sixty years old remembers well what was called "the Salem tragedy" of 1826. Joseph and Francis Knapp, distant relatives of a rich old gentleman in Salem, by the name of White, instigated Richard Crowninshield, by the offer of a thousand dollars of the plunder, to kill the old man, and seize his treasures. Crowninshield, entering the house of his victim at midnight, and creeping softly up stairs to the room where he was sleeping, struck him over the head with a bludgeon, and then turning down the clothes, stabbed him several times in the heart with a dagger. Everybody called him a hired assassin; and he would have been hung as an atrocious murderer, if he had not, in his prison, hung himself. The two Knapps were tried, convicted and hung for hiring Crowninshield to assassinate Mr. White.

Here is a clear case of hired assassination; and wherein does it differ from the profession of a soldier? Doubtless there is some difference; but in what does it consist, and to what does it amount? How far are the two professions or acts alike?

Let us look at the facts. Here is a nation of ten, twenty or fifty millions, that hire you as one of their soldiers to kill whosoever they may wish to have killed. The nation, indignant that the Chinese spurn their opium, or that the Afghans reject their favorite ruler, or that the Seminoles will not give up their lands, the inheritance of fifty generations, to some avaricious white man, order you to go and kill them, burn their dwellings, and butcher, without distinction or mercy, thousand of unoffending men, women and children.

We see now the facts in the two cases; and what is the difference? The deed is the same, except that in one case a single man was killed, and in the other thousands or scores of thousands. The motive, too, is essentially the same: with the employers, self aggrandizement; with the hired agents, pay. The difference, for there is some, will not redound much to the soldier's credit over the assassin; the soldier hires himself to millions of men called a nation; Crowninshield hired himself to only two men. The soldier hires himself out to kill whomsoever the nation may wish to have killed at any time: the assassin engages to do a specified act, to kill a single man at a given time, and that man named beforehand. The soldier is hired to kill by the month or year; the assassin is hired by the job. The soldier is a day laborer in the work of blood; the assassin is a jobber at the same trade. The assassin is better paid than the soldier; for the former was promised a thousand dollars for killing one man, while the latter might kill a hundred in a day without getting half a dollar for the whole. The soldier agrees to kill and any all whom the nation may bid; and if required to shoot his own father or mother, brother or sister, wife or child, he must shoot them, or be shot himself; whereas the assassin, had he refused to kill the old man according to agreement, would not himself have been liable to be hung.

Truly, the soldier makes a fearful bargain. If he refuses to kill any whom the nation may bid him kill, he must himself be put to death. He nevertheless enters into the bloody compact, not knowing but he may be ordered to shoot or stab his own parent, wife or children. Not quite so bad the assassin's bargain. Had Crowninshield engaged to kill at any time anybody whom the Knaps might wish to have killed, with the understanding that he should himself be put to death if he ever refused to kill anyone they should bid, there would be a pretty close analogy between his case and that of the professed soldier. But the assassin's position was not so terrible. The soldier must kill whomsoever his employers may bid him kill, or the terms of his contract make him liable to be shot or hung himself.

Now, tell us why a hired assassin, like Crowninshield, should be hung as a monster of wickedness, while the soldier, hired by twenty millions to do the same deed by wholesale, is admired and eulogized as a hero? To kill multitudes at the bidding of millions, is deemed patriotic, glorious, worthy of songs, and eulogies, and monuments; but to kill one man at the bidding of another one is denounced as base, infamous, diabolical, deserving of the gallows, of eternal infamy. Well did Bishop Porteus say:

"One murder makes a villain; Millions, a hero."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
A Call to Prayer.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

Prayer is the offering to God of adoration, confession, invocation, petition, pleading, dedication, thanksgiving, and blessing. This offering should be performed with humble confidence, and strong faith, through the mediation of Christ, who is our advocate and High Priest before our Father. All our offerings must be presented in his name. Our prayers must only be for things lawful and needful. That we may know what things are lawful, it is absolutely necessary that we become fully acquainted with the work of God; for his will, and not ours, must be done. We should pray for all needed or promised good, and for the prevention and removal of evil. We should pray for all men. Our prayers should be both mental and vocal; and should be offered both in private and public. We are needy and dependent creatures. Christ, our great exemplar, has taught us to pray, and thereby to honor God's name, and draw down upon ourselves his favors.

We should pray because the good Lord has commanded us; and as he has commanded us, we conclude that it is absolutely necessary to our salvation. We are not now speaking of infants or idiots. We are not attempting to settle the state of the heathen. We here speak of those who live in a land of Bible privileges; and say, of such no man or woman can expect to be saved who does not pray. That prayer alone will save no one, we know; but that one can be saved without it, we cannot find. We cannot eat, drink, or sleep, through the agency of another. We cannot get the alphabet learned for us by another. We must do those things for ourselves, or they never will be done. As with the body and mind, so with the soul. No one can live a spiritual life in Christ without prayer.

Christ says that "men ought always to pray." Paul writes, "I will that men pray everywhere." There is no act in the Christian religion to which there is given more encouragement than that of prayer. The prayerless are without excuse. They dare not say, "We are not commanded." It is folly for them to say, "We cannot." Christ, our Advocate and Intercessor, is always waiting to present our prayers to God. The Holy Spirit is ever ready to help our infirmities. The Spirit will give us words if we but seek his aid. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such to worship him." There is nothing wanting on God's part to make prayer easy, if we will but make the attempt.

I will admit that it would be almost an impossibility for some to make their first prayers before the public; but the Lord does not require it. But every one can pray in private; and no one who sincerely and earnestly pray in private, will long want for power or words to "pray everywhere," as the Bible instructs.

The ministry is very much to blame that the laity does not pray more. Let them but teach that it is the duty of all to pray everywhere, and then present the opportunity and call on them to labor, and thus provoke them to the good work of prayer, and the laity would put forth that power which would move earth and heaven.

There is wonderful power in prayer. "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." One of the disciples of Jesus once said, "Lord, teach us to pray," and after Jesus had instructed them how to pray, he added the parable of the friend at midnight as an encouragement to prayer. The account is recorded in connection with the Lord's prayer in Luke 11: 5—13; and when read in connection with the account of the importunate widow in Luke 18: 1—8, it certainly should remove all doubt on our part, and give us great encouragement to pray.

If brethren and sisters would observe the manner of the apostolic age of assembling themselves together, the Lord would do some great wonders in the church. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women." We are informed that "the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty," and that "they were all with one accord in one place." Why should not God's servants and handmaidens receive the Holy Spirit when they all with one accord pray for it according to Christ's command. If the church would observe stated times of prayer, and the many gather together to hold prayer-meetings, like they did in the time of the apostles, they would also be astonished at the great deliverance that would be effected. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." We know that the Christians assembled themselves together for prayer in the apostles' time; and we also know that the apostle admonishes us not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together; but why the church does it only in some places, we do not fully know.

Christ wants his people to be praying Christians. God wants his church to be a praying church. As it is now, sisters seldom—and some never—pray in public. It is true, there are times when they have the privilege offered them, but in such a way that it is expected that some of the ministering brethren will snatch it from them. For a similar reason some brethren and sisters never wash feet. It is true they are informed that all should do so; but it is so customary for the head of the church, and a certain part of the laity, to snatch this privilege from the rest, that it cannot be expected to be otherwise under present circumstances. The most affecting public prayer that I ever heard, was offered by a sister, and it was but a short one. But to be prepared for effectual and fervent public prayer, we dare not neglect our private prayers. When I say private, I mean vocal, as well as mental. Our minds must be employed if we would worship God in spirit. Our hearts must be engaged in the work, or it will all be in vain. We should offer our prayers to God. Our body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. Our heart is the closet of this temple; and to this closet we should retire in all our devotions, and forget the world with all its cares and idle show, and thus shut the door, and then commune with God in our hearts, whether in public or private. It has been remarked that "there is no duty in religion so neglected as private prayer." Private prayer is the secret of success in our Christian warfare. To neglect it, is to take one step in drawing back to perdition. It is one chief and great cause of all backslidings. But while the neglect of it is a great cause of backslidings, the use of it has been the means by which many have become great in the church of Christ. Christ says, ask and ye shall receive. James writes, "Ye have not, because ye ask not. It is manifest that if we would but ask more, we would receive more; even as Christ declared that "every one that asketh, receiveth."

Prayer

"Gives every blessing from above."

And as the poet further says,

"Were half the breath that's vainly spent,
To heaven in supplication sent,
Our cheerful song would out her be,
'Hear what the Lord has done for me.'"

Of course we understand Christ, the apostle, and the poet, to refer to prayer that is offered up according to the will of God; if otherwise, we will do as James says, "ask amiss." "Let not that man think that he shall receive anything from the Lord."

In order that our prayers may be "effectual," it will be necessary that we observe the manner in which they are to be observed. First, we find it necessary that we resign our entire will unto the will of the Lord. It must be our will to do all things whatsoever God has commanded us. Christ had reference to this truth when he asked the question, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" We hear much said about eating and drinking the bread and wine of the communion unworthily, and therefore to our condemnation. While this is a solemn fact, it is just as true that we may pray to our condemnation; and one way in which we may do this, is with a disregard to his word. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." Prov. 28:9. Again, if our prayer is to be effectual, it must be offered in faith. While the word says, "Let him ask of God," it further says, "but let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." "According to your faith be it unto you," will be the answer to our prayers.

I often think of the words of Christ when he says, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Until then "be not faithless, but believing."

Again, if we ask God to gratify our carnal desires or lusts, we will pray in vain; for the flesh, with the affections and lusts must be crucified. Gal. 5:24. If otherwise, James would say, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts." We must also ask in humility. God "gives grace to the humble." Wherefore "humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." But while God giveth grace to the humble, it is a stubborn fact that "God resisteth the proud." That I am correct in my remarks, I need but refer the reader to one more passage. In Luke 18:10-14, we have an account of a proud Pharisee, and a humble publican. The Pharisee exalted himself, while the publican humbled himself. Christ in the account informs us that "every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord. A high look, and a proud heart, and the plowing of the wicked, is sin. Him that hath a proud heart will I not suffer." Again, we should pray with reverence and godly fear. Let us always remember that we are sinners, and that God is great, holy, and just. The wise man says, "be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be hasty to utter anything before God; for God is in heaven, and thou on earth." When we approach God in prayer let us ever remember that "holy and reverend is his name." "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

We should pray with earnestness and zeal. We read of Christ, that "in the days of his flesh he offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears." And of him it is written "the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." Of his children; it is written that they are to be "zealous of good works." Christ, as well as Elias, prayed earnestly, and so should we.

We should "pray without ceasing;" that is, with perseverance. When you arise in the morning, be sure to pray in private, but do not forget that you are to "pray everywhere." Do not think because you pray at the table, you can lawfully omit family prayers. Do not think that because you pray on the Lord's day, that that will be sufficient for one week. Our prayers should be like the fire on the Jewish altar, not always consuming sacrifices, but never completely going out. Begin now to pray everywhere, and never give the habit up. You will never be the loser, by thus persevering in prayer.

Boldness in prayer is of great importance to make it successful with God. "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need." Thankfulness is included in true prayer. When Christ said to his disciples, "After this manner therefore pray ye," he instructed them to say, "Hallowed be thy name." "By prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God. Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving."

We should never approach a throne of grace, without blessing God for his loving kindness, mercy and grace, that endure forever. It is through the mercy of God that we are not in hell, and that we live in a land of Bibles, and have the privilege of laboring to enter into everlasting glory and life. "His loving kindness, oh, how great!" The goodness of God! who can express it? It is enough to lead the most hardened sinner to repentance. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

I will yet notice the importance of intercession in our prayers. "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven;" that is, willingly, fully, and by all. We should pray for all men. Charity seeketh not her own. We should try to bear in our hearts the whole world; the church of Christ, and the Jews; the heathens and the Catholics. "This is to be like Christ. He bears the names of his people, as their High priest, before the Father. Oh, the privilege of being like Jesus! This is to be a true helper to ministers. If I must choose a congregation, give me a people who pray."

"Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air,
His watchword at the gate of death;
He enters heaven with prayer."

For The Young.

A Crown through Perseverance.

TO A YOUNG BROTHER

The refreshing breezes of Divine Grace have dispersed the clouds of conviction of sin and error, and you see light almost unapproachable. The old Sodom of sectarianism, in which you sought in vain to be partaker of "the comfort of the Scriptures," and to live in "the truth as it is in Jesus" has disappeared in the distance, and you are safely come over the plains of repentance, even unto the Zoar of safety—the church of the living God.

During the few weeks of your sheltering in the city of Refuge, your countenance has worn an unusual radiance, attesting the "joy in believing." You feel like Noah when he was saved by water—safely riding above a wicked, drowning world. He feared no disaster, as long as he should remain inside where God put him; and neither need you, as long as you "keep yourself in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." Jude 1: 21. "This is love that we walk after his commandments." 2 John 1: 6. "The world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God, ABIDETH FOREVER." 1 John 2: 17. Read also John's Gospel, chapter xv, and Romans 8: 38, 39. You have the fortress of God for your battlement against the satanic host.

You have been washed by the hand that moves the world and governs the Universe. You have come through the bath, not merely of water in Holy Baptism, but the bath of regeneration in the atoning blood of the immaculate "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." "O how I love thy commandments," you say with David. Your conversation and your association have changed. You say you "cannot delight in former ways." May this ever be your experience, for who would turn again to the vain and empty things of this wicked world. Surely "old things have passed away and all things have become new," even to the simple characteristic of the cut of your coat. I rejoice in your earnest fortitude and your faithfulness in the great and comprehensive command to "Deny thyself, take up thy cross, and follow him." Deny thy SELF! This is the secret of consecration to the service of God. If tyrannical self could be subdued in our hearts and lives, how easy it would be to overcome the outer enemy.

You can give no better evidence of the power of the religion of Jesus than to be transformed from the vanity of this world both in your conversation and your personal appearance. Let the world say there is nothing in this, it is but the argument of "the wicked one" against the teachings of Jesus. Your constant religious conversation and your plain appearance are among your best weapons in battling with the temptations of Satan.

"Stand up for Jesus" When you said this I felt a new impulse, for you attest the power of it. "Stand up for Jesus" always, brother. Stand up for his word of Truth; defend it, and labor, by example and precept, for its power to rule over every disciple of the great Teacher who said: "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

I rejoice with you in the confirmation of faith, and your courageous hope. Your feast is of our Father's own preparing. What a rich feast the Bread and Water of Life afford to the righteous hungry! How our Father cares for us! It becomes us only to trust and believe him in all his commands and promises. This poor, benighted world affords nothing to compare with our joy in believing in the crucified one, and tasting of his infinite love. O how it buoys up the soul as it were on eagle's wings, so that we can desire, with the Psalmist: "Oh that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away, and be at rest."

Dear brother, our sweetest and fullest joy of faith here, is but a foretaste of what our beneficent Father has provided for the faithful in the Heavenly Kingdom. "Ear hath not heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, what God has prepared for them that love him." The faithful apostle, who is the author of this comforting quotation, has not ventured to tell us precisely what is laid up for us, for we are not ready to hear it, but he would have us exercise an unflinching faith in the goodness and promises of God. It is enough to know that we are to be "joint heirs with Christ." O what a prospect! What a glorious future lies before the faithful, humble disciple of Jesus! You are happy in hope. No wonder you triumph over your sectarian enemies, and show them the sword of the Spirit with such readiness and determination. I would have you know that your persecution is but a decided evidence of your acceptance. It is indeed the trial of your faith, and test of your love for Jesus and his doctrine. The faith you have so devoutly espoused is able to strengthen you every day of your sojourn in this vale of trial. You seem to realize that you are a stranger and pilgrim now. You are not at home. You are homeward bound. You seem to think you can endure and overcome all things in the power of Christ, and so you can. It is the promise of our Father who loves us and invites us to cast all our care upon him. He has always cared for us, and does so much more when we become his dutiful, loving children, because we yield ourselves to a condition in which he can show his care and abundant blessings. Your trials may be great, but Jesus says to his disciples: "Lo! I am with you, always even unto the end of the world." This is a most cheering promise. One of the apostles, writing in regard to his trials in his Christian experience, decides upon trust in God as his shield, and boldly offers the challenge: "If God be for us, who can be against us?" What can any man or set of men accomplish by deriding, villifying, and ridiculing any of God's children? Defeat must inevitably follow, and a most shameful reward, for "every man shall be rewarded according as his work shall be." One of the sacred writers says, "the world by wisdom knew not God," when Jesus was on earth, and so to-day, the wisdom of an educated and hired ministry is arrayed in shameless boldness against the plain, simple, self-denying doctrines and principles of the New Testament. "What shall the end of these things be!"

You say, you "thought it about time to leave the City of Destruction." And well you did, if the New Testament be true, and he that doubts this has no possible plan of redemption from the thralldom of sin. This is the "new and living way" opened and made efficacious by the blood of Christ. In this we rejoice together in "the common salvation." Fear not the outer conflict, dear brother, but rather fear the indwelling hankerings after the things of the world. Watch "the little foxes that spoil the vines." Give the Lord a complete sacrifice, and be vigilant and jealous of your high calling. Stand upon the Rock of Ages, and you cannot fail. Build upon Christ Jesus, the true foundation, by an implicit obedience to his commandments. "Let no man despise thy youth," but be steadfast, immovable, faithful in all things, and so shall you realize the fruition of the hope for a crown of righteousness which fadeth not away. Persevere unto the end. Be firm, be earnest, be true.

PIETY AT HOME.

"Show piety at home."—I TIM. v. 4.

Here is one of the many excellent precepts of the gospel of Christ, and the Christian character that is formed in the mould of that gospel, will show itself at home as well as abroad. It is at home in the family circle where the Christian character can be best read, or rather, where the real character of a man can be best ascertained. Whitfield was asked, "Is such a man a Christian?" He with great propriety and suggestiveness replied, "How should I know; I never lived with him." It is necessary that we live with people, or neighbor with them, or transact business with them, to ascertain their real characters. The characters of many persons are estimated from what is seen of them in the sanctuary of God. From their saintly appearance there, and from the eloquence of their prayers, and the fever of their devotional spirit, they are looked upon as very pious. But follow them to their homes, and to their domestic duties and trials, and to the perplexities that are to be more or less met with in our daily business of life, and a very different judgment will be formed of their characters to that which was formed from what was seen of them in the sanctuary on the Lord's day.

If the family is what it should be, what place has fewer temptations than home? And if there are but few difficulties there to overcome, we should be good Christians at home. And if the home of the Christian father and husband is not the Christian home it should be, it needs his best efforts to make it such. Home is an excellent missionary field, in which every Christian who has a home may labor. When the man in the country of the Gadarenes was cured from the effects of an unclean spirit, he desired to remain with the Lord, his kind deliverer; "Howbeit, Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." His home was to be the first missionary field in which he was to labor to glorify the Lord.

Bunyan, in his Pilgrim's Progress, and in his peculiar style, in his character of the professing man he calls Talkative, thus describes him, "He talketh of prayer, of repentance, of faith, and of the new birth; but he knows but only to talk of them; I have been in his family, and have observed him at home and abroad; and I know what I say of him is the truth. His house is as empty of religion as the white of an egg is of savor. There is neither prayer, nor sign of repentance for sin; yea, the brute in his kind serves God far better than he. He is the very stain, reproach, and shame of religion, to all that know him; it can hardly have a good word in all that end of the town where he dwells, through him. Thus say the common people that know him, a saint abroad, and a devil at home. His poor family finds it so; he is such a churl, such a railer at, and so unreasonable with his servants, that they neither know how to do for, or speak to him. Men that have any dealing with him say it is better to deal with a Turk than with him, for fairer dealing they shall have at their hands. This Talkative (if it be possible) will go beyond them, defraud, beguile, and overreach them. Besides, he brings up his sons to follow his footsteps; and if he findeth in any of them a foolish timorousness, (for so he calls the first appearance of a tender conscience,) he calls them fools and blockheads, and by no means will employ them in much, or speak to their commendation before others. For my part, I am of opinion, that he has, by his wicked life, caused many to stumble and fall; and will be, if God prevent him not, the ruin of many more."

The foregoing is a dark picture which Christian is represented as giving of professor Talkative, and in charity we shall hope that not many professing Christians are as destitute of piety at home as he; but it is to be feared Talkative's character at home is the character of too many professors of Christianity.

Piety, then, should be showed at home as well as everywhere else. The husband should show it to the wife, and the wife to the husband, and parents should show it to their children, and all should show it one to another. It should be showed in words of kindness, in the spirit of gentleness and meekness, and in deeds of benevolence and charity. It should be showed in the spirit of self-denial and self-sacrificing, one denying himself of enjoyments, or sacrificing his own enjoyments for the good of another. It should be showed in devotional exercises, in family prayer, order, quietness, and in a proper reverence for God, his word, and for everything of a sacred character. It should be showed by discouraging and excluding everything of an evil character, and even of an evil tendency. "I will walk within my house," said David, with a perfect heart." The walk of a person is his conduct of life. And by his house is meant his family. Let his resolution be the resolution of all who have families. Of Abraham the Lord said, "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."

But to "show piety at home," or anywhere else, we must possess it. And if we possess it, we can show it and we will show it, not merely to make a display of it, but that God may be glorified, and our pious example have a Christianizing influence upon those that fall within the circle of that influence, which the members of our families especially will do.

"In all my ways, O God,
I would acknowledge thee,
And seek to keep my heart and house
From all pollution free.

"Where'er I have a tent,
An altar will I raise;
And thither my oblations bring,
Of humble prayer and praise.

Could I my wish obtain,
My household, Lord, should be Devoted to thyself alone—
A nursery for thee.

KINDNESS APPRECIATED.

We have received a number of New Year Christian greetings, and warm expressions of sympathy in our humble work in which we are engaged. These warm expressions of sympathy and encouragement have in some instances been contained in appendixes or introductions to business letters, and in some cases, the convenient postal card has been the vehicle to bear the sweet words of comfort from the kind and thoughtful hearts in which they originated, to our own spirit that has welcomed them and received them, as the parched earth welcomes and receives the nourishing dews and gentle showers, that its vegetation may grow, and its fruits mature. We assure our dear and thoughtful friends, that their words of comfort and greeting are fully appreciated, thankfully received, and sincerely reciprocated. And we hope we shall be made more humble and in every way better by the manifestations of the kindness of our friends, both human and divine. And as we receive and appreciate the favors of our benefactors, we shall feel our obligations to them increased, and shall endeavor to meet those obligations as duty, love, and gratitude require.

EXPLANATION OF MATT. III. 11.

BRANDT, Miami Co., Ohio, }
 Aug. 17, 1875. }

Brother James :

Did John the Baptist address two classes of persons when he said, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire," or did he have reference to the disciples that they would be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire? We can easily reconcile the baptism of the Holy Ghost in the form of immersion on the day of Pentecost. But were the disciples baptized on that day with fire in the form of immersion? The principal idea we want to get is, when were they baptized with fire in the form of immersion? We have sometimes heard it said that John addressed two classes of persons; first, that when he spoke of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, it had reference to when that sound came from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting; that it was to the disciples as one class. Second, when he spoke of the baptism with fire, he spoke to another class, those persons who rejected, or especially to Jerusalem, with its inhabitants, that they would be immersed with fire at the time of its destruction. "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire and it sat upon each of them." Acts ii. 3. Is this the baptism of fire? If it is, how is it in the form of immersion?

O. F. Y.

ANSWER.

The first impression the passage referred to made upon our mind after we began to read the Scriptures with interest, was that John referred to two classes of persons, the believers, and the unbelievers. In the verse proceeding that in which the words referred to occur, it is said, "And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." And the verse succeeding that under consideration reads thus: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner; but he will burn up his chaff with unquenchable fire." It is evident that John had two classes of persons in his mind when he wrote the verse before the words we are explaining, and that which follows those words. In the first he uses fruitful trees for good men, and unfruitful trees for bad men; in the second, he uses wheat for good men, and chaff for bad men.—Then it is altogether probable that he had the same classes before his mind when he wrote the intermediate verse, and that fire is to be understood in the same sense in the 11th verse, the verse we are explaining, that it is to be in the 9th and 12th verses.—And as it is applied to the wicked in the 9th and 12th verses, so we think it should be applied to the same class in the 11th verse. For to give a word such a different meaning when it occurs in passages so close together, and apply the word fire in the 11th verse to a certain effect to be produced upon the righteous, and make the same word occurring in the 10th and 11th verses, signify an effect upon the wicked, is using a liberty with words used by the Holy Ghost, which is not allowable unless no other meaning of the word can be admitted upon the application of just rules of Scriptural exposition. But as the element of fire is frequently used in the sacred writings, as the means for punishing the wicked, there is no impropriety whatever in applying it to the punishment of the wicked when it is said "he shall baptize you with fire."

Again: our Lord was addressing the multitude present, or the people in general, and not those only who had been baptized; and hence the pronoun you must not necessarily be confined to his disciples, but it is used indefinitely for the people at large. This seems very evident from St. Luke's report of John's prophecy of Christ. It is this: "I indeed baptize you with water: but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire: whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner, but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable. And many other things, in his exhortation, preached he unto the people." Luke iii. 16-18. From this it would appear that John's address in which the baptism in fire is mentioned, was made "unto the people." This implies the people in general, and not the disciples only. This being the case, and in both of the verses connected with the one having the sentence, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire," the word fire is used as expressive of the doom of the wicked, and a symbol of punishment; it would therefore seem to follow that the baptism of fire is the baptism with which the wicked are to be baptized, and the prediction will be fulfilled when they are cast into the lake of fire. Rev. xx. 15.

As a confirmation of the view we have given, it may be remarked that when Peter referred to John's prediction that our Lord would baptize "with the Holy Ghost and with fire," in regard to the house of Cornelius, he left the baptism of fire out, and only quoted that part which alluded to the baptism of the Holy Ghost, because his application of it was to believers. "Then remembered I," said Peter, "the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Acts xi. 16.

Many of our learned commentators take the same view of the passage. Dr. Lange says: "He shall baptize, or immerse, you in the Holy Ghost and in fire.—He will either entirely immerse you in the Holy Ghost as penitents, or, if impenitents, he will overwhelm you with the fire of judgments (and at last with hell-fire)."

Dr. Priestly says, "By baptizing with the Holy Spirit and with fire, John has been generally thought to refer to the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, under the appearance of cloven tongues, or flames of fire; though it is doubted by some who adopt this interpretation whether John understood his prophecy or not. But there is another interpretation which I shall mention in connection with the subsequent verse, from which it derives its probability. . . . Baptism properly means plunging, or total immersion in water; but is applied figuratively to other things, and signifies doing anything totally or completely, and the application is generally made to a state of suffering, rather than enjoyment, though it may be made to either. Thus an historian speaking of a general who came with an army and made great havoc in a city, says he baptized the city. To baptize with the Holy Spirit, and with fire, may signify, then, he shall communicate the Holy Spirit in profusion, which may include the attestations from above to his divine mission with the effects which the acknowledgments of it would produce; but unto obstinate and vicious unbelievers he will prove the minister of divine judgments. He will baptize them with unquenchable fire, alluding, most probably, to the complete overthrow of the Jewish nation, to which he had before referred under the appellation of the wrath to come."—Priestley's Notes, vol. 3, pp. 44, 45.

We submit the foregoing considerations to our readers, and hope they will receive the candid attention of all who are interested in the subject to which they refer.

Gleanings and Jottings.

AGENTS.—We must have our word with agents. When agents work faithfully, they are anxious to know what others are doing and what our prospects are. By way of information and encouragement, we will say that our prospects were never so good. Agents have been working actively, and have met with good success, as active, earnest workers generally do. Many have sent more names than they ever did before; many have not yet come up to their usual number, but give hopeful expressions; a few are discouraged; but nearly all say they will do all they can.

This is the feeling we love to hear our agents express. If all will continue to do all they can, we need have no fears of the result. Effort—a strong and continued effort—will certainly accomplish a great deal.

We would be pleased to meet with all of our agents, to talk with them on this as well as on other important subjects. We would like to thank them and give them a word of cheer. This desire, however, we cannot reasonably expect to be gratified; and hence we must do these things as best we can in this public way. Will you then, accept of our thanks for the interest you have manifested, and the exertions you have made? We hope you will; and we hope further you will continue to do all you can. Do not stop when you have sent in in your first, second, or third list, but continue the work without ceasing. You have, perhaps, asked some who have refused. Do not let a refusal discourage you, but try again. If our agents continue the work as they have begun it, in a short time we will be able to tell them that our list of subscribers is larger than it ever was before. B.

NATIONAL REFORM.—The National Association, organized to maintain existing Christian features in the American government, and to secure the Religious Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, met in Philadelphia on the 9th ult., for the transaction of its annual business. The Hon. Felix K. Brunot, of Pittsburgh, President of the Association, occupied the chair. Steps were taken to secure articles of incorporation, under the name of the National Reform Association. The maintenance of Sabbath Laws, the retention of the Bible in the common schools, the defence of the Judicial oath and other Christian features of the government, and the securing of suitable religious acknowledgments in all new State Constitutions, were expressly recognized as among the objects of the society. The next national Convention was appointed to be held in Philadelphia during the last week in June, 1876.

The following was clipped from the North Wales (Pa.) Record. Some of the older secret societies have a great many members; and new societies are still springing up. The evil effects of such societies are also on the increase and becoming more apparent. Some of the churches are trying to rid themselves from the evil, but find it very difficult to do so after having admitted and nursed it.

"It appears that Rev. Joseph R. Kerr, who recently withdrew from the pastorate of the North United Presbyterian Church, of Philadelphia, also severed his connections with the denomination, and that the opposition of the Church to secret societies was the cause. Further troubles of a serious character are anticipated to grow out of this case. The facts of the case seem to be that when the Reformed and Associate Reformed Churches consolidated in 1858, under the title of United Presbyterian Church, a compromise on the subject of secret societies was effected, and it is said that Mr. Kerr accepted the call to the North Church with the full understanding that the prohibitory view of the rule was not to be taken.

Not quite a year ago, a gentleman, a member of the Order of Odd Fellows, applied for admission to membership, and the Rev. Joseph R. Kerr threw the casting vote in his favor.

The elders then appealed to the Presbytery, which declined to confirm their view, and from Presbytery they carried their appeal to Synod, and were successful in securing a rule requiring the Presbytery to discipline the North Church for violation of the article regarding secret societies requiring the expulsion of members of secret societies.

The pastor thereupon felt that he could not prosecute his work while being thus hampered, and accordingly resigned his pastorate."

MONEYS RECEIVED.—No doubt many who have sent us money since Christmas are wondering why it is not acknowledged. To all such we would say that our correspondence department has been so much crowded that we could not find room to acknowledge to date. It will take several weeks to catch up. At the end of the list, we state how far we have acknowledged. In this issue we have acknowledged to Dec. 23rd, 1875.

This explanation is made so that our patrons may not be alarmed when they see no acknowledgment of the money which they have sent. A few week's time will correct this matter. B.

HYMN BOOKS.—We have a number of orders for Hymn Books which we cannot fill till we can have some more bound. When we are ready to fill orders we will announce the fact. B.

ALMANACS.—We have still some Almanacs on hand, but the probability is that there will not be enough to supply the demand. Those who apply first will be supplied as long as we have any. We do not expect to print a second edition, as it would be too expensive. B.

The weather for the last three weeks has been remarkably pleasant. It has had the appearance of April or early May more than of January or late December. During this time there has been very little frost at night, and the winds have been warm and pleasant. We notice, too, that the grass and grain have started to grow. On the night of Sunday the 9th inst. there was, however, a considerable change in the temperature, and since it has been somewhat cooler. We learn from our correspondents that in many other parts the winter, so far, has been mild. B.

The Valley Independent published at this place, retains the Independent but has exchanged "Valley" for Meyersdale. It now displays the heading, Meyersdale Independent. It was a good local paper before; but with the change of name it is enlarged and, we think, is second to no local paper in the county. Terms: $1.50 in advance. B.

ITEMS WANTED.—We want short and interesting items of news for our Jottings and Gleanings department; and we will remind all concerned that such items should be written on small slips by themselves. If they are written either on a business or on an essay sheet, the probability is that they will be overlooked, or passed by for want of time to transcribe them.

DEGRAFF, Ohio, Dec. 24, 1875.

We hereby give notice to the general brotherhood that the Committee of Arrangements for the Annual Meeting for 1876, met at the Logan church, Logan county, Ohio, Dec. 23rd, 1875, and the arrangements for the meeting are now made. The Committee agreed that there should be no boarding tent nor trafficking of any kind on the ground, nor closer than the law allows. The place of meeting is 2 1/2 miles south of Gretna station, on the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, and Indianapolis Railroad. There was a mistake in the Indicator's report saying 80 miles north of Dayton. It will not exceed 50 miles north of Dayton.

By order of the Committee of Arrangements.

Our Trip to Europe.

As the proceedings of the District Meeting of Northern Illinois, in reference to the Macedonian call from Denmark have awakened considerable thought in the brotherhood generally, and, in consequence thereof, we are receiving letters of approbation, and, especially, of inquiry, in order to meet the demand in the most convenient way, we will communicate a few lines through our periodicals. The time for us to start on our mission has not yet been determined. The District Meeting left that for us to decide according to circumstances, and as the nature of the case would most reasonably suggest; and as I have just returned from a short mission of love to the central part of the State, (where the Brethren are but little known,) I have had no opportunity to confer with the other brethren in reference to the matter, and do not expect to have, until between Christmas and New Year, at which time we expect brother Stein to visit our district, and brethren C. Hope and M. M. Eshelman to accompany him. Then we will try and decide upon that point, if the Lord will.

There are many things to be taken into consideration in a matter of so great importance and magnitude, and as very appropriately said by the editor of the Companion, "a matter of more than an ordinary character." In this light we have always viewed it, and do yet; and we think the District meeting did also.—Some of us would have preferred to present the matter to Annual Meeting in proper order, and let that body respond to the call; but the prevailing sentiment of the meeting was to prosecute the work as fast as we could, as the call seemed to be urgent; and as the Annual Meeting, if there should be any, would likely do as it did in the call from Maine, refer it back to the district from which it came; and if it did consent to act, it would delay the matter six months or a year longer, as brethren could not be expected to prepare in a few days to make a trip of that kind, to be absent six months or one year, or more if necessary. And I will say right here, that if it were evident to my mind that it is only the work of man and not of God, I could not be persuaded to sacrifice the enjoyment of the society of my dear brethren and sisters, and, especially, of the family, and to encounter all the dangers incident to such a trip, and the unpleasant feature of mingling with society whose habits and language are so diverse from ours, and also the inconvenience of travel, when compared with our country. It is true, all the sacrifices we would be required to make from the above considerations, would be but little compared with the Apostle Paul's; nevertheless nothing but the same cause which prompted him to endure so much would or should induce us; that is, the glory and honor of God, and the salvation of souls. We have reason to believe from what knowledge we have of the call from Denmark, the circumstances connected with it, and the manner in which it has presented itself to us, that it is the work of the Lord. If so, we are very willing to say, "Not mine, but thy will be done, O Lord," and to be subject to the will of the church, with the hope that we shall not only have the sympathies, prayers and co-operation of the church in Northern Illinois, but throughout the whole brotherhood. We feel to thank God and take courage already, because of the letters of sympathy, commendation, and approbation which we are receiving; and will be thankful for more, especially if they will point out any places where good might be done.—This would greatly aid missionaries in getting to points of which they have no knowledge.

I received a very encouraging and satisfactory letter from our loving brother, E. K. Baechly, of Waterloo, Iowa, of that character, wishing us to stop in England, &c. Please give the names of friends, and places of residence plainly, and if it comes in our route, or within a reasonable distance, we may visit them. But our knowledge of the route and of the countries we may visit, is so limited, that we could not feel justified in obligating ourselves to visit any particular point, but to have liberty to act in that matter as prudence may dictate as we travel along.

As the matter under consideration is not only of great magnitude in point of character, time, and peril, but also in expense; therefore we hope that while we are receiving such letters as alluded to above, our Treasurer will be receiving letters with donations; for as there were many warm, liberal hearts that responded to the one cent call, for the publishing of those tracts, we entertain the hope that the missionary part of the work, will meet with the same liberal response. A few cents from each one will answer; and as our Treasurer keeps an account of all donations received, I would recommend, that the elder, or some one of each branch of the church, collect all he can, and send the sum total. But where members have not this opportunity, send your offering individually, and it will be noticed by our Treasurer, and much more so by our heavenly Father, if the motive of the donor is to promote the cause of God in the salvation of souls. Treasurer, John Rowland, Lanark, Carroll county, Illinois. ENOCH EBY.

In Memoriam.

Christena Shultz, wife of Martin Shultz, was born March 8th, 1800, died in the Nettlecreek congregation, Wayne county, Indiana, Dec. 6th, 1875; aged 75 years, 8 months and 28 days. She was born in the State of Pennsylvania, and moved with the family to Indiana in 1831, where she lived until death. She was a consistent member of the German Baptist church for about 51 years. She has left a multitude of relatives, who have the most comforting assurance that she died in the triumphs of a living faith. She was the mother of eight daughters, all living, and three sons, one living. She was grandmother of 55 and great grandmother of 32 children. To all these she was an example of goodness and a counsellor of wisdom. When any one needed reproof, he would get it, no difference who it was; and while doing so, she was also able to refer to a Scripture suitable to her reproof.

At this juncture many fond recollections are making their appearance. I will state a few, and try to make some use of them:

Many a time do I remember—when yet small—of seeing grandmother coming to "our house." At the first glimpse of her, all else was forgotten but to run and tell the rest: "Grandmother is coming." As soon as she arrived, the next item of interest was, Will she stay all night? If so, the day and night were spent pleasantly. But in the morning it was changed. We knew that she would soon leave us; but while leaving she would give the invitation: "You must come and see us." In course of time we would go; then there was another joyful time. But this season of joy, as before, was marred and ended by a parting. Now, if we could get rid of this parting, our joy might continue. Grandmother has visited us all; but she has now gone to her mansion in heaven—her eternal home. No doubt, if she had had the power of speech just prior to her departure, she would have given us a hearty invitation to come and see her and stay with her forever.

Now I will say to children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, Will we go to see grandmother? If we will, we can. Then let us learn the road with care, that we may be sure of getting there, and not do as I, in company with another boy, did many years ago, in attempting to go to grandfather's. I thought I knew the way. We started. We had a certain wood to go through, having by roads leading from the main road. We got on a by road and went for some time, until finally we did not know where we were.—The truth of it was, we were lost. We tried to retrace our steps; and after wandering around for some time, we found our way out. But we did not get to grandfather's. Now let us be careful to learn the road to grandmother's home.—It is plain. It is easily traveled. She has shown us a great part of the way by her walk and conduct. Let us learn the balance, and travel it with patience, looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of this road. Beware of by-roads.

I will now close by saying, let us all remember grandmother with all her examples and counsels.

An Earnest Appeal.

Editors of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:

We, the undersigned brethren and sisters, earnestly pray that God may move the heart of some dear laboring brother to come out and live with us and help to build up the cause of Christ.

We number twelve members here, and have a good prospect for some more. We are situated so far from the body of the church of this district, and brother Wenrick, the presiding Elder, has so much to do that he cannot give us preaching very often. There are plenty of ministers in some parts of God's moral vineyard, and they dislike to leave the kind brethren and sisters, but they ought to think of us out here by ourselves. We can be just as kind to them as the brethren and sisters where they reside. May God in his infinite mercy send some dear brother to preach the word of eternal life. If any minister will address Christian Birk or Cornelius Dixon at Macedon, Mercer Co., Ohio, either of them will cheerfully give all the desired information.

About the price of land.—There are 80 acres of land here, with about thirty acres cleared, a good frame house and plenty of water on it. It is just a new farm, and can be bought for sixteen hundred dollars. And there are several others as desirable farms for sale as the one mentioned.

Brother Quinter, we want you to help us to get a preacher here to live with us and to preach for us.

Dear Brother Quinter :

This is to inform you and the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that the cause of Christ is still slowly progressing here in Colorado. The brethren are all well. We number 13 members; and as we have no minister, we meet every Lord's day to worship God as best we can. Brother James Gish came here from Illinois and was with us two months. Under the preaching of brother Gish, six precious souls came out from the world, and united themselves with the people of God. The Brethren have many friends here.

Dear brethren, cannot some of you that want to come west, come and see us?—We live from five to ten miles west of Longmont. We would be glad at any time to see any of the ministering brethren, and I think they can build a large church here; but I cannot offer any inducements, as we have suffered loss from the locusts. The most of the brethren have lost their crops for the last three years. We desire an interest in your prayers. May God help us all to live faithful, is my prayer.

Book Notices.

The Perfect Plan of Salvation; a pamphlet of 24 pages, showing that the position occupied by the Brethren is infallibly safe, has of late been out of print, and we have therefore been unable to fill orders, though they are constantly coming in. We now have another edition in press, and will be prepared to fill orders in a few days. We wish all those wanting copies of the work to send in their orders immediately, the more the better. Many churches have purchased this work in large quantities for distribution, thus helping the good cause along, in their immediate localities. Churches wishing the work for that purpose will do well to order at once, and thus scatter the good seed, and help us defray heavy printing expenses. Price, 15 cents; 2 copies, 25 cents; 10 copies, $1 00.

True Evangelical Obedience, its Nature and Necessity, as Taught and Practiced among the Brethren. By J. W. Stein. There is no better work published among the brethren than this, and will be found exceedingly valuable for general circulation among the people. It, for a time, has also been out of print, and we could not fill orders, but we now have a large edition in press, and will be able to fill all orders in a few days. Those wishing the work will confer a great favor by ordering the book at once. Price, 20 cents; 7 copies, $1; 15 copies, $2.

We are also getting out another edition of Campbellism Weighed in the Balance and Found Wanting, and can now fill all orders for it. 2 copies, 10 cents; 6 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3 50.

Christianity Utterly Incompatible with War. By J. W. Stein, being one of his Twenty Reasons for leaving the Baptist Church. This work will doubtless be hailed with joy by all lovers of "peace on earth and good will toward man," as being an able, clear and forcible defense and vindication of the doctrine of Non-resistance. It should be in the hands of every member of the church, especially the ministers. Price, 35 cents; 10 copies, $3; 20 copies, $5.

Sabbatism, showing that the Sabbath of the Old Testament is not binding upon Christians, but that the "first day of the week," or the "Lord's day," is the preferred day for the disciples of Christ to assemble in worship. By M. M. Eshelman. Price, 10 cents; 3 copies, 25 cents; 7 copies, 50 cents.

Any of the above works will be sent postpaid on receipt of price. Send out office order or registered letter for $2 and over.

LOST NATION, Dec. 21st, 1875.

BROTHER QUINTER :

Dear Brother in the Lord:—Please give the following visits space in the columns of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as requested by brethren in the east as well as west, who would like to hear from me occasionally.

The visits made during the summer out of our own church district were as follows: First, attended district meeting in Benton county; second, lovefeast in Cedar county; third, lovefeast in Linn county; fourth, lovefeast near Mount Carmel, Ill. All of these were occasions of great pleasure, harmony and love prevailing among the brethren. Met many kind brethren, sisters, and friends.

Having returned home from a visit made by self and brother John Gable, we left home Dec. 4th, for Davenport, 40 miles south, where we were met by brother Jacob Friday, who conveyed us to his house; rested for the night, and met for worship on Lord's day morning and evening. Congregations small but attentive. Here we were met by brother Thompson, who conveyed us 20 miles west to his house in Muscatine county, where we dined and then took leave for friend Wm. and sister Stutzman's, near at hand, where we remained all night. No meeting, on account of rain. Spent the 7th with friend William, who kindly conveyed us to the place of meeting, Palerama school house, in the evening, where we met a small but attentive congregation. Spent the night at Brother Thompson's home. Met for worship that evening. Meetings on the increase, with good order and attention. One meeting in the North Star school-house. Conveyed on Saturday, 11th, by brother Thompson, 22 miles west to Cedar county, to brother Musselman's. Met four times at No. 6 school house. Large and attentive congregations. Good impressions were made at this place, and one soul made application for baptism, which was attended on Lord's day, Dec. 12th. Were conveyed from this place to Inland, 20 miles east, by brother Samuel Musselman. Held four meetings in the Inland school-house. The meetings here were well attended, and some good impressions were made.—From this point we were conveyed to brother William Smith's, in Clinton county, 21 miles east, by brother Jacob Long. Met for worship on Saturday night and Sunday morning. Here we were met by brother Cany and sister, who conveyed us to brother Jacob Kindig's, 8 miles north. Had large and attentive congregations. Conveyed home next morning, Monday, 20th, by brother Cany, 12 miles north-west. Found all well, for which thank the Lord; and thanks to all the brethren and sisters and friends for their kindness to us while with them. May the blessing of God rest upon you all, is the prayer of your weak brother in the Lord.

Brethren in the east, the harvest is great in this western country, and the laborers are few. Think of this. Come out and defend your Master's cause while the door of mercy stands open. May the grace of God rest upon you all. Pray for us.

From your brother in Christ,
ISAAC BARTO.

ELBERTON, Pa., Dec. 24, 1875.

Dear Brother Quinter :

After our Christian greetings to you, I will give you a few items of church news.

By request brother Nicholson paid us a gospel visit. He commenced his meetings on the evening of the 28th of Nov., and continued divine services evening and morning until the 9th of December. I am glad to tell you that the preached word had its desired effect, upon a few. During the meeting there were eight precious souls added to the number of believers by Christian baptism; and others were almost persuaded to be Christians. Our prayer is for the prosperity of Zion. May the Lord richly reward brother Nicholson for his labors of love in the vineyard of the Lord.

JACOB KELSÖ.

CARTHAGE, Mo., Dec. 25, 1875.

Dear Brother Editor :

We are requested to say through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, (by your goodness,) that we have received $15 00 from our much beloved brother, Samuel Mohler, of Miami county, Ohio, for brother Wm. R. Hubbard, of Newton county, Mo., who lost by fire, as stated in the Companion and Visitor, No. 40, volume II. This amount was contributed by the Newton and Covington churches. We may say here that brother Hubbard informed us that his loss by fire and water was not less than one thousand dollars, and that his cultivated land, which is nearly all bottom land, was damaged much, and a considerable portion of the same entirely ruined. This we have seen with our own eyes.

Brother Hubbard used to labor in the ministry with our much-beloved brother J. W. Stein, when they were members of the Missionary Baptist church, and recently there was a brother advanced to the ministry in brother Stein's church, and the lot fell upon brother Hubbard by a voice a most if not quite unanimous.—We have much confidence in brother H., as being sound in the faith, not wavering, one that is willing to conform to the order of the old brethren in everything; yea, to sacrifice all things, for Christ's sake.

Up to this date brother Wampler and myself have received thirty one and a half dollars for brother Hubbard, and we return hearty thanks to the donors for the same. We hope that brother Hubbard will still be remembered by the brethren, sisters and friends to his further encouragement.

May the God of all grace and comfort and consolation enable us to hold out faithful until death, is my prayer. Amen.
A. W. BAKER.

Sister M.'s Seed-Basket.

PACKAGE NO. 3.

Oh! unconverted reader, stop—stop one moment and think. Are you, for the sake of the sinful pleasures of a brief life, able and willing to endure all the misery that is comprehended in these words of our Savior—"Where there shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth"—"Where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched?" Imagine all the inmates of the lowest haunts of vice gathered into one place. Are you willing to take up your abode with them? Your refined and sensitive nature shrinks from contact with one such; think of being with a multitude of the vilest of earth continually. And remember Jesus offers you a home with angels—a mansion in the heavenly world; and offers to prepare you for an entrance into that home, and companionship with the inmates thereof. He offers you an interest in the blood of atonement—he extends to you his love. Will you reject him? Choose you this day your home for the life to come.

—WHAT three commandments do those persons break who, when they sell anything to their neighbor, will have the very highest price, and when they buy anything of him, must have it for the very lowest; indeed, are well satisfied if their neighbor should have no profit at all? We hope all will be sufficiently interested in this question to search for the answer. It is of the very greatest importance. Besides, there is sin in it—sin in one's dealing so with his neighbor. To be conscious of this sin in our own hearts, to repent of it, and strive against it, is worth more than all the world. It is fulfilling the law. Rom. xiii. 8-10. The answer is found in the following Scriptures.—Please look them out: Ex. xx. 17; Luke vi. 31; 1 Cor. x. 24.

—WHAT an aching void there must have been in the hearts of the disciples, and of the women that followed Jesus, after they saw him laid away in his rocky tomb. He was more to them than the dearest and most congenial friend can be to us. His goodness filled them with admiration, his gentleness, meekness and patience drew forth their tenderest love, and when he was taken away from them, they perhaps, felt as though they would like to die with him. Perhaps the feeling of desolation was never fully removed. After his resurrection a feeling of awe mingled with their other emotions, and his presence was not the same to them it had been before. There was no more sitting at his feet and leaning upon his breast, although, spiritually, he was nearer to every one of them. Having fully accomplished their salvation, they were spiritually one. Sometimes when we have laid a loved one away in the tomb, we feel very desolate. Life seems dark and dreary, and we can hardly realize that we can ever be bright and happy again; but behind all the darkness the love of Jesus beams upon us still. Lord help us to trust thee in the darkest hour.

"The maple's scarlet spires,
The sun's rainbow plumes,
The oak-tree's crimson fires,
That lit the forest glooms,
Now lift their heads disordered;
But through the branches here
The skies, with blue profound,
Serenely smile, and fair.

"Thus when our precious things,
Our joys as frail as sweet,
Have either taken wings,
Or withered at our feet,
Smiles heaven, unchanged above,
And God remaineth true!
Our loss to pay with love,
Till peace returns anew."

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the North Manchester church, Wabash county, Indiana, Dec. 9th, 1875, after a short but very severe illness, brother ISRAEL HARTER; aged 69 years, 4 months and 7 days. He was a minister of the gospel 31 years. D. S.

At Salisbury, Pa., Dec. 16th, 1875, sister EYE WAGNER, aged 72 years, 9 months and 4 days. Sister Wagner was a faithful, consistent and humble sister in the church; and some days before her death she was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. She bore her affliction patiently, and expressed entire submission to the will of the Lord. Funeral services by Rev. Hollman and brother S. C. Keim. B.

In the bounds of the Naperville church, Ill., Nov. 12th, 1875, of typhoid fever, HANNA MOURER, aged 20 years, 3 months and 19 days. She was a daughter of brother Geo. and sister Mourer. She died in Plainfield, about 15 miles from home. She was brought home on the 13th and on the 14th she was buried in the United Brethren burying ground. Brother Mourer had the typhoid fever in his family for about 20 weeks, but the surviving are all again. JOHN HOLLINGER.

Near New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa., JOSEPH NOBLE; aged 68 years, 6 months and some days. Friend, or Judge Noble was a very useful man in his time. The family have lost an affectionate father, and the Presbyterian church an active member and the community an excellent counselor, such as cannot readily be supplied. But if God calls, it makes no difference how useful we may be here on earth, for he is no respecter of persons. Funeral services by the Presbyterian minister and brethren Jacob Miller and L. Furry. Text, 2 Tim. iv. 6-9, to a large concourse of people.

NOAH B. BLOUGH.

In Columbiana county, Ohio, Dec. 19th, 1875, at the home of her son, (brother Jacob Glass,) ANNA BARBARA GLASS (consort of John Glass), who preceded her into eternity nearly 12 years, at the age of 88 years, 5 months and 2 days, and also mother of Elder Lewis Glass, at the advanced age of 94 years, 5 months and 27 days. She and her husband had lived together or about 60 years. Their posterity, as nearly as could be ascertained, is 9 children, 70 grandchildren, 157 great-grandchildren, and 21 great-great-grandchildren. Funeral services by brother Aaron Shively and the undersigned.
J. A. CLEMENT.

Of consumption, Nov. the 17th, 1875, brother Louis, son of Jacob and sister Sarah Myer, aged 25 years, 5 months and 4 days. He bore his affliction with calmness, and never gave up the hope of getting well until within a few days of his death, when he began to feel the great need of a Savior, saying, "I can live but a short time. I give up all for Jesus, and wish to be baptized in the gospel order." He made application, and five days before he died was carried to the water and was baptized. To his few remaining days he talked of much of the future; he was prepared for death and would rather be at rest, and died in the strongest hope of immortality.
SARAH MYER.

"HEAL THYSELF."

The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a book of about 900 pages, illustrated with over 250 engravings and colored plates, and sold at the exceedingly low price of $1.50, tells you how to cure Catarrh, "Liver Complaint," Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Sick, Bilious, and other Headaches, Scrofula, Bronchial, Throat, and Lung Diseases; all diseases peculiar to women, and most other chronic as well as acute disorders. It contains important information for the young and old, male and female, single and married, nowhere else to be found. Men and women, married and single, are tempted to ask their family physician thousands of questions on delicate topics, but are deterred from doing so by their modesty. This work answers just such questions so fully and plainly as to leave no one in doubt. It is sold by agents, or sent by mail (post-paid) on receipt of price. Address the author, R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y.

From the Lafayette Daily Courier.

A Valuable Work.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, distinguished in surgery, and the general practice in the profession he honors, has made a valuable contribution to the medical literature of the day, in a comprehensive work entitled the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." While scientific throughout, it is singularly free from technical and stilted terms. It comes right down to the common sense of every-day life. Dr. Pierce is a noble specimen of American manhood. He has sprung from the people; and, with many sympathies in common with the masses, has sought to render them a substantial service in this the great work of his life.

URBANA, ILLS., Dec. 30th, 1875.

Dr. P. Fubney.—Dear Friend: Your medicine came all right. Thank you for responding so promptly. Your Panacea is a real blessing to poor, afflicted humanity. We have found it a great blessing in our family, and would not do without it for many times its cost.

Yours truly,
MATTIE A. LEAR.

WAMEGO, KAN., July 11th, 1875.

Dr. P. Fubney.—This is to certify that my wife was plagued with rheumatic pains for upwards of thirty years. Sometimes it was in her back, sometimes in her shoulders, sometimes in her arms, and at night she often could not sleep. She had such flying pains—flying from one place to another. We applied to different physicians without any success; got different kinds of patent medicines, but all did no good. At last we procured two bottles of your Panacea, and after using one and a half bottles, the pains left her, and she could sleep, and work with ease. This was about 3 years ago, and it has not come back yet. Ever since we keep the Panacea in our house, and sell it, and we have had no occasion for a doctor since.

Yours truly,
DAVID B. TETTER.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1875. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All of these events are sure to be of great interest, especially the two latter; and all of them and everything connected with them will be fully and freshly reported and expanded in THE SUN.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by THE SUN, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of Grant's administration; and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this THE SUN will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon Grant's aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read THE SUN will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

THE WEEKLY SUN, which has attained a circulation of eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the WEEKLY SUN the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

THE WEEKLY SUN, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to clubs, agents, postmasters or anyone.

THE DAILY SUN, a large four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year. SUNDAY edition extra, $1.10 per year. We have no traveling agents.

NEVER GIVE UP.

Never give up, brother, never give up!

God has a blessing for those who work hard.
Why should you murmur and grumble and fret,
And envy the pleasure from which you're debarred?

Work like a man,

Do the best that you can:

This is the wisest and happiest plan.

Never give up, brother, never give up,

Though the future looks lowering, and gloomy and drear;

Though the sun shine not now, yet it may very soon.

So keep up a brave heart and tread down your fear.

Soon may come light,

And all will be bright.

Only struggle and strive to do what is right.

Never give up, brother, never give up,

Though your burden be heavy and dark be your way;

The how in the clouds only comes with the rain,

And when night is deepest, then bursts forth the day.

Soon troubles will cease,

And your sorrows decrease,—

Only trust in the Lord, and then all will be peace.

Theology—What it Is—a Science— Necessity of System.

BY J. T. MEYERS.

In writing on this subject it shall not be our aim to dilate particularly on the idea of theology, as that would be too profound a subject, but simply to notice in a brief and orderly way what is meant by the term in its exogetical sense; secondly, we shall endeavor to prove that theology is a science; and, thirdly, we shall show the necessity of system in theology. First, then, we shall make some remarks relative to

THE MEANING OF THEOLOGY.

Theology is derived from Theos, God, and logos, discourse. The term, therefore, implies a discourse concerning God.

Orphus and Homer, it is said in history, were termed the theologians in the days of heathen philosophy, because they discoursed so much upon the nature and peculiarities of the gods. In history we even observe the fact of the apostle John's being termed the theologian, and no doubt it was because he so frequently refers to the particular attributes of the Divine character in his writings. Hooker, the profound writer says, Theology is that science which treats of heavenly and divine things. If these heavenly and divine things, the things which appertain to God imply the theology of God, then our interpretation of the word is perfectly correct.

But not only must this term be regarded as referring to that department of Scripture which alone treats of the existence and power of God, nor even dare we apply it to the Bible as a whole; for a great part of it is simply history, but alone dare we apply it to that which especially concerns God and the soul. We come now to notice the second point of our subject,

THEOLOGY A SCIENCE.

In every science there are two things to be taken into consideration, facts and ideas. These are certainly important factors. Facts are more than mere ideas, and just as these two principles differ with each other, so do science and knowledge differ from each other. Knowledge is the persuasion of a thing upon the principle of adequate evidence as to what is really true, while science embraces the internal relation of facts, one to another, and each to all. Science goes to prove that if one thing be admitted, others dare not be denied. Like as the science of chemistry teaches the chemist to tell and know beforehand the result of certain chemical combinations, so the science of astronomy teaches the astronomer to predict the relative position of the heavenly bodies for years and centuries yet to come. If science, therefore, goes to prove the effect and causes of things, how important then that we regard the teachings of the Bible as the great source and fountain of all true and correct science. If theology, therefore, is a science, and we must all admit that it is, it proves to us the necessity of understanding its relation to the soul, because of its positive effect upon the soul. Science involves a fact, and so must the Bible involve, not a knowledge of things, but a fact of things.

The science of physiology teaches us the fact that a violation of nature's law will produce an evil effect upon the human system; so the Bible teaches us that a violation of the law of God will produce an evil effect upon the soul. Like as the science of the nature of things is strictly positive, and no negativeness about it, so the Bible is positive in all its relations to the soul. The science of the solar system teaches the fact that a little disorder of the system would throw the whole of it into a state of confusion, so the Bible teaches the fact that a "little leaven, leaveneth the whole lump." "The soul that sinneth—it does not say that it shall perhaps die, but—it shall die." If these things then are facts, then that part of the Bible which relates to the soul and God, and which is termed theology, constitutes a science. But we shall now come to the closing part of our subject, namely,

THEOLOGY AS A SYSTEM.

We must all admit, if we wish to be governed by reason at all, that the Bible is no more a system of theology, than the physical universe is a system of display and beautiful harmony throughout. We find in nature the facts which the chemist, the astronomer, the philosopher, and the physiologist must examine, and from them ascertain the laws and principles by which they are determined. So the Bible contains a system of truth and morals which must be brought together, authenticated, arranged, and from them form a general principle by which we can ascertain the relation these truths and morals sustain to each other.

This brings us to speak of biblical and systematic theology. By biblical theology is meant the facts of the Bible without any special order or system in the statement of these facts; while systematic theology consists in the collecting of these facts together into a systematic order, determining their relation to each other, with many other cogent truths, as well as a vindication of their harmony and consistency. This is not an easy matter to do, but nevertheless is the proper way to study the Scriptures. If the farmer observes a system in his farming, and the same harmony of order is displayed throughout the physical universe, is it not consistent with human reason that we should also observe a system in studying the Scriptures?

But here, no doubt, some might say, "Why not accept of the Scriptures as we find them, and thus save all this trouble and anxiety of mind? To this we reply, in the first place, that it cannot be done. The human mind is so constituted that it will bring into a careful scrutiny all the facts and incidents of the Bible, however true they may be. To have a correct idea of anything we must adopt some system in the collection of facts. The mind of man is a speculative organ, and will in no way or shape be satisfied with a mass of undigested matter. There is, therefore, a great necessity of understanding the Bible systematically. This is the reason we have so many infidels and skeptics in the world, because they do not read the Scriptures systematically. It cost the reformers years of study and controversy to solve the great problems of the person and character of Christ; that is, to properly adjust, arrange and bring into a systematic order all the facts of Scripture relative to this important subject—the personage of Christ. It is system we need in the church, system in our form of government, system in our views of theology, system in evangelizing the people, and more system, my brethren, in preaching the gospel.

Some Anti-footwashing Ideas Examined.

BY M. M. ESHELMAN.

In the American Christian Review of Nov. 30th, 1875, may be seen nearly two columns in support of the anti-footwashing theory. We are sorry that those who "have professed to receive God, Christ and the Holy Spirit; the law of God, the religion of Christ itself, and nothing else," should refuse to accept all of that law. It may be, though, that they have only "professed to receive God." This we will not dispute. We will now hear the A. C. Review:

"There is no evidence in Scripture, or in any early writing, of any such practice as washing feet in time of worship or associated with, either public or private, as a religious rite, an ordinance, an act of devotion, or in any other way."

No evidence in Scripture of any such practice as washing feet! Is that so? Not exactly so. John has faithfully recorded the practice of the Savior in this respect. Not the practice of somebody else, but the practice of Jesus. It is not enough that the Lord set the "example," and told them to do as he done, but somebody else must write something about it, before we can believe it! Is that the doctrine of Christ? No, verily. We have never found that Christ said, "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you; but don't do it until somebody outside of my chosen apostles has written that my disciples did wash feet." No, not at all! This idea did not originate with God, Christ, or the Holy Spirit, but in the benighted minds of men.

The Review says of Christ's washing his disciples' feet: "This was not in a meeting, nor in the time of worship at all."

Not in a meeting? Had not Christ and the disciples met? Certainly! Then they were in meeting, were they not? Is it so that Christ, after Judas' withdrawal, spake comforting words to his disciples, and uttered his noble prayer to his Father, and yet not worshiping? Eating Supper, washing feet, preaching, and praying,—all in the same room, on the same day, and yet no meeting, no worship? That is too light to have any bearing with those who believe "all things" which Christ said and did.

Again the Review says: "This was not in public at all, but in the private circle." What light this sheds on the subject! The words "private circle" were not at all used by Christ in connection with footwashing, or any other divine ordinance; nor by John in his 13th chapter. They may be found in the A. C. Review, but not in John xiii. Happily the A. C. Review is not John xiii; nor is it any thing like John xiii. If it were, it would shed the same light that is found in John xiii. But we leave the Review's "private circle," for another lesson, and proceed to notice one more of the Review's theories.

"Peter persisted, not against feet washing, but against the Lord washing his feet. 'Thou shalt never wash my feet.' The Lord said, 'If I wash you not you have no part with me.' Any one can see that this special language, applied to a special case, and not to a general law."

Is not, "If I wash you not, you have no part with me" a part of the law of Christ? Does it not teach us a lesson? It does. Does the Lord say to all, "If ye love me keep my commandments?" Are we not to "observe all things whatsoever he has commanded?"

"The Lord did not say to us, 'If I wash you not you have no part with me;' he said it to Peter."

Has the Review learned that species of argument too? "To Peter, not to us." Of course, if the Review sees that nothing can be learned from Christ's language to Peter, except that it was to Peter, then it has also learned that Christ said to the apostles, and not to us, "If I then, your Lord and Master have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet;" said to the apostles, and not to us, "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you;" only said to the apostles, and not to us. "Take this" (the cup), "and divide it among yourselves;" simply said to the apostles, and not to us, "This is my body given for you: this do in remembrance of me." Body of Christ broken for the apostles, not for us! This is the kind of logic set up by anti-footwashers. Do not become impatient, Mr. Review. The logic is yours—of your own peculiar kind. We think you have not learned your lesson on foot-washing very well, so will give you a little rest. In our next, we shall notice the Review's composition on the time when Christ washed his disciples' feet.

Music.

BY DANIEL HAYS.

"The most joyous of joys is Music."

It adds attraction to the family circle. It attracts the young to the home fireside. It affords a charm for leisure hours. It cheers men on in the performance of duty. It lightens the burden of daily labor. The beauty in Music purifies the taste. It calms the wilder passions of human nature. It gives right culture to emotional life.

Music is the gift of God to His creatures. In the creation, the morning stars sang together. The Israelites sang on the banks of the Red Sea. Christ sang with His apostles, and at His birth, the heavenly host sang praises to God. Paul commands the church to sing with the spirit and with the understanding also. In the House of God, Music infuses the spirit of prayer and devotion. It lifts the thoughts heavenward and distracts worldly cares. It encourages the minister, and prepares the congregation for the preaching of the gospel. In the church, Music is a congregational work. All should sing, and that harmoniously. It should be serious; and the sentiment of the hymn should be expressed in appropriate Music.

In singing, one should lead. He should have a fair knowledge of music. He should secure the cooperation of the old and the young. He should use standard congregational tunes—those that have stood the test of time and experience. He should select a medium pitch,—one adapted to the varied vocal powers of a congregation.

The moral power of Music is its sentiment. The beautiful in Music engages the heart. The sentiment in Music enlists the intellect. When clothed in sentiments of truth, purity and goodness, Music controls the mainsprings of moral action. O for more music expressed in words that burn with truth rousing the heart and intellect to right action!

Ministering Spirits.

BY W. R. DEETER.

The writer of the Hebrew letter in speaking of the angels, propounds this important question, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them, who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 14. Those who have not examined the ministry of angels, have little idea of the interest they manifested in the welfare of the children of men, and the many missions they have performed to the children of the Most High.

In the query above, the answer is implied "Are they not all ministering spirits?" Every one would understand at once from the phraseology, that they are all ministering spirits. The phraseology is much like that used by Paul I Cor. 10: 16, "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" Every one understands from the above, that the cup here spoken of and the bread also, are the communion of the blood and body of Christ. Just so in the parallel passage in regard to the angels of God. They are, then, ministering spirits. We will cite a few of the many instances that might be brought forward in which they were used as ministers.

The first is the case of Lot, who was rescued from the destruction of Sodom by two angels. The next case we cite is that of Daniel, when in the den of lions, when asked by Darius, "Is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?" Daniel said, "My God hath sent his angel and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me." Dan. 6: 22. The angel Gabriel was the first to announce the birth of the harbinger of our Saviour to his parents. Luke 1: 11—20. The same angel was sent to Mary and Joseph to announce the conception of the Saviour of the world. Luke 1: 26—38. An angel announced the birth of Christ to the Shepherds, who were watching their flocks by night. Luke 1: 8—12. "And suddenly there appeared with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Luke 1: 13, 14. "An angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, 'Arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word.'" Matth. 2: 13. At the death of Herod, who sought the life of Jesus, the angel appeared again to Joseph, saying, "Arise and take the young child and his mother and go into the land of Israel." Matth. 2: 20. We next call your attention to the angels of the little ones, who believe in Christ. Jesus said, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matth. 18: 10. It was said by the Saviour, Luke 15: 10, "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

An angel of God rolled back the stone from the door of the sepulcher in which Jesus lay, when the pious sisters came to anoint the body of Jesus: and he was the first to preach the resurrection of Jesus.

When the Lord of glory ascended two angels stood by the disciples and comforted them, by telling them, that he would come again. Peter was released from prison by an angel, where he had been thrust to gratify the malignity of an infuriated mob and a treacherous king, being bound to two soldiers, by two chains, was not enough to resist the power of the angel of God, who was at that moment dispatched from heaven for his delivery. David says, The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him. Psalm 34: 7. We are told that when Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven, all the holy angels will come with him and that they will be dispatched to the four quarters of the earth, to gather together his elect. Matth. 25: 31. An angel will lay hold of our adversary, and will bind him with a great chain, and shut him up in the bottomless pit where he shall remain one thousand years. Rev. 20: 1, 2.

Reflection of Time.

BY J. B. G.

The apostle admonishes to walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, &c.

The termination of another year of our lives should induce us to make some reflections, which, though of the utmost importance, do not in general occupy so much of our attention as they ought; that we may feel more sensibly how short is the period of our lives, let us examine how we have passed the days that we have already lived.

How much of this year has been passed in eating, drinking, and sleeping; in taking care of our bodies and providing for our necessities. How much time has been spent in useless talking &c., without any advantage gained for our immortal souls.

How many hours have been passed in uncertainty and inaction and in expectation. Let us make a review of our time, and improve the hours which God does give, the hours that can never be recalled. Time once passed never returns. The moment which is lost is lost forever. How rapidly does the short space that we have to remain upon the earth fly away! Year after year passeth by and we are fast approaching the hour of death.

The night cometh when no man can work. Therefore let us redeem the time and work out our own salvation before it will be forever too late, that the awful hour of death may cause no anguish and fear upon our hearts, but everlasting joy and happiness.

Is Earth Man's Only Abiding Place.

Those who admire the writings of Mr. Geo. D. Prentice will be pleased to read the following extract again; "It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that our life is a bubble cast up by the ocean of eternity to float a moment upon its waves and sink into nothingness. Else why is it that the high and glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, are forever unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and clouds come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then pass off to leave us to muse on their loveliness? Why is it that the stars which hold their festival around the midnight thrones, are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affection to flow back like Alpine torrents upon the heart? We are born to a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars will spread out before us like thro' islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings which pass before us like shadows will stay in our presence forever."

SNOW-FLAKE.

Out of the bosom of the air,
 Out of the cloud folds of her garments shakon,
 Over the woodland brown and bare,
 Over the harvest fields forsaken,
 -Silent, soft and slow
 Descends the snow.

Even as our cloudy fancies take
 Suddenly shape in some divine expression,
 Even as the troubled heart doth make
 In the white countenance confession,
 The troubled sky reveals
 The grief it feels.

This is the poem of the air,
 Slowly in silent syllables recorded;
 This is the secret of despair,
 Long in the cloudy bosom hoarded;
 Now whispered and revealed
 To wood and field.

Limits.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A large proportion of my correspondence is anonymous. Freight with good wishes, and expressions of sympathy, and strong terms of commendation, my friends deem it best to withhold their names. I have a predilection for anonymous letters, although I write none myself. They are generally written in such a spirit and style that I can conscientiously fill out the blank with the signature of Jesus. A few would perhaps be better supplemented with the autograph of Beelzebub. If any one has stones to throw, or a sword to brandish, or a club to swing, please sign your name in full. When I am smitten, I like to know whence the blow comes. I have no armor for my back, and like to face my foe. Eph 6: 13—17.

I am urged by many readers of the "Primitive Christian" to continue writing for your magazine, while not a few vehemently call for more, and some even counsel me to write myself to death: all out of love and zeal for the cause of Christ, I have no doubt. To write more, or continue writing, or write my obituary in advance, depends on circumstances over which I have no control. A river is confined within its banks, and directed by them, no less than a rill. Even the wind, which "bloweth where it listeth,"—the most subtle and sovereign of the natural elements,—has its laws and restrictions in its origin and course, although they may be beyond the scrutiny and supervision of man. Every man has his sphere beyond which he cannot stretch himself. To learn this is wisdom. There are thousands of earnest souls in the Brotherhood, and I almost dare to count myself among them, who would storm the very gates of hell, and rout the hosts of darkness with a single desperate bayonet charge, but within and without they run against the sharp edges of the impossible. One would preach fire down from Heaven, to consume the opposers of evangelization, while another would flood the world in a day with a pentecost of holiness and glory such as the angels never dreamed of. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my ways your ways, saith the Lord." In dealing with law, and moral agents and moral subjects, God does nothing by His direct omnipotence. He does not so much as pick open the most tiny bud, or break the chick's shell, or hand the most insignificant insect out of its egg. And yet He does it all, only not arbitrarily. He waits on the snail as patiently as on the swift errands of Gabriel. Relatively He limits Himself. We are all under limitation for manifold and gracious ends. Even the devil has his tether, and sin issues in results foreign to its nature. Satan is a mighty Samson, and has filled his fiery abyss with countless holocausts of immortal souls; but the greatest damage he ever effected he also sustained, in the dreadful recoil of the Cross upon himself. Could moral revolutions be effected by a word or a stroke, would not the editors of our periodicals send their papers like arrows from God's quiver to the ends of the earth? Would not the types glisten as if fresh from the mould of the Celestial manufactory, and print every letter vital and quivering with the breath of the Holy Ghost? But evangelization has its laws, and these limit our efforts as the beach limits the ocean.

Within these limits it is our duty to tax our time and energies and resources, as God taxed His in the sacrifice of His Second self. Do-nothings are not only a nuisance but a reproach. Sleepy-heads and "slow-bellies" and self-appropriating money-boxes are the scabs and sores and plague-spots on the Mystical Body of Christ. To roll a quid of filth on the tongue is to many sweeter than to read our periodicals, or send the show-bread of the sanctuary to the famishing thousands in this and other lands. Here consecration is not restricted by providential limits, but by the most reprehensible self-idolatry. "Give an account of thy stewardship," will bind us to the limitations of God, and not to the loose, self-pleasing liberty which has no higher law than our lusts and perverted appetites, and greed for temporal acquisitions. There is something terrible in the false estimate of duty which springs from the standard of our corrupt inclinations! Let us all remember the large-lettered inscriptions at the rail-road crossings—"Look out for the Locomotive." "Surely I come quickly: Amen." The track of God's purposes is laid, the mighty engine of His Godhead, to which is attached the whole train of consequences springing from His law, is rushing on with a speed that makes heaven and earth tremble, and will soon reach the appalling Curve where all hell-bound passengers will be hurled over the precipice into "the lake of fire and brimstone," and all the New Jerusalem ticketed will reach their destination amid the plaudits of angels and the welcome of the Triune God. Who has a through ticket to the Metropolis of the Universe? Who is gauging his life by the limits prescribed by the Almighty? or who is idly dreaming of eternal happiness while limiting his means and energies by self-interest? God will "ask His own with usury." "Who is on the Lord's side?"

"SURELY I COME QUICKLY: AMEN." Then the "napkins" will be unfolded, the talents demanded, the limits of the All-wise and All good asserted, and the false trustees of Heaven's property consigned to their everlasting incarceration of despair and self-condemnation.

"SURELY I COME QUICKLY." Can we respond in joyous anticipation, "EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS?"

To return to the opening thought of this article. In writing for the press, and in my private correspondence, I am in many ways under limitation. Physical debility is a stern and painful limitation. Cramped pecuniary resources is another. I write only to the extent that my correspondents furnish me with the means. I want to write no more than the Lord will enable me, and be His amanuensis, even if I have but five words to say.

 Settling Accounts.

BY GEO. K. SAPPINGTON.

Now is the time business men settle up their accounts. Old debts are paid, money is given and received, and the old ledgers, account books, and other business manuscripts, are balanced, then laid away on some secluded shelf to gather the dust of future years and do duty as referees. Now, also, both old and young stop and take time to make good resolutions, then they have from now until next New Year in which to break them. One young man resolves not to drink, another, not to use tobacco, another, not to swear, and still others, not to be idle and loaf around street corners or in country stores, but they mean to be men—hard-working, industrious, noble men.

Few young men but what have made just such good resolutions as these sometime in their life, but alas, how few have kept and lived up to them. And why not? Because some of the tenses of that little verb do are wanting. If we would only have done so and so, we would not be what we are but it is too late now. What we did in 1875 we cannot now undo. We can never again write 1875 above our manuscripts or actions. The year has gone forever and like the wagon trails across the wide prairies of the far west, has left along the way its numerous graves to mark its desolate track. Not only the graves of relatives, benefactors, friends, enemies or strangers, but also some of the graves of our own cherished hopes and aspirations; yes, perhaps some of our dearest friends have been buried, and with them our deepest and warmest affections. Strange that, though we may have reaped plentifully of sorrow and disappointment, yet that wonderful image, Hope, still holds her sway; and no doubt, we hope more ardently to-day than we did last New Year.

Experience tells us that all accounts we have with the world must perish with us; all our fondest hopes, our most ardent longings of worldly grandeur will be buried when we are and in the same grave.

Napoleon, the most ambitious of men, reaped successfully and plentifully of the fruits of his ambition when here on earth, and was called the greatest warrior and conqueror of modern times; but what has he now? An empty name. On the very night he died the star of his glory set forever behind the barren, weather-beaten cliffs of St. Helena; and now the objects of his sublimest actions are no more realized than are those of the humblest private that served under his victorious banners. Why not, then, let us pay a debt we owe to our God? Why not settle an account with our Redeemer that shall stand forever, and thus possess a hope,—an ambition, that shall never perish—the hope of salvation? Let us see what kind of an account we will have to make. We will take the debtor's side first. We are indebted to God for our creation, for our being here on earth. He has given us a body wonderfully made. In it he has placed the mind, or thought, that something with which we can perceive, understand and finally execute those wonderful works which make up the sum of human lives. Last and greatest he has created within us an immortal soul, that spirit which is to live in eternity. Three precious gifts, body, mind and soul. Then he has permitted us to live until now, enjoying freedom and the many privileges of a civilized and christian country. Then we might put down under this, food, raiment, light, and the Bible. But why particularize farther. Let us write down, in the name of sundries, the many other blessings which we daily receive, and, generally, too well-known and common to be appreciated.

Now what can we set down on the creditor's side? What have we done for God that will balance the items on this column? Many, I am sorry to say, have not even returned so much as the poor pittance of thanks. Many have arisen in the morning and gone to bed at night without so much as kneeling down and thanking God that they still live, let alone to acknowledge the many other blessings they have received. Others are luke-warm, and trying to live with the world on one shoulder and Jesus on the other, building their house half on the rock and half on the sand, and when the storm wages they will be almost saved, yet lost. But then, I am happy to say, there are some who are Christians, some who are trying to balance their accounts, trying to let their light shine in the darkness of the world; yes, who strive and pray with all the strength of their soul in their attempt to do right. Yet they have done nothing more than their duty. Though their reward is sure they have done nothing to boast of, because "Jesus paid it all; all to him we owe."

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Alone.

BY JOS. STAYER.

We cannot be accused of exaggeration, successfully, when we assert that there is a world of meaning in this little word. How profitably can an hour, or a few, be spent alone, or, as some would, in solitude, occasionally. It is indeed conducive to the welfare and prosperity of mankind. It is then, and then only, that a man has the sole power of mental concentration. It is when the student is alone that he makes his most rapid progress; when alone he fathoms the depths of science, unravels the mysteries of history, reveals vividly the intricacies of geology. It is when the minister is alone in his study, that he ponders, meditates, and enters deeply into theology; and becomes very conversant with subjects that pertain to "heaven and heavenly things," and subsequently elucidates them from the pulpit with wonderful eloquence and power of expression, and touches the hardest heart, and the populace gaze at him with wonder and awe. Even Christ, while sojourning upon the earth, would flee from among the multitudes, whom he was teaching, into the mountains, where he could be alone, and secretly commune with his Father—the God of heaven. Men can better see the goodness and kindness of God; they can better see the beauty of his creation, and better see into the mysteries of his handi-work, when alone.

Newton was not annoyed by babblers, but was alone, when he discovered the great law of gravitation. Volta and Franklin were respectively alone in the field of electrical science when they made their wonderful discoveries and revealed to the people the cause of lightning and thunder which shakes, at times, the earth almost to its very center. The world-wide known poetical works of Shakspeare, and Byron, and those of their predecessors, as well as those of their successors, were produced by those geniuses—as some absurdly call them—when they were alone: Their different places of resort, or retreat, in combination with their different dispositions, have given rise to the diversity of literature. The President admitted no visitors but was very desirous of being alone when he prepared his last message, one of the most elaborate ever submitted to congress and the people. When the Christian enters his closet, and is alone, then and there goes up a noble prayer to God untaunted by vile thoughts of sensual things.

Light.

BY DANIEL MILLER.

"Where is the way where light dwelleth? and as for darkness, where is the place thereof?" Job 38: 19.

These questions are as old as time itself, but at no time have they carried greater significance than at the present; not that so many have the patience or the righteousness of Job, but because so many have said in the language of Job, "My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go; my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live."

It is not given to man to know the richness and the fullness of the least of those things that God has created, much less to comprehend the glory and splendor of his own attributes; and light must be considered as a part of the Divine Essence, or, at least, coexistent with himself. For in the history of the creation there is a difference of expression between things created and those which had previously existed. Let us examine this point more closely: "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." Gen. 1: 3. The verb let in the first clause of this sentence is in the imperative mode and cannot express an action fully past; but the verb was in the second clause is in the indicative mode imperfect tense and expresses a state of being entirely past; so that light existed even before the creation began. And this fact is sustained by the testimony of St. John in the first chapter of his gospel: "In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehended it not. There was a man sent from God whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe." Then how shall we reconcile this seeming contradiction? or is there a contradiction? If light had existed why should God say, Let there be light? The true meaning of this expression is, Let the existence of Light be made manifest, or, "I exist, and I will cause the attributes of my being to be made known." In order to do this it was necessary to separate that which was good from that which was evil; therefore on the first day "God divided the light from the darkness." Gen. 1: 4. Oh, the magnitude of that first day's work! It was a day of battle and a glorious victory! for "there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was there place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him." Rev. 12: 7-9. And the Son of God "beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." Luke 10: 18, while an exclamation arose "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" Isaiah 14: 12.

Although darkness is forever banished from before the throne of God, yet it is permitted to mingle with light in our earthly home of probation, that we also may achieve a glorious victory and be counted worthy to become the sons of God and joint heirs with Christ, the only begotten of the Father.

Under the law and the Prophets swift retribution often came upon those who allowed themselves to be enticed from the way of light by the rulers of darkness. Of the many instances that might be quoted, one must suffice: "And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods." "And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel." Num. 25: 2, 4. How great was the displeasure of God toward those who had once been seated at his table and had become so unmindful of the great responsibilities resting upon them as to commune with those whose table is only "a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompense unto them." Rom. 11: 9.

Paul also gives some good advice on the same subject, and those who think they can commune with every sect that pretends to be religious will do well to read his words carefully before they attempt to commit so great a sin against light and knowledge: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" 2 Cor. 6: 14, 15. "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21. It is not necessary that those who walk in the light should acquaint themselves with the various modes of keeping the tables of devils, for each one is served according to the whim or fancy of those who are in attendance; but let him learn the requirements of the Lord's table, most of which are given in the 13th chapter of the gospel of St. John and the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians, and he will never be at a loss to know who is on the Lord's side. Christ himself has said: "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." John 3: 19.

But let us turn from the contemplation of the powers of darkness and shake the dust from off our feet that we may enter the realms of light and view the treasures reserved for those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. Let us go with the wise men of the east and gaze upon that star which went before them, till it stood over where the young child was. What a cause for rejoicing! for that was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. May we not hope that the wise men of Denmark may find a single ray of light proceeding from the Star of Bethlehem to the shores of America? and may they return home and say to those who sent them, We have found the church of the Messiah!! Even from his own testimony we are assured; for he has said, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. He is also the way, and the truth, and the life: and no man cometh unto the Father except by him.

Our question is now answered: and we entreat every one to embrace Christ as the way where light dwelleth, and to divide between light and darkness and choose this day whom you will serve. If we prove all things and hold fast to that which is good, we shall see a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth shall have passed away; and we shall see the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And the city has no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God lighteth it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

The Garment and Sword.

BY D. W. GEORGE.

"But, we are asked, 'If wrong for the Christian to use the sword, why did Peter have one?' To this we reply: Peter had none until required to procure one for this particular occasion, and that for the express purpose of exhibiting to all the world, both by precept and example, that the sword can in no case be used by the Christian. In proof of this, call to mind that while it was so important at that time to have a sword that a man was even required to sell his garment and buy one, two swords were ENOUGH (Luke 22: 38) for the object in view.

"Now, the object could not have been to use it against that 'great multitude' of soldiers armed with 'swords and clubs,' for then two would not have been enough. And forbidding his disciples to use them for that purpose he said, 'Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?' And yet if our Lord did nothing in vain, he must have had some object in view.

"So, every reasonable man is compelled to admit, our Lord's object was, by both precept and example, to exhibit as clear as the sun in its moon-day splendor, that celestial law of non-resistance, which draws the line between the people of God and the world, being the law of God to which the carnal mind is not subject, 'neither indeed can be.' (Rom. 8: 7.)

"But some of those whose carnal nature being unable to yield to Christ, try to make the Bible yield to them, say the text, "He that hath no sword let him buy one," shows that we have the privilege of using the sword. To which we answer, since two swords are not enough for all the Christian church, we have positive proof that this was not the object; for whatever the object may have been, one thing is certain "two swords" were "ENOUGH" for the end in view.

"The sword having been drawn under the Mosaic dispensation, it our Lord would, both by precept and example, teach that it must be put up, under the gospel, they must have one to put up; and this being the object in view two were sufficient." (W. C. Thurman, on Non-resistance, pages 41 and 42.) I quote the above in order to set forth the idea that Christ had no reference to 'a copy of the word of God,' as brother Landon West thinks. His article can be found in Companion and Visitor, Vol. 11, No. 49, Page 774.

It is not my object to get up a controversy with brother West, but simply to try to give my understanding of the text. I cannot think that the Lord had any reference to a "copy of the word of God." I think he meant what he said, and said what he meant, and that he had no metaphorical reference to the word sword. His object was, as I think, to give unto his disciples, as well as unto all the world, both precept and example, that as the sword was drawn under the Mosaic dispensation, it was necessary, to accomplish his purpose, that he should command them "to sell his garment and buy one," in order to teach them that important lesson, "resist not evil," as well as to give them the command to put it up, "for all they that smite with the sword shall perish with the sword."

I cannot understand as some do that what caused the Lord to say, "It is enough," was because they misunderstood him, and for this reason said no more about it. Just so that they had one or two swords he could display to his disciples, as well as unto all the world, his wonderful peace principles.

If ever Christians should fight, one time certainly was when the soldiers came to take the Lord. The Lord knowing this he required them to sell their garments and buy a sword; but when they said "here are two," it was "enough" to accomplish his purpose. When they came to take the Lord, those two swords were still enough to accomplish his purpose. He tells them not to use the sword. Hence the command, not to fight for our nearest and dearest friends.

The Saviour's Knockings.

BY AMOS S. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3: 20.

This language of our Saviour addressed through the apostle John to the church of the Laodiceans, we think not only applies to the Laodiceans, but to this and every age. We understand that the Saviour is here represented as standing at the door. What door? The door of the heart. Knocking for admission? Yes; he stands at the door and knocks. But why does he not come in? Because he is not invited, and because the sinner has bolted and barred the door of his heart, and the Saviour cannot come in until the door is open. But how does he knock? By his Spirit, word, and providences; by his faithful ministers; and by his church. Yes; dear fellow traveler to an eternal world, the Saviour knocks loudly by all of these. When you felt the gentle movings of the Holy Spirit striving with you, saying, "Come to Jesus," how he knocked then! and when you followed that mournful procession to the church-yard, and there saw a fellow being consigned to the tomb there to await the resurrection day, then how loudly he knocked at the door of your heart for admittance! When you were summoned to stand around the bedside of some kind friend, or dear relative, and before the spirit took its flight heard him say, "Prepare to meet me in heaven," and then saw his eyes close in death, was not this a very loud knock?

Now dear, unconverted friend, why do you not let this heavenly messenger in? You treat no other friend thus. Suppose you were to go to the house of a neighbor and knock for admission, and knock again and again, and you knew that he was at home and where he could hear you, what conclusion would you arrive at? Would it not be treating you with contempt? Would you not say, "Well, they don't want my company, and I will not trouble them again?" You would not stand there a great while, but would take your departure. Now, dear friend, thus you are treating your best friend—your Creator, Benefactor, and Preserver. Thus you are treating the Son of God, him who died to redeem you, him who was cast into the bloody sweat of Gethsemane, who was spit upon, scourged, crowned with thorns, spiked to the rugged tree to atone for your sins and mine. It is he whom you treat so ill. Beware lest he take his departure and say, "Let him alone he is joined to his idols." Sad indeed must be the condition of one whom the Saviour forsakes thus. Then be warned to flee to the Saviour, whilst he is still knocking, before he takes his departure; for you will notice the position standing, ready to depart. Then open your heart and let the Saviour in, and he will sup with you and you with him. What a glorious supping to sup with Jesus! May God help you to open the door, and may we all meet in heaven to sing his praise forever, is my prayer.

Gems of Thought.

"The infinite reluctance with which God gives up man; that struck me in reading the Book from end to end. The pain, the yearning of God, the moan of a mother, the cry of a broken heart—it was very wonderful. I felt in reading it as if God were putting out both his arms, straining his eyes after me and crying out to me 'Come back!' I cried at some parts of it myself; I forget just now where they were, but I think you will find the tears on the pages here and there even yet. It seemed as if God was saying, 'Image of my countenance, upright like myself, susceptible of immortality, companion of my life, wrecked and shattered, wounded and dying, yet how can I give thee up? Ye were not made for death; Why will ye die?'"

A Christian minister once said, "I was never of any use until I found that God did not make me for a great man. As soon as I found out I was not intended for a great man, I found souls coming into the kingdom." It is not great men we want in the Church of God to-day—it is earnest, warm-hearted men!

We may know that we have fellowship with Christ when he appears to us as one pre-eminently lovely, when his fellowship is coveted; when we mourn any cause of estrangement from him, and when it pains us to see his cause dishonored or his love despised.

For The Young.

A Boy's Faith in God's Word.

My dear little folks, I am going to tell you about something that happened a few weeks ago, near my own home in the North. Perhaps some of you will have heard of the Islands of Orkney. They lie to the north of Scotland, and are surrounded by a very wild sea; sometimes, when the wind blows, the sea lashes itself with a white fury, and tears round the high rocky sides of the islands, tossing up its white foam and shrieking and groaning as if it were very angry indeed. Then the huge columns of spray look like great arms tossing themselves about and waiting to catch anything that comes near them, and suck it away down to the depths where the great fishes and sea-weed lie.

Well, one night, not long before Christmas, a ship was caught in a great storm, and driven upon some sharp rocks, near the shore of Pomona (the largest island in the group of Orkneys,) not many miles distant from where I live. Some fishermen who were near, saw the ship strike, and rushed down to the shore to try to save the poor sailors. But great waves were running in, first rising like glassy green walls, then breaking and tumbling on the beach, boiling and hissing in their fury. The fishermen looked at the waves, then at each other, and they saw that a boat could not float. As they stood silent, and wondering what to do, a great cry came from the ship, and looking round, they saw that part of her stern had broken off and was sinking very fast.

Then these brave Orkney men ran for a boat; they could not bear to see the poor sailors die, and would rather risk their own lives than not try to save them. They pushed the boat into the water and jumped into it. But a great wave lifted the boat up, and then threw it down, down, down, and it was upset flinging the men into the sea. With great difficulty they reached the shore. Twice again they tried to launch the boat, without success.

At last the sailors on board the ship managed, by means of a rocket, to throw a rope to the men on the beach, who made it fast; and the poor sailors crept along it, one by one, and so were saved all but the captain, who went down by the stern of the ship, and one little boy named Jack, who refused to venture on the rope. The poor little fellow was afraid to trust himself to such a frail looking thing as the swinging cord, with nothing but the raging waves beneath. The kind sailors begged him to try, telling him if he did not he would certainly be drowned before morning; but he steadily refused. They all said, "Good-by," very sadly, and left little Jack to his fate.

Next morning, when the sailors and fishermen awoke, they saw part of the ship still above the water, and, as the storm had abated, they took a boat and put off to the wreck to see what they could save. Upon entering the cabin what was their surprise and joy to see little Jack sleeping peacefully in his bunk; they roused him, and he sat up, exclaiming,—

"You have come to take me ashore, have you not? I knew you would be sent."

"But we were not sent," said the men. "What do you mean, Jack? Who sent us? And how did you know we would be sent?"

"Why? Does not the Bible say, 'Ask and ye shall receive?'" So last night I asked God to bring me safe to land, and I knew if I believed, He would do what I asked. I did believe, and now He has sent you for me."

The sailors brought Jack ashore. On hearing the story of the wreck I went to see the men, and offer what assistance I could. I asked Jack if he was not afraid to remain in the sinking ship alone.

"Oh, no, sir!" he said, simply, "I knew that God would take care of me there as well as in my own home."

And you see, my dear little folks, He did take care of the boy who loved and trusted Him; and will he not take care of you if you love and trust Him, too?—Churchman.

How Grace Transmutes.

Take an ounce of the blackest slime of a beaten footpath on a rainy day, near a manufacturing town. That slime we shall find in most cases composed of clay (or brick-dust, which is burnt clay,) mixed with soot, a little sand and water.

Let us suppose that this ounce of mud is left in perfect rest, and that its elements gather together, like to like, so that these atoms may get into the closest relations possible. Let the clay begin. Ridding itself of all foreign substances, it gradually becomes a white earth, already very beautiful, and fit, with the help of congealing fire, to be made into finest porcelain, and to be kept in kings' palaces. But such artificial consistence is not its best. Leave it still quiet to follow its own instinct of unity, and it becomes not only white, but clear; not only clear, but hard; not only clear and hard, but so set that it can deal with light in a wonderful way, and gather out of it the loveliest blue rays only; refusing the rest. We call it then a sapphire.

Such being the consummation of the clay, we give a similar permission of quiet to the sand. It also becomes, first a white earth, then proceeds to grow clear and hard, and at last arranges itself into mysterious, infinitely parallel lines, which have the power of reflecting, not merely the blue rays, but the blue, green, purple, and red rays, in the greatest beauty in which they can be seen through any hard material whatever. We call it an opal.

Next in order the soot sets to work. It cannot make itself white at first; but instead of being discouraged, it tries harder and harder, and comes out clear at last, and the hardest thing in the world; and, for the blackness that it had, obtains in exchange the power of reflecting all the rays of the sun at once, in the vividest blaze that any solid thing can shoot. We call it then a diamond.

Last of all, the water purifies or unites itself, contented enough if it only reaches the form of a dew-drop; but if we insist on its proceeding to a more perfect consistence, it crystallizes in the shape of a star.

And for the ounce of slime which we had . . . we have a sapphire, an opal, and a diamond set in the midst of a star of snow.

If such beautiful and glorious transformations can take place in mere matter, through the ordinary operation of the law which God has appointed, what will the transformation be in man, who has a soul and an intellect as well as a body, and on whose behalf God has interposed, and will yet interpose, in so mighty and marvelous a manner?—Ruskin's Ethics of the Dust.

Helping the Minister.

"One thing helped me very much while I was preaching to-day," said a clergyman.

"What was that?" inquired a friend.

"It was the attention of a little girl, who kept her eyes fixed on me, and seemed to try to understand every word, said. She was a great help to me."

Think of that, my little ones; and when you go to church or chapel, fix your eyes on the minister, and try to understand what he says, for he is speaking to you as well as to grown up people. He is telling about the Lord Jesus, who loves the little ones.—Missionary Echo.

CROSSES IN THE LIFE OF ALL.

"A widow lady was almost in despair from the variety of hindrances, relaxation, and disappointments she had to endure. She was quite overwhelmed with her domestic crosses and had scarcely the heart to go on with her daily conflicts.—'No other roof,' she complained, 'is so constantly beset with misery as mine.'—She had no idea that any neighbor of hers was half so crossed as herself, judging, as she did, from outward appearances. But it pleased God to teach her a lesson through the instrumentality of a dream, which was the wholesomest medicine of which she could have partaken. One night she dreamed that a whole town stood before her, and every house in it bore a cross against its door; on one it was a very large one; on the next it was of less size, and on others, though they were very few, it was but a small one.—

Among all the crosses, however, none appeared so inconsiderable and light to carry as that at her own door. She awoke a new creature. What she had seen she understood; and she recollected Christ's saying, 'If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.' She fell down upon her knees at once, and prayed to God to pardon her for her complaining, murmuring, and repining spirit, and besought him to release her from it, and fill her with a spirit of patience, submissiveness, and content with his orderings. And she implored him also to endow her with his strengthening grace, to bear her cross, which from that hour forward she found to be light, as compared with the cross her own weakness had given her to bear. 'Yes,' she exclaimed, 'I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me,' for his yoke is easy and his burden is light."

Such is the recorded experience of a female believer. And her experience is that of many others. Every disciple of Jesus has his crosses to bear. Our Lord said, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple."—Luke xiv. 27. "In my flesh," said Paul, "dwells no good thing." And while there is no good in the flesh, there is much evil in it, "for the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other." Gal. v. 17. And as the flesh lusts against the spirit, such lusts are evil and cannot lawfully be gratified. So they must be mortified or crossed.—And this crossing or opposing what is wrong, is implied in the word cross. So our own fallen natures are a fruitful source of crosses, and we bear this source of trouble with us all the time. And in addition to the crosses we have which spring from our own corrupt natures, and which come from within us, there are others which come from sources and circumstances without us. So none of us can expect to be Christians and have no crosses to bear. But from the circumstance that many of our habits and dispositions are averse to the precepts and principles of the holy law of Christ, and also from the circumstance that the world in which we live, and by which we are surrounded, lies in wickedness, we may expect to meet with a number of crosses in our Christian course, from the time we commence it until we reach the goal of our race.

But let us not think that we have more from our share, or that our crosses are more annoying or more heavy than those of our fellow-Christians, and thus become discouraged. We only know, experimentally, our own trials and crosses. We may think that our Christian brother's life is beset with less difficulties and crosses than our own, but in this we may be very much mistaken. We know not his struggles with sin, nor the trials and crosses that often embitter his life. Did we know them, we should not, by any means, envy him his position, as we may sometimes in moments of despondency and temptation be led to do, imagining his crosses and trials to be less than our own, and his position in life much more desirable than ours.

It is common for each person to think that his own crosses and trials in life are more difficult to bear and endure than his brother's. And the erroneous character of this sentiment is very forcibly exposed in one of Addison's papers in the Spectator, and which will be found in one of our old school-books, the Sequel to the English Reader. The title of the paper is, "Endeavors of mankind to get rid of their burdens." The writer, while reflecting upon a thought of Socrates, "that if all the misfortunes of mankind were cast into a public stock, in order to be equally divided among the whole species, those who now think themselves the most unhappy, would prefer the share they are already possessed of before that which should fall to them by such a division," represents himself as falling into a sleep and dreaming. He heard Jupiter make a proclamation that every mortal should bring in the causes of his griefs and troubles, and throw them together in one common heap, in a large plain. The suffering heard with pleasure the proclamation, and hastened to relieve themselves of their troubles. Fancy was busy in helping the suffering to gather up everything that they considered an evil. One relieved himself of his poverty; the luggage of another was found to contain his wife; old persons were seen to throw down their wrinkles, and young ones the things that detracted from their beauty. Diseases formed a large part of the heap, but more of them were imaginary than real. But vices and follies were not thrown down, as if they did not constitute a cause of suffering.

After all had delivered themselves of their calamities, Jupiter issued a second proclamation, giving every one liberty to exchange his cause of affliction and to return to his home with whatever new trouble he might get in exchange for his old one. Fancy was again busy in offering her services to all who were making their selections. An old gentleman who had the misfortune to be without an heir, exchanged some bodily disease for an undutiful son which had been thrown down in the heap by an angry father. But the old gentleman who had taken the graceless youth in exchange for the disease he had laid down, soon discovered the exchange was not at all to his advantage, and he begged the father to take his son again, and give him back his disease.

The heap being distributed among both sexes, a piteous sight was presented. Murmurs, complaints and groans indicated great distress and dissatisfaction. And Jupiter finally taking compassion on the suffering multitude, made another proclamation, ordering all to lay down their troubles, to give them an opportunity of taking up their own again. This they did with a great deal of pleasure. Fancy was now prevented from interfering, and Patience took her place, when the whole heap soon became greatly reduced, as she returned to every man his own trouble which he first possessed, with some instruction how to bear it in the best manner. All left apparently well satisfied that they were not left to their own choice in regard to the particular kind of trouble that fell to their lots.

In view of the fact that we all have our crosses and troubles, and that it is altogether likely that we can bear those which fall to our own lot, and to which we have become somewhat accustomed, better than we could those of another, we should not murmur or become impatient at our own condition, or envy the happiness of another. No one can form a correct judgment of another's happiness or sufferings.

And let us not forget that crosses may be necessary in the discipline we need to wean us from the world, to mortify sin, and to further the work of grace in us.

"If loving hearts were never lonely,
If all they wished might always be,
Accepting what they looked for only,
They might be glad, but not in Thee.

"We need as much the cross we bear,
As air we breathe, and light we see;
It draws us to thy side in prayer,
It binds us to our strength in Thee."

THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN FOR THE POOR OF THE CHURCH.

As usual we have numerous requests for our paper from members of the church who represent themselves as being too poor to pay for it, and yet are very anxious to have the advantage of reading it. We confess it is very hard for us to refuse the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to any who express a desire to have it when they plead poverty as the cause which compels them to decline to take it. And we therefore are sending it to a considerable number of this class. But we feel that we cannot by any means afford to send it to all of the poor that would like to have it, and who should have it. All who properly value and enjoy a Christian journal, will appreciate the feelings of our poor brethren and sisters who are deprived of the edification derived from such a source, and will also sympathize with them.

As we cannot afford to send the PRIM-

ITIVE CHRISTIAN to that class of our brethren whose spiritual interests we are considering, they must forego the edification of reading it, unless those who are able to do so, will help furnish the means to pay for it. This we hope those in good pecuniary circumstances, will do. We should like to have the double pleasure of receiving donations for the purpose under consideration, and of sending our paper to the poor who much desire to have it. Can we not raise a fund for this purpose? Brethren and sisters, please give this subject a thought. We will acknowledge any contributions made for this purpose in our paper.

We would further suggest to our friends who take an interest in the wants of the poor, and who send in their names to us, that in cases in which the applicants cannot pay all, but can pay a part, have them pay whatever they feel able to pay. And we hope with a becoming degree of economy, and self-denial in the mere luxuries of life on the part of our poor brethren and sisters, and with a becoming liberality on the part of our wealthy brethren and sisters, that all the poor that are anxious to have the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, can obtain.

NO MORE FUNDS.

The amount of funds from the Forney legacy, which we proposed to appropriate to the supplying of a certain class of persons with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, is exhausted, and consequently, we can supply no more from that source. We are sorry that we cannot continue to receive subscribers upon the charity fund of brother Forney, as the applications are many; but we are now supplying quite as many as the amount we have to dispose of will permit. We hope the funds supplied by the liberal donor for the dissemination of Christian truth, will be productive of good.

THE NATIONAL PROTESTANT.

We have received the first number of the second volume of the National Protestant. It is devoted to the cause of Protestantism, and in opposition to that of Roman Catholicism.—The course it proposes to pursue, is fair and liberal. The following sentiments occur in one of its editorials: "We stand ready to criticise, denounce, and expose anything we consider erroneous on the part of Protestants, as readily as, if not more so than, on the part of Roman Catholics. We are opposed to Roman Catholicism upon principle, not from prejudice, and as journalists we deem it our duty, as no one will deny it is our privilege, to advocate and expound our own theories and conclusions in regard to it. We propose handling the important question in all its bearings—morally, socially, and politically—and shall endeavor to be prepared to meet the issues arising from its agitation as they may come up." Price one dollar per year.—Single copy, ten cents. Address, NATIONAL PROTESTANT, Box 4961, N. Y.

"OUR HOME FRIEND."

This is the title of a very neat youth's paper of eight pages. It is designed for the Sunday-school, day-school, and home circle. The number before us is filled with reading matter adapted to the character and design of the paper. A three-cent stamp will secure a sample copy. The subscription price is 50 cents a year. Address, PETER HUGH STAUFFER, Milford Square, Bucks county, Pa.

"THE YOUNG DISCIPLE."

From a press of business we have failed to notice the Young Disciple, a juvenile paper, edited by sister W. A. Clark, and published at the office of the Pilgrim.—The first number is very well got up, and filled with good reading matter. We hope our young sister appreciates the responsibilities and difficulties of the work she has assumed, and by the grace of God will be prepared to meet them. The difficulties referred to are those to be overcome in adapting and simplifying the truth, to the understanding of the minds of children. We hope our sister will succeed both in making her paper remunerative to herself, and useful to the interesting class of readers for which it is designed. For terms, &c., see advertisement in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Cleanings and Jottings.

BROTHER C. Hope, in a letter dated, Hatfield, Pa., Jan. 10th, 1876, says: "Inform your readers that we do not start to Europe on the 15th inst., being detained by sickness, my wife and child being both sick. If God permit, we will take the next steamer about the 21st or 22nd inst. We find the brethren all in earnest in the cause; and we are becoming bound to our dearly beloved brethren more and more, by the bond of love. Remember us in your prayers."

BROTHER M. J. Thomas, Sandy Creek church, Preston county, W. Va., Jan. 8th, 1876, gives the following sad occurrence:

"Yesterday morning, about 3 o'clock, the dwelling of our beloved brother James A. Ridenour was burned with all her furniture, clothing and bedding; and he himself was so badly burned, that he is now under medical treatment, and perhaps be a cripple for life, both hands and face being dreadfully burned. It is not known how the house caught fire, but is generally supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Our unfortunate brother was still in debt for his little farm and has a large family of small children, now without clothing—hatless and shoeless. They saved nothing from the flames but the clothing they had on after they had retired, and with much difficulty was the family saved from being burned up.

The brother and most of the family slept on the second floor, and a few of them in a back room below. About the time named he awoke and discovered that there was something wrong below. He got up and went down; and on opening the stair door, he saw that the front and main room was all ablaze and full of smoke. Now no way of escape was left, but to leap from the second floor through a window, or through the flames in the room.—He made a leap toward the door, but failing to find it, he, with much difficulty, finally got out through a window. As soon as he could speak, he called to them above, and through the aid of a school teacher then boarding there, the family was let down outside through a window. So all were saved. Brother Rideour is an able and worthy minister. To-day the neighbors and citizens at Salem meeting-house, clothed the family which is now staying with friend George Sees, a near neighbor; and made arrangements to go right to work and build a house and supply their wants. He is truly in destitute circumstance; but we have a generous people, helping with a liberal hand, and warmly sympathizing with the suffering family. May the Lord remember them in their troubles and trials, and sustain our dear brother in his suffering condition."

BRO. A. H. SNOWBERGER, Majenica, Ind., Jan. 9th, says :

I will give you a little news from the Salem congregation, in Indiana. We commenced a series of meeting in our meeting-house at Lancaster, on New Year's evening, and closed to-day.—Brethren David Yonnee, from northern Indiana, and Stephen Bashor, from Mo., were with us. We had sixteen sermons preached. The brethren labored with power and effect. During the week, 21 precious souls were made willing to forsake sin, were immersed, and took the name of Jesus upon them. They were all young persons, all females but three.—Among them were only seven married persons. Two formerly belonged to the New Light church. May the Lord give them all grace to be faithful members and to adorn their profession to his honor and glory. The church was much revived and we hope the good effects of the meeting may be felt many days hence. The roads were almost impassable with mud, but we had large audiences, especially at night."

BRO. S. A. WLAKER, Bloomville, Ohio, Dec. 23rd, says :

"I am sorry to say that church matters in this arm appear to be somewhat retrogressive. Perhaps more than one reason might be assigned therefor. Some have changed localities, but possibly the true cause is a lack of real Christian zeal on the part of all. May God revive his work."

From brother S. R. Holsinger, Carleton, Neb., we have the following :

"We are enjoying a very pleasant winter thus far. We have not had a bit of snow, and but very little frost in the ground. I have no special church news to communicate at present, with the exception of a visit to this place by brethren Wm. Lugenbeel, Cheesman, and Monroe, all from Republic county, Kansas. They gave us four good and interesting meetings; had a good turn out and very good attention. We thank the dear brethren for their labor of love among us. May the good Lord make them useful in his good work, and finally richly reward them with eternal life, is our prayer."

FROM different sources we learn that brother J. W. Stein was, for several weeks past, laboring earnestly and very acceptably in northern Illinois. He has now left for his old home in Virginia. Sister Stein is with him. We wish them a pleasant visit, and hope to hear that it may not only be pleasant to them, but beneficial to their old friends and neighbors. We should be pleased to have them stop with us on their way homeward. B.

C. Engle of Dayton, Ohio asks for the address of brother Riley of South California. Perhaps some of our readers can give the desired information.

ONE of our agents, after sending a number of subscriptions, says.

"I still expect to obtain some more subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. There are so many that could subscribe, but they plead hard times; yet they can afford to use the obnoxious weed, tobacco. There might be much more said, but I refrain. I wish you success in the good cause of spreading gospel news in your valuable paper. May the good Lord give you all the required wisdom and help to conduct it according to his holy will."

Perhaps many who use tobacco feel too poor to pay for the paper; but it is certainly not with very good grace that they plead "hard times" as an excuse for not subscribing. Very moderate tobacco users pay from five to ten dollars a year,—and many pay from fifteen to twenty-five dollars, for this purpose. How such can plead "hard times" we can understand; but how they can conscientiously refuse to take a religious journal we cannot comprehend. Sound reason would say that they ought to do without the former instead of the latter. B.

BROTHER A. M. T. MILLER, Marshalltown Iowa. Dec. 28th, writes: "Our winter is unusually warm and soft; so much so that the streams have not been frozen over yet. Health is good."

BROTHER J. D. TROSTLE, of Linganore, Md., Dec. 29th, 1875, says :

Brethren Wm. How and Archy VanDyke, are with us at this time. They have been faithful in comforting the saint and warning the sinner; and we feel assured that their labors will not be in vain, although our meetings have not been so largely attended in consequence of wet weather and unpleasant roads, which have become very bad. It has rained every day, more or less, since the 25th, and no prospect yet of clearing off. They leave here January 1st, 1876, for the Pipe Creek church, where they will spend a few days, and then go to Cumberland county, on the fourth, to spend a few days. We cherish the hope that their labors will be blessed with the best of results, as well as the many other efforts put forth for the promotion of the cause of Christ."

BROTHER THURSTON MILLER, Warren Center Ind., Dec. 29th, 1875, says :

"Old Portage Prairie congregation still survives, notwithstanding her silence in the columns of our periodicals. We are still trying to do battle against Satan and his allies, and hope to conquer through Jesus Christ our Lord. The ark of God is still moving slowly, although for a season it had seemed to stand. For some time since we have contemplated holding a series of meetings, and now all arrangements are made to commence, the Lord willing, on Sunday Jan. 2nd. All anticipate a glorious feast of good things; and the one united prayer from all concerned is, "Lord, revive us;" and when that prayer is realized, then will stubborn hearts melt and yield, the church prosper, and God our Father glorified."

BROTHER CONRAD FITZ, Astoria, Ills., under date of Dec. 22nd, 1875, says :

We held our lovefeast meeting October 14th and 15th. Had a full house and good order. Previous to our feast there were added to the church four souls by baptism; and since that time, one reclaimed. The church appears to be in a prosperous condition. John Fitz who was formally the elder here, has moved to Iowa, and is succeeded in the office by elder David Miller, who is very zealous in his Master's cause. May the Lord be his wisdom and strength."

SOME brother who signs himself a lover says :

"In Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor, No. 47, page 741, a writer in his article headed "Wonderful," says, "The Lord of glory became a felon." Dear editor; such language should not be published, and the writer should be taught that a felon is a criminal, and "felony a crime punishable with death." So says Webster. Calling the Lord a "felon" is a violation of two of the restrictions of No. 3 of "Special Notices" in the same number: (a) "Personal character must be respected, and (b) bitter and unkind words must not be used."

Well, perhaps we should not have published it, but we did not understand it just as "A Lover" does. Paul says, in speaking of Christ, that he was made "to be sin for us;" and, in another place, that he was "made a curse for us." We understood the author to use the term "felon" as Paul uses the terms "sin" and "curse." B.

"WHAT is wrong that my paper does not come?" So say several of our subscribers. The fact is, a great many did not heed our earnest solicitations to send in their subscriptions early; and, in consequence, their names were not on our books, and some are not on yet. The best we can do for you now is to send your paper as soon as we can, and ask you to have patience. B.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

OVER HILL, Upshur Co., W. V., }
Nov. 22nd, 1875.

To the General Brotherhood—Greeting:

I have just returned from a mission of love to the western part of this State visiting and holding meetings with the brethren in Ritchie and Wirt counties. I found all well, generally, and doing well, with the exception of our much beloved brother, Martin Cochran, whose case is the cause of my writing to-day.—By reference to No. 36 of last volume you will find an article written by brother John Friedley, concerning the great loss of brother Cochran, whose entire mill with all its machinery, was swept away by water, on the 1st day of Aug., 1875. Thus he lost his life labor. Who can imagine the feelings of the brother on being awakened about daylight by the alarm, given by his two little sons, who had been sleeping in the carding room, that the mill was going. When his sons awoke the mill had moved about a foot from its foundation. The water was then up in the second story. They made their escape by means of a bridge that had lodged against the mill. The hand of the Lord was there in awakening those sleeping boys, to let them return to gladden the hearts of their parents, who said to me while with them, that though their troubles were great, yet the Lord was with them in giving back to them their children, whose tender lives were exposed to a watery grave. Who can not shed a sympathizing tear? I visited this kind family last fall, and found them in a prosperous condition; but on returning this fall, I had to shed tears.

Beloved brethren and sisters, tears alone will not restore their loss. Brother Martin needs help. If he does not get it, he never can rebuild; for all except his house was swept away, and it was not all paid for. He lost about all his summer's work of wool carding. His account-book was swept away, and hence he has nothing to help himself with. At the time the mill went, they had not bread enough in the house for breakfast. One of his sons is making their bread by working in a blacksmith shop; his wife is knitting for people to get shoes and boots for them. So the brethren told me while there. Brother Martin is cleaning out the mill race, which is greatly cavled in; intending to put in a little corn mill to make their bread with, while he will make an effort to replace his engine and carding machine. Brother Cochran had steam power attached to his mill, so that in time of dry weather he could grind and also card wool. He says if the brethren would help him to five hundred dollars, it would enable him to repair his engine and carding machine, which were torn to pieces and scattered down the river for miles, and some he never found. The engine was washed about half a mile and lodged in an orchard. Brother Cochran has no disposition to beg, but wishes the brethren to lend him five hundred dollars and give him time to pay it back. This would enable him to start his cards; then he soon, with good luck, would be able to help himself, as he has a large custom. Brethren, I think it is our duty to help him. I would propose that each housekeeper lay this matter before his arm of the church. Let us all, brethren and sisters, donate something. Who is it that cannot give five or ten cents, or even fifty cents, or one dollar? A great many could give ten times this much and not miss it. Just think! Brother Cochran's loss is about six thousand dollars. After each housekeeper has canvassed his territory and got all that will to donate something free, then see if there are any who will lend brother Martin some money on reasonable terms. None need fear to lend to him, for he is a man of truth and honesty. So say his congregation, and we have every reason to believe it is so. My proposition is, for each housekeeper to get up a subscription list: then let all subscribe what they feel able to give, and then let it be paid in payments.

Now, brethren, do not read this and then pass it by and forget it; but let it have a place in your hearts. In the language of Jesus, "What thou doest, do quickly."

I yet would say, that brother Cochran had a good two-horse team, and one of his horses is dead, leaving him but one horse to work. Money should be sent by postal money order or registered letter, or by express or draft, to Martin Cochran, Pennsborough, Ritchie Co., W. Va., and acknowledgment of the same will be made through our periodicals.

Written by request of the Rock Camp congregation, in which brother Cochran is a minister in the second degree.

DAVID J. MILLER.

Appeal.

We, the brethren of the Swan Creek church, met in council on the 25th day of Dec., 1875. After preliminary business matters were adjusted, the following question was put to the meeting: Are the brethren of this arm of the church willing to appeal to our next District Meeting composing the north-western district of Ohio, to select one or two brethren, sound in the faith, to serve one year as evangelists to preach in and along the the suburbs of the above-named district, and to pay their proportion toward the support of these evangelists. Unanimously agreed.

We, therefore, the brethren of the Swan Creek church make this appeal to the elders composing the north-western district of Ohio, to counsel their members on this important subject, and to instruct their delegates to report at above-named District Meeting, so that said meeting may take steps toward spreading the gospel. Brethren, a noble work has been started in Ill; let us keep the good work moving; let us put our shoulders to the Gospel ship, and help to spread the glad tidings to parts where the pure doctrine is almost unknown, and so fulfill the commission, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," &c.

By order of the church.

LENA, Ills., Jan. 7th, 1876.

Brother James:

Permit me to say, that after some weeks of constant labor in response to a call from the brethren in northern Illinois, I feel a little refreshed from a few days' rest with the dear brethren and sisters at this point. We intend to leave on the 10th inst., for our old homes in Virginia, but expect to stop a few days with brother Abram Cassel, near Philadelphia, on the way. Any letters may reach us in care of brother B. F. Moomaw, Bonsacks, Roanoke county, Va. We are reconciled to our absence from the West a few months in consideration of promises of returned labor from dear brethren who live east, which I trust will refresh both their souls and ours.—Our companionship with the beloved brethren and sisters in Illinois has been sweet and refreshing.

J. W. and LETTIE A. STEIN.

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 26, 1875.

This has been a most delightful day.—In fact the last month has been one uninterrupted spell of pleasant weather, almost like October. One can hardly realize that it is winter; but the leafless trees and the calendar tell us it is so.—Christmas for 1875 is past. In this city it was observed with much ado in many respects. The money spent for Christmas presents and in feasts was immense. The day instead of being spent in a way fitting to the memory of the great Author of Christianity, is, I fear, spent in a way abominable in the sight of God—that is, in a great measure. Carnal feasting and revelry is the rule, while charitable deeds and acceptable worship, I fear, are the exceptions.

To day, while taking a stroll through the streets and enjoying the bright and pleasant sunshine, I dropped into one of the gorgeous temples of worship,—of the Baptists. Their Sunday-school was just commencing. There was a large attendance of children, and an earnestness of purpose seemed to characterize their work. The subject of feet-washing was brought up. The leading ideas derived from the subject were: Christ washed his disciples' feet to teach us charity, humility, and love; but that the fruits of charity, humility, and love are obedience to the Savior's commands, was never so much as hinted at. It is passing strange that so many will acknowledge the necessity of the heart being imbued with these excellent characteristics of the religion of Jesus, and at the same time disannul the command given to test our love and charity. This command is heard and taught to the children, not to do it, but to leave it undone; notwithstanding it is those that hear his sayings and do them that shall be blessed. One idea expressed in the general remarks of the Superintendent struck me as being rather peculiar. He told the children to particularly remember the words, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." The idea was this: If Jesus washeth not with the washing of regeneration no one can have part with him. Thus the literal act of feet-washing it is designed to use, for argument's sake, entirely out of its legitimate sense. If this is not wresting the Scriptures to one's destruction I know not what is. One says "to be born of water and of the Spirit" has nothing to do with water baptism, and here the Baptist would say, "If I wash thee not," has no allusion to the washing of Peter's feet. "Oh, consistency—thou art a jewel!"

While speaking of the religious element here I would remark that this city is well supplied with churches, and others are in course of erection. The most prominent is the Central Presbyterian, which will cost about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—the building alone—and the furniture and fixtures probably $25,000 more.

There are also some very costly buildings going up of a charitable nature. One is "Home for the Homeless;" another, the "Inebriate Asylum."

The Constitutional Convention is now in session here. The object is to frame a Constitution for the State of Colorado, that is to take her place in the arena of the United States of America next 4th of July. Coming into the family of a mother 100 years old, Colorado will be "Christened the Centennial State of America."

J. S. FLORY.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Dec. 28, 1875.

Dear Brother:

I have made an effort to get the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN introduced into several new homes, and have succeeded in getting a few names; and I still intend to make further efforts to get others to try it, believing that if they take it one year, they will be induced to subscribe for it in the future. The inducement I hold out to parents to get them to take the P. C. is the benefit to their sons and daughters, as well as to themselves. It is natural for young people to want something new to read.—Then why not make a united effort to have the doctrine of the Brethren, which is the doctrine of the Bible, which is the doctrine of the Lord, fully introduced into every household. As all families have neighbors, who by a little persuasion might be induced to lend a helping hand to forward a work of such vital importance, by making all the exertion in our power, we can increase the circulation of the Brethren's literature, which will probably be the means of having our numbers in the church multiplied. Then as this is a noble work and a noble cause, let us engage in it with a noble heart, in the fear of God, knowing that our reward will be glorious in the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

Yours in love,

ABRAM CRUMPACKER.

Mission to Canada.

December 29th, 1875.

Brother James Quinter, Greeting:

By request of our brethren in the States, we feel it our duty to give some account of ourselves. It is through the mercies of a kind God, our heavenly Father, that we are permitted this morning to pen these few lines of love on British soil. We can say this morning that we are well, for which we feel very thankful to God.

We left our homes in Ohio, Stark and Wayne counties, Dec. 22nd, and met at Orville. Brother M. Weaver not being very well, we lay over until next morning; then took cars at 7 a. m. for Cleveland; thence to Buffalo. We arrived at Buffalo at 7 p. m. Brother Weaver did not feel able to go on. So we lay over till next morning, when he felt some better. Thence we struck for the Niagara Falls. Here we beheld the wonderful works of God. Thence we took cars for Canada shore. Arrived at Hamilton at 4 p. m. This is a city of thirty five thousand inhabitants, lying between Lake Ontario and Bason Hill. Here we staid all night. Next day we took cars for Berlin, Waterloo county. This was now Saturday evening. Here we were directed to a man by the name of Jacob Sehantry, where we were cordially received.

The next day, Sunday, 26th, our friend Sehantry took us to a Mennonite church in Berlin. This is a town of about three thousand inhabitants. Here we commenced our labors of preaching. From this our friend took us back to his house, where he had preaching appointed for us that evening. Here the warm lovers of truth made arrangements for us for preaching, and before the congregation dispersed they announced 7 or 8 appointments at different churches of different denominations. Now the field is opened to us, and still more appointments made. To-day we have two meetings.—We also have an offer of a very large meeting-house belonging to the Mennonites, to hold a protracted meeting. If we both keep well we think we will commence that meeting next week.

Now in conclusion we will say to our dear brethren and sisters, that we ask of you to be sincerely engaged in prayer to God in our behalf, that the word of God may have free course to the hearts of sinners, so that many may be brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God. Our love to you all; especially to our dear families which we have committed to the care and keeping of God, who is able to preserve them to life eternal.

We have very pleasant weather; no snow that amounts to anything.

Z. B. SHOEMAKER,
M. WEAVER.

MASSILLON, O., Dec. 27, 1875.

I feel like penning a few lines for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as a warning to those that have considerable money lying in their houses. One of the boldest and most fearless robberies ever perpetrated in this neighborhood occurred near East Greenville, on the night of the 14th. About midnight a wagon containing four men was driven to the residence of Jacob Imboden, an old and wealthy farmer of Tuscarawas township. They went quietly to the rear of the house, and opening a window, went in and upstairs to the room of Philip Imboden, a brother of Jacob's, and seized an old and heavy chest and pulled it across the floor. The noise awoke Philip, who turned over in bed, when he was set upon by the robbers and beaten into unconsciousness. Leaving him nearly dead, the robbers again seized the chest and slid it down stairs, making considerable noise, which awoke Jacob Imboden, his wife, and wife's sister, who occupied other apartments in the building. But before they could collect their scattered senses and muster up courage enough to inquire into the racket, the robbers had coolly opened the front door and walked off with the chest, which contained nearly eight hundred dollars in money and a lot of notes. The chest was carried a short distance from the house, opened, rifled of its contents, and thrown over the fence into the orchard, where it was found the next day. The robbers drove directly south. Mr. Imboden got several neighbors together and followed after unknown to the robbers. They drove several miles south, then turning east to this place, they were watched so closely that in a few days they had plenty of evidence to warrant the arrest of three men of this place. The first man that the officers arrested had in his possession over one hundred dollars of the stolen money, and of course he was calabossed. The next man, when the officers called, was not at home, but after a short time he came home with a large turkey over his shoulder. In reply to a question by officer Seaman, he said he had stolen the bird and wasn't going hungry by considerable. But in place of helping to devour the bird, he was locked up in the calaboose, where turkey roasts are not fashionable. The third man is also in the city prison; but the fourth, after getting his share of the plunder, left the city last week, and the probabilities are, that he will escape arrest and punishment, which he doubtless richly deserves. The three men are now in the Canton prison awaiting their trial. LEVI KITTINGER.

A Fatal Accident

Happened in the Mohican church, Wayne county, Ohio, on the 21st of Dec., 1875, by which our friend George Elson lost his life without a moment's warning. The circumstances were about as follows: He had stored about 400 bushels of wheat away in a bin, or granary, in an old barn. The timber, being decayed, he thought there was danger of its breaking down. The floor was about five feet from the ground. He took his ax and went to the barn, it is supposed, to put some posts under the bin to make it more secure.—His wife went out after a while and found the bin broken down. The neighbors were soon collected, and they removed the debris and wheat, and found the body having been caught by the falling timbers and covered with 2 feet of wheat. The deceased was the son of our brother and sister Thomas and Anne Elson; was a member of the Evangelical Association, (Albrights); was a man highly respected by all who knew him; pleasant, sociable and kind, but his spirit has gone into the hands of God who gave it, and the body was interred in the graveyard on the 24th. Rev. Stull preached the funeral discourse with our assistance. Such is another evidence of the uncertainty of life.

Age, 40 years, 3 months and 9 days.

A Remedy for Small-Pox.

A correspondent writes as follows: "I herewith append a recipe which has been used, to my knowledge, in a hundred cases. It will prevent or cure the small-pox, though the pittings are filling.—When Jenner discovered cow-pox in England, the world of science hurled an avalanche upon his head; but when the most scientific school of medicine in the world—that of Paris—published that recipe as a panacea for small-pox, passed it unheeded. It is as unfailing as fate, and conquers in every instance. It is harmless when taken by a well person.

"It will also cure scarlet fever. Here is the recipe as I have used it, and cured my children of scarlet fever; here it is as I have used it to cure small-pox; when learned physicians said the patient must die, it cured:

Sulphate of zinc, 1 grain.
Fox glove (digitalis) " "
Sugar, 4 teaspoonful.
Mix with two tablespoonfuls of water.
When thoroughly mixed, add four ounces of water. Take a spoonful every hour.

"Either disease disappears in twelve hours. For a child, smaller doses, according to age. If countries would compel their physicians to use this, there would be no need of pest houses. If you value advice and experience, use this for that terrible disease."—N. Y. Citizen.

Plumcreek Normal School.

We now state to our brethren and sisters, readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, that the work indicated in No. 44 of last volume has been commenced. Now we trust that all who have any interest in the youth and desire them to be brought up in the church, will seriously consider said articles in "Open Letter," and the explanations, and put the plainest intent on the words and thoughts therein contained. We do especially desire correspondence from every congregation in the brotherhood. A postal card or letter giving your views in regard to the plan proposed and best method to complete said endowment, as soon as it can be done, as many of our brethren's children wish to go to school next summer. Now would it not be better that we should afford the facilities for educating them and attend to the duty in such a way that the whole man be educated. We believe in educating the hand, the head, and last, but not least, the heart in accordance with the will of God. We mean just what we say.—We want our fraternity to endow the school and make it a Brethren's school in fact as well as in name. We are asked, "What good will it do me to subscribe $100?" 1st. You thus become one of the controllers of the school, so as to keep it in the limits and bounds of "the tenets of the church."

2nd. You secure for yourself a perpetual scholarship virtually free to your child, or any other you may wish to enjoy the school.

3rd. The money is not lost; and should the school depart from the original intent and plan and charter embodying said plan, then you might demand it again.

4th. Our children will see that we mean what we say when we send them to our own school. I tell you as one who has tried it away from church influence, that many dangers would be avoided of losing our beloved offspring from the church.

5th. We are commanded to "watch and pray." We have prayed, but we have also sent the tender lambs out of the fold to get useful instruction.

Is this wise? Not at all, for many were lured away. Shall we who hold so much of God's "silver and gold" as stewards, withhold the small sum asked for? We hope not.

Finally, brethren, if you do not feel able to give a scholarship, $100, then you can give just what you feel to give as donations, bequests, or legacies for any special case as for a house, library, the orphans, &c., or for the general good of the school. "We despise not the day of small things." We are glad that the brotherhood are blessed with thousands, and yet the widows' mites bring forth fruit before God. Let each interested brother or sister write, and give us your mind freely.—We shall not scold you. We want a school to aid the cause of the church.—We believe in it most heartily. Shall we not have it? What say all of you? 3 cents invested in writing to help do so noble a work will not be lost. Do not put it off from day to day. If you have not seen the articles referred to, ask and you shall receive them by return mail.—We are sending out our blank subscription lists, and if any one wishes to subscribe, write for one on postal card, on which you can subscribe yourself and get others to subscribe one or more scholarships, or if only a few dollars donation, accept it. Yours faithfully, Address, LEWIS KIMMEL,

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstance in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Of consumption, Dec. 18th, 1875, brother ISAAC HUFF, of the South Waterloo church, Black Hawk county, Iowa. Annual occasion improved by the Brethren, by reading and preaching from John xv. 1-3. Brother Huff was a very consistent brother and a kind husband and father. He leaves a sorrowing widow (sister) and three small children to mourn his departure. Peace to his ashes.

E. K. BRECHLEY.

In the Tuscarawas church, Stark county, O., Oct. 14th, 1875, brother MARTIN REELY, of lung fever, aged 75 years and 1 month. Funeral services were improved from 2 Cor. v. 1, 2, by elders John K. L. Swihart and Conrad Kahlor. Brother Reely was a minister (as it is sometimes said) of the second degree, and was truly a light unto the house, as well as a lively stone of the church of Christ.

GEORGE HELMAN.

In Shiawassee county, Mich., Nov. 1st, 1875, DANIEL ALBAUGH, aged 78 years, 1 month and 26 days. Brother Albaugh was born in the State of Maryland.

Also, sister MARY ALBAUGH, 13 hours later, aged 76 years, 5 months and 20 days. Sister Albaugh was born in the State of New Jersey. Elder Isaac Miller, of Barry county, and the writer were called to conduct the funeral services. Text, Rev. xiv. 13. How sad and touching the sight to see father and mother brought out of the house at the same time, in their coffins, and not a voice left behind to cheer the dwelling place! The funeral procession went 4 miles to the village of Elsie, in Clinton county, where the funeral services were performed in the Methodist meeting-house to a large concourse of people. Brother and sister Albaugh were worthy members of the church over 35 years.
GEO. LONG.

In Pony Creek church, Pawnee county, Neb., Oct. 7th, 1875, brother DANIEL SNYDER, aged 27 years, 8 months and 26 days. He left a young widow, (a sister), three children, and an aged widowed mother to mourn their loss. Funeral service by the writer.

Also, CALVIN E. HEIKES died Nov. 16th, 1875, aged 19 years, 8 months and 19 days.—This young man worked in a coalmine and was crushed to death by several tons of slate falling on him. This should be another solemn warning to be ready for in such an hour as we think not, death may compass it to this young man, outside of the church. He was buried in the Brethren's graveyard of Falls City church, near his parents' home. Funeral occasion improved by the writer to a solemn congregation.

Also, in same church, sister MARY TRUBY. She was born in Franklin county, Pa., March 20th, 1799, and died Dec. 18th, 1875, at the house of her daughter and son-in-law, Jacob Yantis, in Richardson county, Neb., aged 76 years, 8 months and 28 days. Disease, dropsy of the chest. Funeral sermon by John Forney, Sr. She only survived her husband, Daniel Truby, 2 months and 11 days, who died in Ohio Oct. 7th, 1875, aged 82 years, 2 months and 29 days.

"O wearisome condition of humanity!"

How many wretched homes in our land! How many heart-broken invalids! Life with many signifies a mere onerous existence. All are subject to disease, but when health is removed the hope is nearly gone out. Sickness is usually incurred through exposure or carelessness. Especially is this true with those diseases peculiar to woman. Through her own imprudence and folly she is made to drag out a miserable existence—a source of annoyance and anxiety to her friends, and any thing but a comfort and pleasure to herself. Exposure to the cold at times when she should be most prudent, and overtaking her body with laborious employment, are both fruitful causes of many of the maladies from which she suffers. Gradually the bloom leaves her cheeks, her lips grow ashy, her vivacity departs, she continually experiences a feeling of weariness and general languor, and altogether presents a ghostly appearance. What does she need? Should she take some stimulating drug, which, will for the time make her "feel better," or does her entire system demand reparation? She requires something which not only will restore to health the diseased organs, but will tone and invigorate the system. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will do this. It imparts strength to the diseased parts, brings back the glow of health, and restores comfort where previously there was only suffering.

Every invalid lady should send for "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," in which over fifty pages are devoted to the consideration of those diseases peculiar to Women. It will be sent, post-paid, to any address, for $1.50. Address R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y. Agents wanted to sell this valuable work.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. LOVE EACH OTHER.

BY MRS. J. S. THOMAS

Strange, that mortals so benighted,
Face to face so often stand!
Strange, oftimes, the dreaded chasm
Proves a tiny, narrow strand!
Strange, a mote sometimes appeareth
Like unto a monstrous beam!
Stranger still, the would-be real
Often proves to be a dream!

Grief we know is real bitter,
But it makes the sufferer know
That without love for each other Happiness can never flow.
"Love each other," Jesus said it,
And he knoweth, from his throne,
That if love be unrequited,
It is deepest anguish known.

Like oases in a desert,
As a brook upon the plain;
Like to bread in time of famine,
Or, in drouth, the genial rain;
As the sunshine and the shower—
All that's holy, good and pure—
So shall love through life protect us,
And in death sweet joy procure.

Love, the brightest star of heaven,
Gem of memory's mystic cell;
Thou to weary mortals bringest
Joys the world can never tell.
But when we have gained the portals
Of that glorious world above,
We shall shout, through endless ages,
"Christ forgive us—all through love."

Phila., Jan. 14, 1876.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Missionary Work.

BY D. P. SAYLER.

Dr. Adam Clarke, in his comments on the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, Daniel 11: 45, says some very good things; and as there seems to be a missionary spirit awakened in some of our brethren; and as the Doctor's works are not accessible to all of our brethren I make some extracts of his views on the subject. He very properly makes the stone a representation of Jesus Christ, and his church &c. Among other things, he says, on the words in v 44, "And it shall stand forever." "7. This is its final characteristic. It shall prevail over the whole world, it shall pervade every government,—it shall be the basis of every code of laws,—it shall be professed by every people of the earth. The Gentiles shall come to its light, and kings to the brightness of its rising. The whole earth shall be subdued by its influence; and the whole earth filled with its glory. "8. The actual constitution, establishment, and maintenance of this kingdom, belong to the Lord; yet he will use human means in the whole administration of his government. His word must be distributed, and that word must be preached. Hence, under God, Bibles and missionaries are the grand means to be employed in things concerning his kingdom. BIBLES must be printed, sent out, and dispersed; MISSIONARIES must be equipped, sent out and maintained; therefore, expenses must necessarily be incurred. Here the people now in the kingdom must be helpers. It is the duty, therefore, of every soul professing Christianity, to lend a helping hand to send forth the Bible; and wherever the Bible is sent, to send a missionary to infuse its truths. "9. The duration of the kingdom of the mountain upon the earth.

"The world has now lasted nearly six thousand years; and a very ancient tradition has predicted its termination at the close of this period. Its duration has been divided into three grand periods, each comprising two thousand years, which should be closed by a period without terminating limits;—and these have been supposed to have their types in the six days work of the creation; and the seventh day, called Sabbath of rest. 1. There have been two thousand years from the creation without any written revelation from God; this was called the patriarchial dispensation. 2. There have been two thousand years under the law, where there has been a written revelation, a succession of prophets, and a Divine ecclesiastical establishment. This has been termed the Mosaic dispensation. 3. One thousand eight hundred and twenty nine years (this being the year of grace when the Dr. wrote) have passed since the true epoch of the nativity of our blessed Lord; and this is called the gospel, or Christian dispensation, which is now within one hundred and seventy one years of closing its two thousand.

(Forty six years have elapsed since the Dr. wrote the above, so at this writing, December 1875, there are remaining but one hundred and twenty four years to complete the two thousand.)

"According to the ancient tradition, there were, (1.) Two thousand without the law; (2.) two thousand years under the law; and (3.) Two thousand years under the Messiah; and at the termination of the third the endless Sabbath should commence. The comments on this ancient tradition go on to state, that at the termination of each day's work of the creation it was said, the evening and the morning were the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth day; but when the Sabbath is introduced, and God is said to rest from his work, and to have hallowed this day, there is no mention of the evening and the morning being the seventh day. That is left without termination; and therefore a proper type of the eternal Sabbath—that rest which remains for the people of God.

"And are we indeed so near that time when the elements of all things shall be dissolved by fervent heat; when the heavens shall be shrivelled up like a scroll, and the earth and all its contents be burnt up? Is the fifth empire, the kingdom of the stone, and the kingdom of the mountain, so near its termination? Are all visions and prophecies about to be sealed up, and the whole earth to be illuminated with the bright beams of the sun of righteousness? and the final by incorrigible and impenitent about to be swept off the face of the earth by the besom of destruction, while the righteous shall be able to lift up their heads with ineffable joy, knowing that their final redemption is at hand? Are we so near the eve of that period when they who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever? What sort of persons should we then be in all holy conversation and godliness? Where is our zeal for God? Where the sounding of our bowels over the perishing nations who have not yet come under the yoke of the gospel? Multitudes of whom are not under the yoke, because they have never heard of it; and they have not heard of it, because those who enjoy the blessings of the gospel of Jesus have not felt, (or have not obeyed the feeling) the imperious duty of dividing their heavenly bread with those who are famishing with hunger, and giving the water of life to those who are dying of thirst; how shall they appear in that great day where the conquests of the Lion of the tribe of Judah are ended; when the mediatorial kingdom is delivered up unto the Father; and the judge of quick and dead sits on the great white throne, and to those on his left hand says,—I was hungry, and he gave me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink. I say then shall they appear who have made no exertions to tell the lost nations of the earth, the necessity for preparing to meet their God; and showing them the means of doing it by offering them the blessings of the gospel of the grace of God! Let us beware lest the stone that struck the motley image, and dashed it to pieces, fall upon us, and grind us to powder.

"Bibles are sent out by millions into Heathen countries:—but how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they understand the things which they read, unless those who know the things of God teach them? Let us haste, then, and send missionaries after the Bibles! God is mightily at work in the earth: let us be workers together with him, that we receive not the grace of God in vain! He that giveth to those poor, (emphatically poor, for they are without God in the world, and consequently without the true riches) lendeth unto the Lord; and let him look what he layeth out, and it shall be paid to him again. For he that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins. God does not call on us to shake hands with all secular, social, and family comfort; and to go to the Heathen with the glad tidings of great joy: but he loudly calls on us to assist in sending those who, in the true spirit of sacrifice, the love of Christ constraining them, say, "Here are we; O Lord, send us!" Let these servants of God run to and fro, that by their ministry knowledge may be increased. Amen."

I endorse much of what the Dr. has here said. But when he asks, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" Paul answers, "But I say, have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world." He then says, "Let us haste, and send missionaries after the Bible." But I fear all the missionaries will do is to set up their sect among them, without making them any better than the teachings of the Bible will make them. Witness the late delegation of Indians at Washington before the President, under their chief, Red Cloud. When his time to speak came he stepped up and said: "Great Spirit, hear me, and have mercy upon me, and pity me. (Long pause) I say that I am brought up so that before I speak I call heaven and earth to witness what I say," etc. Will sectarianism improve this son of nature?

The Roman Catholics are the most successful in their missionary work, and why? Because they adopt their native costume, make but slight changes in their idol temples, and but slightly change the mode and manner of their idol worship, substituting the image crucifix for the image idol, before which the heathen bows, and so daubing them with the name Christian, and enroll them in their number, while at heart they are as much heathen as ever. And, more or less, this is true of much of sectarian missionary work.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Sunday Schools and Christmas.

BY SIMON MIKESSELL.

"My house is a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." So says the Lord. I wonder what Christ would have said had he been in Troy, Ohio, on Christmas. The following we copy from the Troy Union.

"Every seat and every available space of standing room were occupied, on Christmas night at the Sunday school treat of the Methodist church. Two Christmas trees were arranged; and cart loads of presents and good things were distributed. The usual exercises were carried out to the satisfaction of all;" and I would add, to all but God. That God is not in such work is, to me, very clear; and I think it should be clear to all that have not the pleasures of this world uppermost in their hearts. But let us see what more is said by the same paper. "Altogether we believe the Sunday school children of Troy had more Christmas this year than ever before. They all enjoyed it, and it will freshen their heart's love for their schools and the work. All the time and money thus spent has been seed sown in good ground, which will, doubtless, produce an abundant yield."

For Sabbath schools we have a very high respect; and we have been connected with them for years. But the way Sabbath schools are carried on at the present, we will lift our voice against them. The Savior says, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." See what tender care that mother has for the body, and what infidel neglect for the soul! Many parents are troubled about everything but the immortal interest of their children. Look into the churches, more particularly on festival days, and you see that their members are so much like the world that their spiritual influence is altogether extinguished. They strive and toil, and agonize for anything and everything but the soul. See the gewgaws and foolery hung on their children.

Remember that soon the loud trump of the archangel will awake the sleeping dead, and you and I shall come forth to the resurrection of life or the resurrection of damnation. Then that Savior whom you have honored by your walk of humility, and with whose righteousness you have been clothed, will say, "Come, go with me to the New Jerusalem above." But if you are not prepared for this you must hear the dreadful sound, "Depart." Oh! think, to be the companion of wretched men and devils forever; to sink in misery forever; to be an outcast from God and Christian friends, and without any prospect of any alleviation of your woe! I close with a warning to my dear Christian friends, to reform from your pride and festivities. Better go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting. The Prophet says, there are seven things which God hates; and one of the first is A MOUND LOOK.

PACKAGE NO. 4.

What base ingratitude for a person to serve self and the world for sixty or seventy years, and then when the "evil days come," and the years draw nigh when he shall say "I have no pleasure in them," turn and offer his services to God. How great the mercy of God that he will accept such an one! Think of it, ye whose sun of life is past the meridian. Knowest thou certainly that God will forgive thee and accept the service of a wasted mind and body. For his son's sake he may; but hasten, the evening is nigh, and they sun may go down suddenly.

—We were pleased with brother Saylor's article on funerals, in No. 1. It is just such an admonition as we need. We have often thought a feast on a funeral occasion was very much out of place. There are often persons from a distance that need some nourishment, but it should be of the plainest kind of food, something easily made ready. We desire to mention something else that is getting quite fashionable at funerals; perhaps brother Saylor forgot it. We mean a profusion of flowers around the corpse, over the coffin, and in the room. At the funeral of a young man in this county, last summer, there was such an abundance of flowers that they had a separate conveyance to carry the flowers in the funeral procession. It seems to us it has a tendency to destroy the solemnity of a funeral. People go away thinking and talking of the flowers and how beautiful the corpse looked, rather than of their own mortality. If a person, prompted by affection, lays a flower on the body of a friend, we can see no objection; but we fear pride and fashion are generally the prompters. Flowers are becoming at a wedding, but now the dead bodies of young girls are decked out in lace and flowers as though they were to be led to the altar rather than carried to the grave. Let us not forget that we are creatures of imitation, and are in danger.

—Some of us criticise the preaching of our ministers more than is justifiable, and some of our fault-finding is very trivial. Suppose one did speak louder than is pleasant to our ears; if what he said convinced some soul of sin, or excited a desire in the hearts of the members to live nearer to God, it don't matter in what tone of voice he spoke. If there is ever an occasion for earnestness it is when a minister is endeavoring to free souls from the bondage of sin by the preaching of the Word; and when 'one is in earnest it is natural to raise the voice even in common conversation. Then why complain of loud preaching? It is very true that extremely nervous persons are seriously affected by loud talking or preaching. Such persons should never sit near the speaker. We ought to be the last people to find fault of our ministers. We put them in the position they occupy, often much against their will, and if they do not meet our expectations we have no right to complain. Perhaps those who complain failed to ask God to guide the church in the choice of a minister when the one of whom they complain was elected. We have sometimes thought that the church does not always properly consider what an important thing it is to elect a minister. The prosperity of the church depends so much upon her ministers that when one is to be elected it should be made a subject of anxious thought and prayer. In our arm of the church our ministers are elected on Lovefeast occasions. It is talked of before, and we suppose each one is expected to make it a subject of prayer, but do they do it? When the time comes, after the first services the announcement is made that there will be an election held, and the members proceed to cast their lots as their judgment or fancy may dictate. Now, why not have a little season of solemn public prayer to God for guidance before the lots are cast? When Matthias was elected the apostles prayed that God would show them his choice. If we fail to ask God to show which one he has chosen, and only think of our own preference, can we expect that the right one will always be chosen? How else are we to account for the many ministers, chosen by the churches, that never make efficient workmen in the vineyard of the Lord?

Improve the Time.

BY EMMANUEL SLIFER.

"Behold, now is the accepted time. Behold now is the day of salvation."

This reads the latter part of the 2nd verse of the 2nd Cor. 6th chap. The present is all we enjoy. Solomon the wise man says, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." Hence the apostle Paul, in most of his Epistles appears to be so importunate with his brethren, upon the vital subject of religion. He was not content with getting the people to expose the cause of Christ; but was anxious to retain them within the fold. He desired to have them always ready to depart and be with Christ. Many of the believers in the Corinthian church were not such persons as Paul, would have them be. Hence his continued and incessant efforts to advance them in the faith as Christians are required to go from faith to faith. The Christian cannot remain stationary in the good cause in which he is engaged. He must progress, as light and knowledge are afforded, and it is his duty to seek such light and knowledge. These are only attained from the gospel, and they may lie there dormant because they are not sought by the persons who ought to seek them. Ask God for the enlightening influences of his Holy Spirit, and he will impart that influence, which he says shall lead you into the whole truth.

The Corinthians, at the time when Paul wrote to them, were walking "by faith and not by sight." Such also is now the condition, and status, of all Christians. None of us has yet attained to the position in the divine life to which we can have access; and, therefore, having much yet to do, it is the extremest folly to waste our precious time, day after day, when we have no promise for to-morrow. The advice of the apostle would be the safest, as given at the head of this article.

There are many reasons why we should act promptly, for some of which let the reader turn to the 5th chapter of the same epistle from which we have taken the text at the head of our article. The very first verse holds out an inducement to the Christian to persevere. It will be discovered that "there is a building not made with hands eternal in the heavens;" and that building can alone be occupied by the Christian. And he must not only be a Christian to-day, but remain a Christian as long as he lives. He must be able to say when departing that he has "fought a good fight;" and if that is so, he will most assuredly occupy one of those heavenly mansions prepared for him after he leaves this world, not otherwise. In the same chapter—we will find another reason why we should work continually; because will all be arraigned before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may "receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad;" for the good we are to be commended, for the bad we are to be condemned. Reason teaches, beside what we learn from the gospel, what course we should adopt; and the apostle says when we shall commence, that is, "To-day." Who will say No, and run the risk?

Intellectual Faculties, Order of Development.

BY DANIEL HAYS.

The powers of the human mind are developed in relative strength in the following order: Perception, Memory, Recollection, Imagination, Understanding, Reason.

Reason includes self-consciousness and the power of deriving facts from experience.

Memory is the power of retaining acquired knowledge.

Recollection and Imagination are powers by which the elements of knowledge are lifted up from the depths of Memory and placed vividly before the mind.

Understanding is the working power of the mind in judging relations.

Reason is the power that rules the mind. It is always true to itself. Honest men differ only in regard to what is true in so far as their knowledge is imperfect.

—Never do anything hastily; remember it is the last cup of tea which is the strongest.

SWEET SUBMISSION.

As the harp strings only render
All their treasures of sweet sound,
All their music, glad or tender,
Firmly struck or tightly bound;

So the hearts of Christians owe
Each its deepest, sweetest strain
To the pressure firm of woe,
And the tension tight of pain.

Spices crushed their pungence yield,
Trodden scents their sweets respire;
Would you have its strength revealed,
Cast the incense in the fire.

Thus the crushed and broken frame
Of both sweetest graces yield;
And through suffering, toil, and shame,
And the martyr's keenest flame,
Heavenly incense is distilled

Faith.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A clergyman of note in one of our maritime cities seems astounded at the tenets held by the Brethren, and denounces in unsparring terms, as the most "damnable heresy," the doctrine of a "legal faith" so earnestly maintained in brother Eshelman's tract, entitled "The One Faith Vindicated." It is alleged that we "are sailing under false colors," converting the terms of Christianity "into a cloak to hide a Jewish religion." We are styled "rent bottles of an abrogated dispensation," and represented as "straining every nerve to keep the wine from all leaking out." So thinks my correspondent, whose wine seems to be all turned into vinegar. It is perhaps even preferable to have an "old bottle" with one drop of "new wine" in it, than an old keg full of "the gall of bitterness." The doctrine of justification by faith alone, as held by all sectarians, is a mockery of both reason and revelation. The faith which distinguishes the elect can no more be dissociated from its manifestations, than can life from its evidences. There is a stern philosophical necessity binding faith and works, giving to revelation the "right hand of fellowship" in indissoluble wedlock. Out of life proceeds life, as the Son out of the Father, as Eve out of Adam, as bud and branch and flower and fruit out of the tree. Every pulsation, every respiration, the movement of the smallest muscle, every quiver under the dominion of vitality, is an illustration of the faith which is unto salvation. Life and inertia are irreconcilable contradictions. Faith without works, ditto. If we open an egg twenty-four hours after proper incubation, we discover a pulsating point in the germ. Expression, in some form, can no more be divorced from faith, than that motion in the egg can be divorced from vitality. Work, in the Divine sense of the term, is the inevitable accompaniment of faith. Not more absolutely does faith require a supernatural revelation to give it an object and Source, than its mode of expression by the same means. Faith without works is as incompatible as life without a body; being equivalent to life, it has all the irrepressibility of life. And faith without a prescribed form of manifestation, would be the most intolerable Babel. The rejection of equal authority in the form as in the life itself, is the secret of all the isms, schisms, theologues, and sectarian clap traps which have made Christendom "a den of thieves." There is no use in mincing the matter, or patting "the mother of harlots" good-naturedly on her cheek, as though her quilted vesture of "purple and scarlet" were as good and sufficient as the seamless, stainless linen of the Son of God. Faith must have one God as the Fountain of its life, and one liturgy for its embodiment. The same faith and two forms, would be as incongruous and monstrous, as for a father to beget, out of the same life and through the same other self, a human being and the "foal of an ass." All nature protests against the hideous doctrine of faith without works, or a variation of ordinances as the product of the same life. All who sever faith from works, and exalt "the traditions of men" to the rank of Divine ordinances, "hold the truth in unrighteousness," and chip the cross to fit their own shoulders, or perhaps carry Luther, or Calvin, or some other theological Anak, instead of the Cross. God is no changing. He is "the same yesterday, and to day, and forever." To substitute sprinkling for baptism, is to say to Christ, stand back, and "hold your peace." To discard feet-washing, and ridicule those who observe it, is an unequivocal declaration that God is a liar, and that human wisdom knows better than He in what mode to express His own life. Religion is the life of God in the soul; and to disallow Him his own form of manifestation, is the most daring impiety. All this is the fruit of the doctrine of faith which ignores the tangible side of the atonement and salvation. In the Religion He has given us, God no more overlooks our nature and its requirements, than He does his own. In "working out our own salvation," there is as urgent necessity for the human and objective, as these were needed by God in Christ to work out the atonement. The doctrine of faith without works strikes at the very root of the scheme of Redemption. What we are in ourselves, and in our relation to our fellows, is as much a reason for one side the method of salvation, as what God is in himself and in relation to his creatures, is a reason for the superior side. Both elements have the same authority, and he that violates either, does so in contempt of the "One Lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy."

My correspondent says truly that "God does not need our works any more than He needs our daily bread." But we need them, and the world needs them, for without them we lack the essential relation to the mundane side of the Divine government, and are destitute of evidence to ourselves and the world of a vital relation to the super-mundane side. Faith without works destroys all possibility of evangelization, as it "hides our light under a bushel." God is cognizant of the heart as man is of the actions, and needs nothing outward to lead Him to the inference that we are regenerate. But the dual constitution of man renders a dual religion imperative. Faith in the abstract,—which is only a theological fancy—is the moral life turned wholly Godward; and this is the only view of it which sectarianism admits. Such a purely psychological faith is impossible, and even if it were, it involves all that enters into the soul's expression; for what the soul feels is through the instrumentality of the body, no less than what it does. So that a purely spiritual faith is not only unscriptural, but palpably absurd. If it involved no relation manward, it would have no more power to rectify the conduct, and impress and lure the world by its Divine origin and nature, than a horse, or an ox, or a stump.

This is no light matter, as it involves the honor of God and the salvation of man. When a plenipotentiary disregards the instructions of his government, and substitutes his own private opinions, setting his authority and judgment above that of his sovereign, he is branded as a traitor, and his name becomes the hyperbole of indignation and scorn. When he who proclaims himself as the ambassador of Christ, assumes the authority of a legislator, abridging and diluting and annulling the law of God, and trusting his own flesh-begotten, flesh-pleasing, purse-replenishing pettifoggery into the foreground, he sins against Jehovah, becomes a usurper of the Divine prerogatives, abuses his commission, is a false apostle, a "blind guide," a charcoaled finger-board on the devil's highway to perdition.

To every minister in the land I would say, if it is your purpose to preach an unadulterated Gospel, here is my hand and heart to speed you in the glorious work of reclaiming the world to God and His Christ. But if you persist in "setting aside the commandments of God," and adhering to the doctrines and traditions of men, offering to a world full of perishing sinners "stones for bread, a serpent for a fish, and a scorpion for an egg," I refer you, with an aching, bleeding heart to Gal. 1: 8, 9.

Brethren, "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," and let there be no "trumpet" in Israel that "gives an uncertain sound," but let there be concord of doctrine and unity of effort "from Dan to Beer Sheba."

"God in Christ."

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

In No. 45, of Vol. 2, of Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor, appeared an article addressed "to a young minister;" and as I am a young minister, and hold the views assailed by the writer, I feel that I am the man. If it is true, as the writer asserts, that "nothing can be more fatal to the truth as it is in Jesus than such heresy," I desire that the so-called heresy should be fully met; and that such might be done, I will here present some of the reasons for holding such a view of the Son of God. Let me here remark that the Lord God is eternal, but is never called the Son, except with reference to his incarnation. Let the Bible student but notice carefully, and he will find that I am correct when I assert that the second person of the Divine God-head was the Lord, and was always called so, unless there was a reference to his incarnation. "His name is called the Word of God;" and we read, "in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. And the Word was made flesh." We do not understand John to say that the Word, or Lord, (the second person of the God head,) was made, but that "He was manifested in the flesh." We read, "a body hast thou prepared me;" and when the Lord God took upon himself the body which the Father prepared, he is called the Son—the term Son including the human as well as the Divine, the man as well as the Lord. With reference to the Divine, he is called Lord, with reference to the human, he is called the son of man; and with reference to the union of the two, he is called Son of God. Much more might be added on this part of the subject, but brevity forbids me to do so here.

The reason that the Father prepared, and the Lord offered that body, was that we might be redeemed from sin and death; and that the offering of that body was what Divine Justice required, the word of God, as well as reason, would teach us. Hear the Lord: "I come to do thy will, O God. By the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." From the above Paul draws the following inference; "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh." The veil of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom at the crucifixion of Christ, to show that the way into the holiest was opened. It was when the veil, or his humanity, was rent, that the Heaven of God's abode was opened to all believers. We were redeemed with the precious blood of Christ; but of course this could never have been acceptable had he not been "without blemish and without spot," and even then it would not have secured our redemption, if the one that offered the sacrifice had not power to lay down his life as well as to take it up again. As far as the mere dying was concerned we might have done it, but to pass through death unto life would have been out of the question. Man sinned and man must suffer. Neither reason nor Divine Justice exacts more. But where the beauty and power come in is, that when the Lord had offered the body, and when it was destroyed, he had the power to raise it up again.

Before I proceed any further with this part of my subject, I will first notice man, the masterpiece of God's creation, for whom Christ, the Son of God, died. God is holy, wise, good, just, and perfect; and we are informed that "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." The soul issued forth from God the fountain of all spiritual life; and as God is holy, so was man. The evangelist in referring to his origin calls him "the Son of God." But man is no more that holy being. His image is changed. He is separated from God, which is spiritual death. As man is separated from God the fountain-head of spiritual life, his soul and body will not long remain together; temporal death will soon follow. Christ came into this world to redeem and save us; and to accomplish this he necessarily had to come where man was found: he must necessarily be born into this world to meet us in all conditions from the cradle to the grave. The God-head never suffered, although He supported the human. In the article referred to at the head of this one the writer says, "If God withdrew from His Son in order that he might die, there is no reconciliation, and "we are yet in our sins." There is no such a thing as God withdrawing from His Son. God withdrawing from Himself is an utter impossibility. But as the union of the Divine and human constitutes the Sonship, so the withdrawal of the Divine from the human is death in one of its forms; and the separation of the human—which is temporal death—is no less in another. If temporal death was all that was included in the sentence, "in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," there might be some inconsistency of the Lord's withdrawing from the body that the Father prepared. The Lord did no more nor less than Divine Justice required, when he gave up that body,—or life, if you prefer,—and there was nothing wanting to secure our redemption, if but the Lord would take up that body again, which we are happy to know he has done. That "we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son" is more fully demonstrated by the withdrawal of the Divine from the human, than if the human had been forced from the Divine; which, in my judgment, would have been the case had not the Lord given up that body and withdrew.

The assertion that if Divinity had forsaken humanity on the cross, that Christ's death would have been as inefficient for the atonement of sin, and the redemption of sinners, as our own, is not true, if the Bible is true when it declares that "He offered himself without spot to God." I have more regard for the humanity of the Son of God, than to bring it on a level with my own. If the Lord God had been one of the parties who sinned, (I do not wish the reader to believe that He could have been one,) He necessarily would have to suffer on the cross. The Lord is a Spirit, and spirits have not flesh and blood. But the Lord took upon himself flesh and blood, and that blood He offered for the remission of our sins, not as a part of God the Lord, but of God the Son.

The writer of the above named article declares in another article that the "Wonderful gave body, soul, and Deity for the whole world." Truly so; but that is not saying that He suffered His soul to be buried with the body in the grave, nor that Deity was separated from soul and body by piercing the body. It took something ten fold more severe to bring about such a state. It was that which made him sweat, as it were, great drops of blood. Had man never sinned, Justice would never have required God to withdraw from him; and had he never been banished from the presence of God, he would have enjoyed the benefits of the Tree of life, and, according to the Bible, could never have died the temporal death; but Divine Justice required his banishment from Paradise, or God's presence, and the separation of the soul from the body; and if it required this in the offender, it also required it in the substitute. But when the Son of God,—our substitute,—had satisfied Divine Justice in all its requirements, He, as Lord,—or Deity, if you prefer,—had power to unite, or bring together, soul and body, and then to take upon himself the human. All this He has done; and in bringing together and thus restoring what sin had separated or destroyed, He proved himself to be the Son of God,—even as the Bible asserts—"declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." I, too, believe that it was the God-man who bled, and not the God-man.

The careful reader will probably notice an apparent contradiction where I declare that "God had to forsake his Son in order that He might die," and that "there is no such thing as God withdrawing from His Son." In the first I make some allowance for the erroneous view that some entertain of the Sonship, and in the last I do not. To correct the erroneous view of the Sonship, the first would read, "the Divine had to forsake the human in order that the human might die the temporal death," which was absolutely necessary to our redemption. I also most earnestly and sincerely contend that "it was MAN that sinned, and it must be MAN that makes atonement for sin. It is the MAN Christ Jesus that made his soul an offering for sin." Take it all in all I cannot otherwise but believe that the man Christ Jesus experienced just what he declared on the cross; namely, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" With due regard and sincere charity to what has been written on the above subject by others, I submit this for a careful perusal. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

The Beatitudes of the Mount—No. 6.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." Matth. 5: 8.

As the word heart occurs some eight hundred times in the Bible, as it is one of the leading or principal words in all these instances, as much is said about heart religion, being right at the heart, &c., and as "The Lord looketh upon the heart," it is very proper for us to have a right understanding of the term.

The natural heart is the primary organ of the blood's motion in the body. From this organ all the arteries arise, and in it all the veins terminate. "It is the center or knot of blood vessels; the spring or fountain of the blood, which is carried impetuously around," diffusing food, strength, warmth, and vitality to the whole physical man. By its alternate contraction and dilatation, the blood is forced through the entire system in three minutes, or upwards of four hundred times a day. It continues its ceaseless motion from the cradle to the grave, day and night, awake or asleep. And were it to cease its perpetual beating one hour, the body would become cold in death.

The figurative, or metaphorical, meaning of heart, as defined by lexicographers, is, "The seat of the will, understanding, affections, passions." My definition is "The real desires, purposes, dispositions, strength, and character of an individual." These meanings are warranted by Scripture; or, if you please, the true inwardness of the Scriptures themselves.

As the heart occupies such an important part in the animal economy, we can see the wisdom in and appropriateness of the inspired writers' using it as a vehicle to express the great, weighty, pregnant and essential truths of the Bible. And as the mighty motion of the heart forces the vital fluid to every part of the body, imparting heat and life to every tissue; so the desires, passions, appetites, and purposes of an individual form his character and determine his status. If the digestory, respiratory, and circulatory functions, of which the heart is the great center, are in a state of health, the body will be strong and vigorous; so, also if the desires &c. are right, antecedents, presents, consequents,—all is and all will be right.

The heart of the ungodly and sinner "is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked"—"a world of iniquity," and none can know it save He who tries "the reins and the heart." From such a heart "proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falsehoods, blasphemies," and everything that defiles a man. Jer. 17: 9; Matth. 15: 19. In it evil thoughts arise, wicked purposes are nurtured, the basest passions dominate, hellish plans are devised, selfish dispositions produced, and an unholy character formed. "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," are the unconverted heart's tripartite creed. Pride, self-will, and self-indulgence, hold triple and absolute dominion over it. Such a heart is an enemy to God, to man, to itself. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." Prov. 16: 5. "I will punish the stout (self-willed) heart." Isa. 10: 12. And the weeping prophet pronounced a dreadful doom to the self-indulgent—to those who walk after the imagination of their own heart. Jer. 9: 14; 23: 17.

But our text calls for "the pure in heart." I have first described the unregenerate heart, that we may see the great contrast, and that we may better appreciate and understand the privileges and blessings of the pure in heart; and that, peradventure, some friendly alien "from the commonwealth of Israel" may see the error of his way—his awful condition—and flee the wrath to come—flee to Christ and be made "wise unto salvation." For this heaven has made ample preparation. Jesus Christ the Highest of all the high, being "far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come," became the Lowest of all low, born of a virgin, "wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid in a manger." And by his ministry, sufferings, death, resurrection, ascension, and mediation has made a way possible that Whosoever will may partake of the water of life freely. None are so high or none so low but that the plenitude of God's grace will reach them. All are invited to the gospel feast.

For God has bidden all mankind."

Repentance is the first great step: a godly sorrow for sin, that worketh repentance not to be repented of. Right here we are met with sublime and precious promises. "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." Ps. 34: 18. "I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." Is. 57: 15.

Faith follows. "If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest." "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness." Then obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered unto us. Having thus been begotten by the word of truth, born of incorruptible seed by the word of God that liveth and abideth forever, and purified our souls by obeying the truth, we are new creatures in Christ Jesus. Old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new: new thoughts, new desires, new purposes, new affections, new dispositions, a new, and holy character formed. The result is a new, clean, and pure heart.

Among the fruits and evidences of purity in heart we mention the following:

1. Pure thoughts. " whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, think on these things." Phil. 4: 8.

2. Knowledge and goodness. "And I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that you are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge;" "For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth." Rom. 15: 14; Eph. 5: 9.

3. Chaste conversation. "For our conversation is in heaven." Phil. 3: 20.

4. Temperance. "He that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." 1 Cor. 9: 25.

5. Meekness and Long-suffering. Paul besought the Ephesian brethren to walk "With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love." Eph. 4: 2.

6. Patience. "For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Heb. 10: 36.

7. Gentleness. "I beseech you by the gentleness of Christ." 2 Cor. 10: 1.

8. Godliness. "But godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." 1 Timothy 4: 8.

9. Contentment. "But godliness with contentment is great gain." 1 Tim. 6: 6.

10. Joy, and peace. "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost." For the kingdom of God consists in "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Rom. 15: 13; 14: 17.

11. Modest apparel. 1 Tim. 2: 11; 1 Peter 3: 3, 4.

12. Brotherly kindness. "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love." Rom. 12: 10.

13. Love, or charity. Charity is "the bond of perfectness;" "by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if you have love one to another." Col. 3: 14; John 13: 35. See the following Scriptures, Gal. 5: 22, 23; 1 Peter 1: 5-8.

The religion of the Bible is a heart religion. It condemns the religion of those whose devout exterior and egotism continually declare, "Lo, here is Christ," but who are within full of corruption, vanity, pride and self-righteousness; whose appearance and profession indicate a child of grace, but whose heart is as black as sin. "Pure religion and undefiled before God the Father" transforms and purifies a character all over-inside and outside—in thoughts, deeds, words and dress, and not in one particular only. As the woman's leaven leavened the three measures of meal, so the religion of the Bible renovates and transforms the whole compound being of man—soul spirit, and body.

"For they shall see God." Shall see God is a Hebraism, which signifies to enjoy his blessedness, and possess his immunities; as seeing a thing was equivalent to possessing and enjoying it among the Hebrews. Hence when the Psalmist said, "Thou wilt not suffer thy Holy One to see corruption," he meant he would not come under the power of corruption. When the Master declared to his nocturnal visitor, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," I understand, not enjoy its privileges here, or its blessings over there. And when he said that unbelievers "shall not see life," he implied that they would not enjoy that life upon which the second death would not have power.

"Shall see God" implies in the first place, the great riches of the Christian—"the unsearchable riches in Christ Jesus." "All things are yours. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." It vouches a hundred fold in this life and an everlasting life in the mansioned home. In the second place it refers to the great enjoyment of the Christian. "Sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus" in the Church Militant, and with "joy unspeakable and full of glory" carol and chant the sublime and glorious strains of immortal melodies of the everlasting songs in the New Jerusalem. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out: for who has known the mind of the Lord? or who has been his counselor? Or who has first given unto him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him are all things; to whom be glory forever. Amen. Rom. 11: 35-36.

Sunday Schools.

BY G. B. REFLOGLE.

There seems to be an inclination on the part of some of the brethren and sisters to give serious attention to Sunday Schools; and they seem to have vaguely defined ideas of their usefulness. As yet the interests in them among us as a people are very meager; and their utility, as a means of enlightening the rising generation, is very little appreciated. They are treated (even by those who speak in their favor) too much as a sort of plaything, or mere pastime, to be lightly passed over, or neglected for trifling excuses or to be attended to only when it is convenient. Wherever such is the case, they had better be abandoned altogether, and at once.

If Sunday Schools are a lawful means of teaching the true principles of Christian conduct, then they are as sacred and divine as any other method employed for the same purpose, and a neglect to treat them as such, among Christians, is highly culpable. How is it that when we have a friend visiting us, or when it is a little muddy, or a little distance, or a little warm, or a little cold, or we feel a little tired, or a little dull, we neglect the Sunday Schools? It certainly is not because there is not ample opportunity to work for Jesus, to send the divine principles taught and illustrated by the Lord right home into the hearts of attentive listeners: not because it is impossible to sow good seed for the angels to reap; not because those who attend are incapable of comprehending the unvarnished truths of the Bible when presented by clean hands. The reasons must be sought somewhere else, and I fear that the reasons are found in a want of spirituality on our part. These may seem like hard utterances, but are they not as true as they are hard? The same may be said, and with equal force, in regard to Bible classes and prayer meetings. Some object to them because they deem them something new, as though there was danger of learning too much of the Bible, or to be too much engaged in spiritual devotion. Let these remarks serve as suggestions, and let some able pen write up the subject conformably to its merits.

The Two Bills.

Two bills were waiting in the bank for their turn to go out into the world. One was a little bill, only one dollar; the other was a big bill, a thousand-dollar bill.

While lying there side by side, they fell a-talking about their usefulness. The dollar-bill murmured out—

"Ah, if I was as big as you, what good I would do! I could move in such high places, and people would be so careful of me, wherever I should go! Everybody would admire me, and want to take me home with them; but, small as I am, what good can I do? Nobody cares much for me. I am too little to be of any use."

"Ah, yes! that is so," said the thousand-dollar bill; and it haughtily gathered up its well-trimmed edge that was lying next the little bill, in conscious superiority. "That is so," it repeated. "If you were as great as I am, a thousand times bigger than you are, then you might hope to do some good in the world." And its face smiled a wrinkle of contempt for the little dollar-bill.

Just then the cashier comes, takes the little murmuring bill, and kindly gives it to a poor widow.

"God bless you!" she cries, as with a smiling face she receives it. "My dear hungry children can now have some bread."

A thrill of joy ran through the little bill as it was folded up in the widow's hand, and it whispered, "I may do some good, if I am small." And when it saw the bright faces of her fatherless children, it was very glad that it could do a little good.

Then the little dollar-bill began its journey of usefulness. It went first to the baker's for bread, then to the miller's, then to the farmer's, then to the laborer's, then to the doctor's, then to the minister's; and wherever it went, it gave pleasure, adding something to their comfort and joy.

At last, after a long, long pilgrimage of usefulness among every sort of people, it came back to the bank again, crumpled, defaced, ragged, softened, by its daily use. Seeing the thousand-dollar bill lying there, with scarcely a wrinkle or finger-mark upon it, it exclaims—

"Pray, sir, and what has been your mission of usefulness?"

The big bill replies, "I have been from safe to safe among the rich, where few could see me, and they were afraid to let me go out far, lest I should be lost. Few indeed are they whom I have made happier by my mission."

Then the little dollar-bill said, "It is better to be small, and go among the multitudes doing good, than to be so great as to be imprisoned in the safes of the few." And it rested satisfied with its lot.

A Mother's Boy.

"Is there a vacant place in this bank which I could fill?" was the inquiry of a boy as with a glowing cheek he stood before the manager.

"There is none," was the reply. "Were you told that you could obtain a situation here? Who recommended you?"

"No one recommended me, sir," calmly answered the boy, "I only thought I would see."

There was a straightforwardness in the manner, an honest determination in the countenance of the lad, which pleased the man of business, and induced him to continue the conversation. He said: "You must have friends who could aid you in obtaining a situation, have you told them?"

The quick flash of the deep blue eyes was quenched in the overtaking wave of sadness as he said, though half-musingly, "My mother said it would be useless to try without friends;" then, recollecting himself, he apologized for the interruption and was about to withdraw, when the gentleman detained him by asking why he did not remain at school for a year or two, and then enter the business world.

"I have no time," was the reply. "I study at home and keep up with the other boys."

"Then you have a place already," said his interrogator. "Why did you leave it?"

"I have not left," answered the boy, quietly.

"But you wish to leave; what is the matter?"

For an instant the child hesitated; then he replied, with half-reluctant frankness: "I must do more for my mother."

Brave words! talisman of success anywhere, everywhere. They sank into the heart of the listener, recalling the radiant past. Grasping the hand of the astonished child, he said with a quivering voice: "My boy, what is your name? You shall have the first vacancy that occurs in the bank. If, meantime, you need a friend, come to me. But now give me your confidence. Why do you wish to do more for your mother? Have you no father?"

"My father is dead, my brothers and sisters are dead, and mother and I are left alone to help each other. But she is not strong, and I wish to take care of her. It will please her, sir, that you have been so kind, and I am much obliged." So saying, the boy left, little dreaming that his own nobleness of character had been as a bright glance of sunshine into that busy world he had so tremblingly entered. A boy animated by a desire to help his mother will always find friends. —Sel.

How to be Happy.

We shall have at least three hours for skating," said Charlie, and just then they came in sight of old Goody Stevens' hut. Infirm as she was, she stood out in the cold trying to split some kindlings from a pine stick.

"Let's stop and help her," suggested Charlie.

"Not I; I am in a hurry to get to the pond," replied Rufus gruffly, and he passed on.

"Please go in and get warm, and I will bring you in kindlings enough to last you a week," said Charlie, gently taking the wood from her trembling hands.

"You have lost a good half hour," cried Rufus scornfully, when at last he appeared at the pond.

"But perhaps I have gained a blessing," whispered Charlie to himself, remembering how the old woman had asked God to reward him.

Then came an hour of merry strife, cutting circles, playing "Fox and Geese," &c., till he saw Ned Percy standing on the bank with longing eyes, for Ned's mother was too poor to buy him skates. "Mine would just fit him," thought Charlie, and in a moment he had gained the shore.

"Halloa, Ned!" he called cheerily, "I will take turns with you, for I should hate to have my skates grow rusty while I am sitting down to rest." And for more than an hour he insisted upon Ned's keeping them.

When they went home, Rufus walked sulkily along, while Charlie whistled all the way.

"I don't see why you enjoy life so much better than other folks," muttered Rufus discontentedly; "I should think it was Easter morning with you all the year round."

"I don't know, I am sure," answered Charlie, "unless it is because I have learned that the secret of being happy is to try to make somebody else happy too."—Child's Paper.

"I LEAVE THEM FOR YOUNG MEN"—INDISCRETION.

It is said that a young clergyman once called on Dr. Dwight, an eminent New England theologian, and the author of Dwight's Theology, and other theological works, and asked the doctor's advice in regard to the best method of treating a very difficult and profound point in metaphysics, upon which the young preacher was preparing a sermon. "I cannot give you any information upon the subject," said the learned theologian, "I am not familiar with such topics: I leave them for young men." And why did he leave such difficult questions for young men to preach upon? It was surely not because young men are more able and better qualified than old ones are to explain and apply such topics in their ministrations, for age and experience give to old men advantages over young ones, upon at least some subjects.

The fact was this: Dr. Dwight had learned probably both from observation and experience that subjects like that which the young preacher was preparing himself to preach upon, and upon which he sought the advice of the doctor, had properly little or no place in gospel sermons. And the reply to the young preacher was intended for a reproof; and though it was very mild, it was very pointed, and though he needed some help to understand the subject he was investigating, he hardly needed any help to understand the meaning of the answer he received from his senior brother in the ministry. It was as much as to say, In my judgment, you had better let such subjects as you have named alone, at least until you become older and more experienced, and instead of preaching upon the subject you propose preaching upon, preach upon subjects more purely evangelical, subjects that you are better acquainted with yourself, and which your hearers can better understand, and of which they have more need to bring them to Christ on earth, and to rest in heaven.

There is a tendency in some of our young brethren, both in the ministry and out of it, to give their attention and labor to the investigation of subjects which are but obscurely revealed in the Bible, if revealed at all, and which have but little bearing upon the conversion of sinners, or upon the sanctification of believers.—Such subjects should be cautiously touched and sparingly used by ministers of the gospel, and especially by young ministers. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of his law." Deut. xxix. 29. The fore-ordination and fore knowledge of God, are taught in the Scriptures; and so is the doctrine that man is a free moral agent; but to explain and reconcile all such teaching to the satisfaction of every mind, may not be an easy task, and it is doubtful whether it is the duty of ministers to do so. They are to teach what is taught them, or what is revealed—the doctrines, commandments, and facts of the gospel; but with the difficulties and apparent contradictions connected with a belief of these, we should give ourselves but little concern, for they are only apparent and not real. "The way of the Lord is equal;" that is, it is harmonious and just.

We were once solicited by a young brother to discuss the main points involved in the difference of sentiments existing between Unitarians and Trinitarians in regard to what is popularly known by the term Trinity. We felt that a discussion upon that subject would be an unprofitable expenditure of time and labor, and we therefore declined taking part in it.

There is much precious, practical, and sanctifying truth contained in the Christian Oracles. To desire a knowledge of these, and to labor to acquire that knowledge, and to impart it to others, is highly commendable in all Christians, and especially in Christian ministers. But while Paul said to Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Tim. ii. 15,) he also said to him, "Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: so do." 1 Tim. i. 4. So in the great field of varied topics which lies before us, and which invites our investigation and exploration, those should have our decided preference which minister to "godly edifying."

THE SPIRIT AND LANGUAGE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

"In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves."—TIM. II. 25.

This passage in one of St. Paul's letters to Timothy as a Christian minister, contains directions to him in regard to the spirit in which his ministerial labors were to be performed. And in admonitions to Christians in general, in his letter to the church at Ephesus, he admonishes them "to speak the truth in love." Eph. iv. 15. These passages should be carefully studied, and the directions contained in them be closely followed by all preachers of the gospel, and all others who are laboring to do good by the means of the gospel. We have quoted the foregoing passages for the purpose of applying them to our writers or contributors; and we presume it will be readily admitted by all thoughtful and intelligent readers, that the passages apply to all who write, as well as to all who speak for the edification of those to whom they address their remarks.

Timothy, as a Christian teacher, was to instruct in meekness. And all who write to instruct through the medium of our Christian periodicals, should write in meekness. And if we are to speak the truth in love, we undoubtedly should write the truth in love. These terms, meekness and love, expressive of the spirit in which we all should write and speak, need but little explanation, as we presume they are understood; nevertheless, we think it not amiss to refresh our readers' memories with an allusion to their meaning. "Meekness is a mild and placid disposition of mind, which subdues and restrains our angry passions; which gives sweetness to our tempers, dignity and kindness to our words and actions.—Free from censoriousness, and reluctant to offend, it is not easily ruffled by provocation. It blends the harmlessness of the dove with the gentleness of the lamb; it bears injury without resentment, or a disposition to revenge. It covers the faults of others with the mantle of love, and while it is censured and reviled, it remains undisturbed as the island amid the stormy waves around." And in the apostolic injunction to Christians to speake the truth in love, the love of benevolence is probably here implied; which is that form of love which prompts us to seek the happiness or welfare of others.

Meekness and love are important elements in the character of him or her that would be useful in speaking or writing, or in any other way. The first will keep us from doing harm, and the last will impel us to do good. And they should have a controlling influence upon both our preachers and writers. We should endeavor to render the articles we write for the press, as well as everything else we do, as useful and profitable as possible.— But the use of harsh and unkind words and the manifestation of a spirit of censoriousness, reproach and hostility, should not be indulged in, but avoided as much as possible, as their tendency in general is to do evil rather than good. The spirit or manner of a writer frequently accomplishes more than the matter. And the spirit of meekness and love will, in the most of cases, do more good in promoting truth, and in suppressing error, than the spirit of hostility and reproach.

With a sincere desire to have our brethren who write for us, and the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for which they write, accomplish as much good as possible, we offer these suggestions: "Let not then your good be evil spoken of," is an apostolical injunction. And our labors to do good, may not have the respect showed them that they should have, or they may not accomplish what they otherwise would accomplish, if they show that we are wanting in discretion, or a proper Christian spirit. Our manner of speaking to or about our brethren, or the language we use, may not always manifest our "brotherly love" to as good an advantage as it is desirable it ever should be manifested.— A couple of cases now occur to our mind which we have recently noticed in the writings of the brethren for our periodicals, in which the language under the circumstances, is rather strong. In one case the brother speaks of being "assailed" by another brother, and in another case, one brother charges another with seeking "revenge." Under some circumstances when our feelings are a little stirred, we may use language which under other circumstances, we probably would not use. Perhaps we all might improve our language, if not in grammatical accuracy, in Christian meekness and love, by observing more constantly and diligently the apostolic injunction, "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man." Col. iv. 6.

It is not only in our communications to one another as brethren, that we should instruct in "meekness," and "speak in love," but the same gospel manner should be used when exposing the errors and condemning the wrongs of persons belonging to other denominations of professing Christians, or even of "aliens to the commonwealth of Israel." It is the method that will be most likely to succeed in carrying conviction to the mind, and in winning souls to God.

Our remarks are by no means designed to shield the errorists and the guilty from just corrections and faithful reproofs, that a faithful application of the gospel administers to them. The truth is to be preached and published, and the whole truth, "whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear." And let not the manner in which the truth is to be published be overlooked by any who are engaged in the noble work.

The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is read by many outside of the church, as well as by many in the church. and we are exceedingly anxious that it shall fairly represent the spirit and doctrine of primitive Christians, and of our own fraternity, which claims close affinity with primitive Christians. We hope, therefore, that all who help to give character and influence to our paper, will try to make it as unobjectionable in language and spirit as we all want it to be in doctrine and principle.

A BROTHER sends us an article for publication, and on a separate slip he inquires: "Do you think I will ever be able to do any good to my fellow-man in this direction?" We answer, Yes; but to accomplish good in this way, it will require you to be studious, humble, watchful, prayerful, and very careful. We would advise you and others who feel to enter upon this excellent work, not to attempt to say everything in one article that might be said, or that you might be able to say, on your particular theme. A better plan will be to make only a few points and make them well. Many young writers are entirely too prolix. We admire short, pointed and sensible articles. The article that sets the reader to thinking and searching is better than that in which an attempt is made to furnish everything in order before his mind in such a way as to relieve him from investigation. Express your best thoughts in the best possible way; and when you have done this, do not bury them up with words to no purpose. B.

Missing Numbers of 1875.

We are still able to furnish missing numbers of the last volume; but as we must now take our old papers off the shelves to make room for the new, we will ask all who preserve their papers on file to look over their files, and, if there are any numbers missing, to let us know immediately. We only offer to send missing numbers for 1875. This notice is given to afford an opportunity to all to have the last volume full. Of course, if we do not hear from you promptly, we will not be able to accommodate you, as we must soon put our old papers out of the way; therefore look to your own interests in this matter without delay.

BROTHER J. S. Heastand, of North Georgetown, Ohio, says: "We had a series of meetings of one week. Brother Jesse Calvert was with us, and there were thirty-two baptized."

BROTHER J. I. Cover, of Fayette Co., Pa., Jan. 14th, writes:

"This morning I arrived home from a visit of love to the brethren in the northern part of Armstrong county, Pa., and south-western part of Jefferson county.—The meetings for the most part were conducted in the Fairview school-house, Porter township, commencing on Monday, Jan. 3rd, and continuing until the 10th. Ten discourses were in much weakness delivered, and a pretty good interest manifested; and there being three other religious meetings quite near, and a Methodist church dedication about 2 miles distant, I conclude that the school-house had a good audience, all things considered. The attention was excellent, and we are of the impression that the truth lost little. * * * We can believe that the tender faith will arise from the sprouting germ and blade, and make trees there which will bring forth much fruit.

"The panic times absorb much of the attention of the people everywhere. Food and breadstuffs are, with the working class, scarce enough. But still this should not hold the ministry back, nor the members in coldness, but life-like, they should be up and at work. The meeting closed with better prospects than it began. The members were built up, and consequently felt loth to see us and our comrade take the parting hand; but we were obliged to say, "The Lord's will be done." The Lord was our helper, and did give us willing minds to go in the solemn charge.—Let us continue in well doing, and be steadfast, faithful unto the end. I am yours, brethren, in love, till we all come into the fullness of Christ."

We are pleased to state that brother Cover also thought of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and, on his return, sent us some subscribers, for which he has our thanks.

THIS is the fourth number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that goes forth on its mission; and it affords us pleasure to say that the changes we have made in our journal give general satisfaction. We are also glad that our agents and subscribers are showing their appreciation of our efforts to give them a good paper.—Many are doubling their efforts, and, of course, their success, in obtaining subscribers. Our list is considerably larger than it has ever been at this season, and many are added daily. If our readers, in general, and our agents, in particular, will continue their efforts; if they work with a will, as they have worked, we will realize a large increase in the circulation of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Just now would be a very good time to call on old subscribers who have not yet renewed, where there are such. They have done without for a few weeks, and, of course, if they were attentive readers, they now miss their paper, and will readily renew. Agents also are able to show the paper in its improved state, and this, no doubt, will help them in their work. We can furnish back numbers.

BRO. S. Z. Sharp, Marysville, Tenn., writes: "I am alone in a circle of fifty miles, as a minister of our church. I am trying to preach the gospel to the poor. A church had to be built and I went into it beyond my strength, financially. The rest of my earthly substance is not adequate to carry on the gospel work as it should be done. All our members are poor. I have been furnishing the paper to some for years myself. Could you in justice to yourself and others, help me in this missionary field, and supply a few persons with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN? Three have been won to our church by the aid of the papers. * * * There are others almost persuaded, but I fear to ask too much."

This is one of many similar calls; although it is but just to state that brother Sharp has done his part well. He lives in a numerically and financially weak congregation; and he has, at his own expense, been sending the paper to the poor. Of this he does not complain, but is happy in seeing good results; but now he feels that he has done about all he can do at present, and comes to us for aid. We do cheerfully send the paper to the persons named by brother Sharp. But we are frequently asked to send the paper to poor persons who live in populous and wealthy congregations, where there are members who have more money on interest than our office is worth. What should we do in such cases? We do not feel like turning the poor away without the paper, when we feel sure they will appreciate it. We cannot do this, although it diminishes our little savings, and, if it continues to grow, may consume our business. Under these circumstances, we feel that we would be wronging ourselves and our liberal-hearted brethren and sisters, by not extending an invitation to them to help.

In this issue we open a Poor Fund, and hope those who have abundance will remember the poor, and administer to their wants.

ITEMS for this department of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN are solicited. When you send items of news, please write them on separate slips, and not on one side of your business letters. Many interesting items are overlooked and laid aside, because this precaution has been disregarded.

B. ALMANACS for 1876 are exhausted.—We have not enough to fill the orders on hands. If any have sent money for almanacs, who could not be accommodated, we shall be pleased to make such disposition of the money as they may direct.

POOR FUND.

Under this head we acknowledge what is donated to assist in sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor.

It might be well to remark that we have about sixty names on the poor list, and are daily making accessions.

THE following is from brother S. R. Wells, of White Hall, Pa. We thank him for his remembrance of the poor and for the aid he gives us in supplying them with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. If the sympathies of a few hundred more could be reached, many poor members could be made glad.

Dear Brother James :

We enclose one dollar to aid you in your benevolent work in sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor members of the church who are really too poor to pay for the paper. We truly sympathize with the poor who would love to enjoy the reading of a good, readable Christian paper. And especially, we think, if there are any among the poor who are deprived of their hearing, or whose physical strength is at a low mark, so that they are not able to attend the place of worship and the ordinances of the Lord's House, it must be very consoling and soul-cheering to them to have the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to read in their loneliness. We hope that many of the dear brethren and sisters have already responded to your earnest appeals for the poor. We felt sorry to learn that some of your readers objected to the new name of the paper. It is true, the Gospel Visitor is a precious name. It reached many families and was read with pleasure and profit; but now comes the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, with its beautiful name, to instruct us in the way of holiness, self-denial, non-conformity to the world, and practical piety. If these graces abound in us, then may we claim the title of "Primitive Christians." Farewell, dear brother.

FREDONIA, Wilson Co., Kan., }
Jan. 9th, 1876.

Dear Brother Quinter:

While sitting at the window musing and it being near the usual hour for worship, my mind was carried back to the more eastern States, and into the houses of worship where I can see through the eye of imagination the dear brethren and sisters assembled for worship, and methinks I can hear their voices raised in singing the praise of God; but suddenly my mind reverts to our own sad condition. I say sad, for it does seem sad when I think of the many able ministers that are enlisted under the banner of king Jesus, and we are left almost destitute of preaching of our own denomination. We have plenty of preaching, as there are protracted meetings being held all around us by the different denominations; but the preaching does not satisfy us, as we cannot believe only a part of God's word. We have six regular appointments in a year, and they are filled by brother Sydney Hodgden, of Neosho county, Kansas. He comes the third Sunday of every other month, and the other months father holds meetings once a month at different places among the brethren, but he being young in the ministry, and having very poor health, the work falls very heavily upon him.

We try not to be idle, but yet we feel very much discouraged at times, and can not help exclaiming, "Why don't some able minister move here and settle among us and hold regular meetings!" We number about thirty members in all in this church, and had we an able, faithful minister among us this number might be greatly increased, as there are those here who say they would join if we had more preaching and not so far to places of meeting. It is a very small excuse; but why not remove it, so they will have to look for some other excuse, and finally, when they are made willing to take up the cross, they will fail to see such small excuses.

We had a communion meeting in a tent on father's place on the 21st and 22nd of last September. We had a good meeting, but not very largely attended, as there was a good deal of sickness at that time in Kansas as well as elsewhere. There were two additions to the church by baptism. The brethren of Wilson and Montgomery counties were organized into a church at the communion meeting held the 20th and 21st of October, 1874; brother John Clingenpeel and father (John F. Hess) were chosen to the ministry, and brethren George Pophley, Jacob Baily, and John Megeze were chosen to the office of deacon. We are known as the Fall River church, and brethren traveling west and giving us a call, will meet a welcome reception, and we would like if they would make a special point to call upon us, as more preaching is needed here very much.

We were blessed with good crops during the last year; the wheat was very good, and the corn was a large yield, the largest that has been raised since the settlement of the county; there was an abundance of peaches and all kinds of wild fruit, apples are scarce yet in southern Kansas, as the apple orchards are not old enough to bear much; winter wheat is in a flourishing condition.

There has not been any winter weather yet, excepting a few disagreeable days; had snow once, and that melted as fast as it fell. General health good.

From your sister in Christ,

LUCINDA HESS.

DALLAS, Texas, Jan. 11, 1876.

Brother James:

I thought perhaps it might be interesting to some of my friends to hear from me through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I am now visiting my children in Texas. John wrote if I would come he would pay my expenses. I left my home in Hamilton, Mo., Dec. 14th, at 5 o'clock, a. m.; arrived at Fort Scott at 3 p. m.; lay over until 12 o'clock at night; then took a sleeping car and arrived at Dallas the next evening. John met me at the train. It was a happy meeting indeed to find my dear children well and doing well. Wilber is learning the tinner trade.

We are having fine weather here.—Some days we have the doors open and no fire, only to cook our meals. There was a slight frost, and last night a little sleet. Health good. I was to Sabbath-school and stayed for preaching. Heard a good sermon by a Baptist minister on the Sabbath question. It did not seem much like home to me, yet there was very good order and a large congregation. I think the Brethren might do much good here. I have thought since here that there is not enough of the missionary spirit among the Brethren. My children have seen three members since here, and they were traveling to see the country, and, at our request, stopped to see our children.—Brethren, it has grieved me to think my dear children cannot hear the Brethren preach. I fear they will almost lose sight of that faith that was taught them in their childhood by their parents. But my sincere prayer to God is, that that day may not be far distant when the church will send her missionaries to Texas, and try to extend the borders of Zion's kingdom here as well as elsewhere. Truly, the harvest here is great, but the true and honest laborers are few. There are nine different churches here, and people turn out well to preaching.

I like this place well, and think the winters here would agree with me better than where I live. This was one object in coming here to spend the best part of the winter. This is a splendid farming country. If some of our eastern and northern farmers would come in here and improve some of these vacant farms, keep a lot of good cows, and make nice, good butter, they could do well for it always commands a good price. The Texas women do not know much about making good butter. A good garden pays well. Cabbage sells now for 25 and 30 cents per head. My oldest son has been here 5 years this month. He likes it well; has enjoyed good health since here. He says good farmers can do well. Money seems to be plenty. They do almost an entire cash business here. My daughter-in-law and I have taken several rides, and I think the country around Dallas as far as I have been is beautiful. Saw some splendid houses. Dallas is a much larger place and contains better buildings than I expected to find.

Now brother James, I have written the above with the hope that I might encourage some of our zealous brethren to come here to live and build up a church. Our children think they might meet with good success, if they would show to the world by their upright walk and conversation, that they carry out what they preach. But the popular preaching of the day is, "They say and do not." If you think this worthy a place in your columns, you can insert it. May the Lord crown your efforts this year, is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH WITWER.

COLUMBIANA, O., Jan. 2, 1875.

Dear Brother Editor:

I have been a reader of your valuable paper for the last year, and have been highly delighted with the most of its contents. In a late number I noticed that it is to be enlarged, and I thought now is the time to make a request which I have long had in contemplation, i. e., that you should, if the suggestion please you, devote one or two columns to the interests of Sunday-schools and for the help of teachers. I am a young teacher, and feel very much the need of instructions from those better acquainted with the Holy Scriptures. Commentaries are high in price, so that all are not able to purchase them. I think such a department would help very much in the circulation of the paper, besides affording an excellent opportunity for sowing good seed.—To the unawakened it may seem strange that we should have so much concern for the edification of the minds of our fellow-mortals. But why, if we are so desirous of being saved ourselves, should we not be interested about the salvation of others. If I should be instrumental in the hands of my Redeemer, of winning one soul from the paths of indifference and unconcern, to come and sit at the feet of Jesus, and hear his words of love and comfort, as my thirsty soul does, I shall feel well repaid for all the exertions I may ever have been able to put forth. I have great reason to believe my heavenly Father has shown me the important position the Sunday-school teacher occupies, and hope that he may help me to use the best of my abilities in the promotion of his glorious cause.

Should you be pleased to consider this subject, I would like to hear a plan for the instructions. I will send you one of my own construction, and then leave it to your revision: That you name a chapter to be read by the school; that you notice the subject and leading points, and comment thereon at your own discretion.

I am a member of the Sabbath-school at Zion Hill church, near Columbiana.—School every alternate Sabbath morning before preaching. Farewell.

Brother Quinter:

A few months ago I started on the way for Zion, and find it a pleasant journey; although there be many traps and snares by the way that would prove fatal if I were to step either to the right or to the left; but with the help of God I am trying to walk in the way which our Savior showed us, with the promise that therein is eternal life.

I was reared by River Brethren parents, but have been cut off from the presence of them for twenty-two years. During this time I belonged to no religious denominations; but while seeking a home, that I might not be left out in the wilderness and cold, I, by the providence of God, found a home among those who were once the spiritual neighbors of my ancestors, and are now my brethren; and I find in them a little of that spirit that seemed to exist in the Apostle Paul when speaking to the Philippians, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, pressing toward the mark for the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 13, 14. I also find that when their rules are strictly observed, they come very nearly those given by our Savior while here in the flesh teaching us the ways by which we might obtain everlasting life. Now a few of us, being isolated from any regularly organized church, have been partially organized in a little band, without any experienced speaker. We feel our weakness, and know our infirmities; nevertheless we pray for the assistance of all those who feel as though they could help us by their prayers, both in the pulpit and through the press. In my immediate neighborhood the Brethren were never heard to preach until within the last twelve months. Since then there have been two baptized, and there are others earnestly counting the cost. We have also had the aid and assistance of the Companion and Visitor, which was highly appreciated; and I know no better way than to try to spread a few more copies of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I shall therefore give you a few more names, hoping and praying that the readers will not only be profited by reading them, but will be induced to search the Scriptures wherein they may find the only sure foundation upon which they may build.

Ever hoping and praying,

H. W. STRICKLER.

VINTON, Iowa, Aug. 6, 1875.

Dear Brother Quinter:

Since I have not seen any church news from our arm of the church as yet I thought I would write you a little. If you think it will be of interest to any one you may publish it; if not, let it go into the waste-basket, where articles not worthy of publication usually go. I cannot give all that I would like to give in a short letter, but will give what I think is most interesting.

We number about one hundred and thirty members, in our arm of the church. All seem "alive" to the work before them. Our church is not compact, but extends over a large territory, making the duties of our ministers very laborious.—But with few, if any exceptions, they go to work in right good earnest. We think, too, that their labors have been blessed. It is true we have been surrounded with many adverse circumstances—much opposition from those who claim to be the children of God; but our ministering brethren as well as lay members have endeavored to know nothing but Christ and him crucified, to save a lost and undone world, endeavoring at all times to speak to the people nothing but the things that become "sound doctrine"—the word of eternal truth, which is the power which God makes use of for the salvation of all. Though our efforts in planting and watering have been but feeble, the increase which our heavenly Father has granted unto us has been very encouraging, indeed, for which we praise his holy name. During last year we were made happy in seeing about 20 added to the church here, by baptism, and this year we have received 10 by baptism and 2 by letter.—Two more came to us from Missouri, of whom I will speak presently. Taking all things into consideration, we think that God has been very merciful to many sinners in this arm of his church.

Yesterday was the time for our regular meeting at our church house. A camp meeting of the M. E. church being in full progress within 2 miles, we, of course, could not expect much of an audience, but (God be praised for his assistance) we had the pleasure of seeing almost every one of our brethren and sisters at their posts of duty, who live in coming distance of the church. Also a good number of those that do not belong to the church.—Two were added by baptism to the church, formerly members of the Baptist church. I said I would speak of two members who have come to us from Missouri. They came without letters, and having failed to receive an answer to letters written to the brethren in Mo., concerning them, by request of the church, I will send you following

NOTICE.

"To the Brethren and Sisters in Saline Co., Mo., or wherever they may reside Greeting:

"Brother Oscar and sister Mary E. Smith have moved to our arm of the church without letters of membership, and having a desire to unite with the church here, they have written several letters to the brethren asking for letters of membership, but have failed to receive any reply; in consequence of which we have concluded that the brethren of Brownsville, Saline county, Mo., have all changed places of residence. We now take this method of reaching you, in hopes that you will at at once reply. The above named members say they were baptized in September, or about that time, 1874, by brother David Williams, or at least that he is or was the elder when and where they were received.—They were acquainted with but few of the brethren in Missouri. They know no cause why they are not entitled to letters of membership. Brethren, please answer at once, as our feast will soon be held, and brother and sister Smith wish to commune with us, but cannot unless they receive their letters of membership.—Letters may be sent to Oscar Smith, or the undersigned.

ASHTON, LEE Co., Ills., }
Jan. 1st, 1875.

I see a wish in No. 42 of the C. F. C. and G. V., to know what were our impressions that led us to seek Christ. My first impression was made through the love which God had for us, which is revealed unto us in the 1st Epistle of John, 4th chapter, where he warns them not to believe all teachers who boast of the Spirit, and instructs to try them by the word of truth. I was taught obedience, or partial obedience, by my parents, as they were very strict Methodists, and they were very strict with their children, in training them in the way they should go. And I believe they were Christians as far as they knew the word, as they were taught the contaminating doctrines of man, instead of going to the word, there to learn the doctrine of Christ and his Apotles. They taught me the same doctrine. I knew no other, and was deeply impressed to seek my salvation. I went forward to the altar of prayer to find the pearl of great price. There they taught me that faith was the only thing needful, and by faith alone I would gain the victory; and by listening to their persuasion, I grasped at the shadow and called it religion, and I was seemingly satisfied for a while. But there was an aching void within; there was a something lacking.—What it was I knew not. I went to searching the holy Word. I found obedience was required as well as faith. I applied for baptism for the remission of sin, to the professed minister, A. D. F., of the Mount Pleasant church of the Rock River conference. He wished to know by what mode I wished to be baptized. I told him that Christ went into the Jordan, and I wanted to go into the water, too, as I believed that was the baptism. He refused, and said he would not go into the water and baptize, as he considered it vulgar for man and woman to go into water, and is I wanted to be baptized by immersion, I might go to the Baptists. They were a people I knew not of, as I was not permitted to go to any other church, and knew no other doctrine than that of the Methodist church.—Therefore I was a lost sheep, rejected—a castaway Baptist. Years rolled away before I found the flock. I joined the Baptists. There I enjoyed myself with them. They claimed the word for the man of their counsel. I inquired why they kept only a part of the commands, and left the others unobserved, as I understood that the kiss and feet-washing were as essential as baptism and the communion. They claimed they would do no good or no harm, but were non-essential, and were intended only for those who were sandals. I knew no people who dared to come out and obey the whole law, until I came back to this place, where I found the poor, despised people called "Dunkards." I listened attentively to their doctrine, and compared it with the word. I felt safe to cast my lot with them, as the word declared that they who live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. And today I glory in the despised, plain going, and obedient Nazarenes, who love to obey the word in deed and in truth; for we are taught, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." If we say we love him, and keep not his commandments, we make him a liar, but let the word be true, and all men liars. My desire is that these words may be a savor of life unto life, and the hour speedily come when the eyes of the blind will be opened, that they may see themselves in the light of holy truth, and put on the new man in Christ Jesus in obeying all of his commands, not by faith alone. "Show me your faith without works, and I will show you my faith by my works." Therefore, by faith and works we show our love, in strict obedience to all the commands of our divine Master, who so loved us that we ought also to love one another.

Your brother in Christ.

JAMES R. SHULTZ.

To C. H. Balsbaugh.

Beloved Brother in Christ:

My poor heart often yearns for you in your affliction, being somewhat attached to you by Christian affection, as well as unto one who has given us valuable warning and counsel. When I think of your excruciating pains, I must needs think of Dives and Lazarus. In this world Dives received his good things, and likewise Lazarus his evil things; but after death the case was reversed. God sets one thing over against another even in this life. There is no bitter but what has its sweet. Not all that enjoy health are happy; nor are all the rich satisfied. May God give you much grace. Dear brother: I am glad you gave us an article on "God in Christ;" and although I differ with you on the subject, yet I deem it prudent that both sides of the subject should be presented so that all things may be proved by the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN; and then they should do like the honey-bee when extracting honey from flowers—suck out the honey and leave the poison in. You make some strong assertions in your article, but they do not make your arguments any the stronger. That you should place Christ's holy humanity on a level with our fallen, surprises me. Remember that humanity was a part of the Son of God; and if the Son offered it willingly by laying it down to the demands of divine justice, will the Father be less pleased with it than if some human power had forced him to give it up by crucifying it? When I know that God withdrew himself from the first Adam, who was the son of God, (because of sin,) and left him exposed to the consequences of sin, which is death, I fail to see how he would bring man back to him in the second Adam, except the second Adam would first pay the debt by giving up the human as an offering instead of the first Adam, which he has done; and by taking up that human after quickening it, he now stands between us and our Father as our Mediator. I submit this to you, dear brother; and if you deem it prudent, I would love to see more on the subject from your pen. I fail to see why my view of the subject should be so fatal to the truth, when "we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son"; and that death is a separation of parts, and that those parts were, as you assert, Deity, soul, and body. It is "God in Christ" no less when Deity and humanity are separated, than when Deity, soul, and body are separated. Could I be persuaded that this doctrine "makes the Bible a blank book, of no more value than 'Mother Goose's Melodies,'" &c., as you affirm, I would consign this to the flames, and would fall down on my knees and would ask God for pardon for harboring such wicked thoughts. A love for the truth has led me to write as I did.

Yours in the hope of a blessed immortality,
NOAH LONGANECKER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Upper Deer Creek church, Cass county, Ind., Sept. 11th, 1875, friend SAMUEL SENECE, aged 53 years, 5 months and 17 days. Funeral services by Eld. Hiel Hamilton and A. Rinehart, from Job. ii. 6, 7.

Also, in the same church, Nov. 6th, 1875, CLARISSA F. CRIFE, daughter of brother William and sister Mary, aged 9 months and 20 days. Funeral services by A. Rinehart and Jacob Cripe, from Rev. xxi. 4.

Also, in the same church, Nov. 7th, 1875, sis—ASHLEY, aged 62 years, 5 months and 10 days. Funeral services by Eld. Hiel Hamilton and others, from Rev. xiv. 15.

A. RINEHART.

In Ringgold, Md., Jan. 1st, 1876, SUSAN ALICE BARNHART, aged 23 years, 5 months and 1 day. She leaves a husband, infant babe 3 days old, father, brother, sister, and many friends, to mourn their loss. But we do not sorrow as those who have no hope. She was a warm friend of the church of the Brethren, but like many others put off uniting with it until a more convenient time. God saw fit to remove her. While on her bed of affliction she became much concerned about the one thing needful, and desired the prayers of the faithful; and also she herself wrestled with God in prayer, and we have reason to believe, found Jesus practicing to her soul. She wished to be taken into the church as an applicant for baptism, and we had the happy privilege of seeing and uniting with the Brethren and sisters in receiving her and her husband; and we hope he will not delay to fulfill his promise. She was beloved by all who knew her. She bore her sufferings with great patience, and passed away peacefully. In her death the husband has been bereft of an affectionate wife, the father of an obedient daughter, the brother and sister of a loving sister, and the neighbors of a dear and kind friend. We believe she sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the resurrection morning clad in immortality. May the surviving relatives seek consolation in the service and promises of God, and take a stand upon the truth. Words of comfort were spoken to a large congregation of sympathizing friends by brother J. F. Ollor, and Jos. Hess, (River brother) from James iv. 14. E. FLOYD.

In the Livville Creek church, Rockingham county, Va., near Broadway, sister MARY A. MASON, widow of John Mason, deceased, aged 70 years, 7 months and 5 days. She was sick a great deal in her time, but bore it with patience, and when she was able always manifested a willingness to aid and comfort the afflicted. By such she will be much missed, but hope our loss is her eternal gain. Funeral services by the writer and others, from John v. 24, 25. JACOB MILLER.

In the Astoria congregation, brother GEORGE STENZEL, aged 73 years, 10 months and 14 days. He leaves a wife, 12 children, 59 grand-children and 4 great-grand-children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by S. D. Hamu, David Miller and Jesse Danner.

JONAS HELTZEL.

In the Lower Twin church district, Preble county, Ohio, on Nov 10th, 1875, sister ELIZABETH PAUL, wife of brother John Paul, aged 53 years, 11 months and 24 days. She was baptized June 14th, 1845, and lived a consistent member until her death. She leaves a sympathizing husband and three children—two sons and one daughter—all members of the church, and the oldest son a minister. Funeral services by the writer, from Eccl. vii. 1, 2. ABRAMAM YOUNG.

In Hamilton, Mo., Sept. 5th, 1875, LEON LOW, in the 17th year of his age.

On the 7th, same month, SARAH LOW, sister of the above, in the 28th year of her age. Said son and daughter were the children of our respected neighbors and friends, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Low. Funeral services by the undersigned.

On Sept. 20th, infant child of our ministering brother T. A. and sister Ilonberger.

On Dec. 22nd, near Hamilton. DELIA JANE, daughter of Amos. L. and Lydia M. Mason, aged 3 years. Disease, diphtheria.

GEO. WITWER.

In St. Mary's county, O., Oct. 15th, 1875, of bilious fever, sister CHARLOTTE DAVIDSON, wife of brother Davidson. Her little daughter Lizzie preceded her only eight days. The sister was exemplary, and in every respect a good companion and an affectionate mother. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Samuel Baker and Jeremiah Kitterman, of Darke county, O.

In the Fairview congregation, Fayette county, Ohio, Nov. 7th, 1875, LOUIE G. HOPKINS, son of brother Elijah and sister Lucy Hopkins, aged 12 years, 1 month and 18 days. Disease, diphtheria. Louie manifested in his dying moments unusual interest in a Savior's love. On being told by his father that he must die, he replied, "I am willing and ready to meet my Jesus." To his mother he said, "I am going to heaven to live with Jesus," and most affectionately entreated them to devote the time they might be spared to live upon earth to the study of the Bible, that they might be fully prepared to meet him in heaven. To his older brother he said, "Be a good boy and meet me where Jesus dwells." To his younger brother and little sisters he said, "Do not cry for me; Jesus is calling me home." To his grandmothers, sweetest tones, he said, "Be faithful to the church and to your God, that when death overtakes you you may meet me where you shall part no more." His mind and soul seemed lifted to Jesus, and calmly, but exultingly, his spirit took its flight to the land of spirits, to bask in the smiles of its God forevermore. Thus passed away a little jewel; but how rejoiced should parents be when realizing that their dear children are transplanted from a world of trials and tribulations to one of perpetual bloom, where brights and disappointments are known no more. Funeral services by Eld. Thos. Major and Sarah R. Major, from Matt. xviii. 14. A. J. HIXSON.

A Remarkable Professional Success.

Among the notable professional men of this country who have achieved extraordinary success is Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. The prominence which he has attained has been reached through strictly legitimate means, and, so far, therefore, he deserves the enviable reputation which he enjoys. This large measure of success is the result of thorough and careful preparation for his calling, and an extensive reading during a long and an unusually large practice, which have enabled him to gain high commendation, even from his professional brethren. Devoting his attention to certain specialties of the science he has so carefully investigated, he has been rewarded in a remarkable degree. In these specialties he has become a recognized leader. Not a few of the remedies prescribed by him have, it is said, been adopted and prescribed by physicians in their private practice. His pamphlets and larger works have been received as useful contributions to medical knowledge. He has recently added another and perhaps more important work, because of more general application, to the list of his published writings. This book, entitled "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," is designed to enter into general circulation.—Dr. Pierce has received acknowledgments and honors from many sources, and especially scientific degrees from two of the first medical institutions in the land.

CLINGING TO JESUS.

Had I ten thousand gifts beside,
I'd cleave to Jesus crucified,
And build on him alone;
For no foundation is there given
On which to place my hopes of heaven
But Christ, the corner-stone.

Possessing Christ, I all possess,
Wisdom, and strength, and righteousness,
And holiness complete;
In his great name I dare draw nigh,
Before the Holy and the High,
And sit at his dear foot.

For the Primitive Christian.

Replicatory.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Carrie Holsinger, of Carleton, Nebraska.

I hardly know in what terms to reply to your panegyric in the First Number of the Primitive Christian. With personalities we must deal as cautiously as we carry an open light in a powder magazine. If commendatory, and not strongly guarded with a sense of obligation, they seldom find us so empty of self as not to creep into some cist ready for inflation. If containing censure or correction, they generally do not penetrate far beneath the surface before they meet with explosive material. There is perhaps nothing that human nature is less capable of bearing, than personalities, especially in public.

Were it not for the testimony you give in drawing sinners to the Cross and extending the Kingdom of Christ, I would have preferred a private expression of your sentiments.

Your letter is transparent, and bears evidence throughout of ingenuousness. You neither exalt yourself nor laud me. For I consider it no great compliment, however intended, to know that my "fluent style pleased your pride and ambition," and won your admiration even when the truth itself had no charms for your heart. You were ravished with the drapings of the Tabernacle and the architecture of the temple, without caring to walk in the sevenfold light of the Golden Candlestick, or least on the shew-bread of the Golden Table, or penetrate to the Holy of Holies and be inbreathed, sanctified and thrilled, by El-oheloh-Israel. You came to fill your pitcher from Jacob's Well, and found Jesus sitting there, who turned upon the sluices of the River of Water of Life, and sent you back to Sychar on a crystal tide that had rolled over from the Euphrates of the Upper Eden. You as little expected or cared to meet the Divine Wayfarer in the pages of the Companion, as did that lost sheep outside the fold of Israel expect to find the Messiah at the foot of Mount Gerizim. But it is said of Christ that in prosecuting that journey, "He must needs go through Samaria." That "must needs" took in the whole transaction recorded in John iv. Before Christ made the first step in His trip, He saw that woman with her flagon approaching the well. Before Brother H. R. Holsinger set the first type for his paper, the footsore, dust-begrimmed Nazarene was on His way to meet you in its pages. O what dishonor we put upon God, and out of what unspeakable treasures and untold glories do we cheat ourselves, by "despising the day of small things." What losses we sustain, temporal and eternal, by oblivion to the feeling of obligation in the most trivial acts of life. "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," even by our very doors, sits with us at the table, pronounces His name in the zephyr, shines in the sun, smiles out of the stars, whispers to us out of every corner, and beckons from behind all curtains, reads Himself into our ears, and struggles to read Himself into our hearts, from every syllable that meets our eyes, and shapes all things to spell His Providence.

Having found the Messiah, may you also find a pattern of devotion to His cause in the rescued brand of Sychar. No matter how abandoned she was before that interview, she stands out as a luminous beacon to her sex in all ages of the Church, in her ready and spontaneous proclamation of the glad tidings of the Gospel. "Come and see, is not this the Christ?" The water of Life had so purified refreshed, sweetened and elevated her nature, that she doubtless addressed her friends and countrymen with the earnestness, the vehemence, and withal the pleading, winning, Christ-tempered eloquence of an evangel of God. "Go thou and do likewise." Be so self-forgetful in the intensity of your Heaven-born emotions, that you "leave your waterpot, and go your way into the city" of sin, and become the meek and lowly yet earnest herald of salvation to those who "sit in the region and shadow of death." You owe it to Jesus to put your energies at work to give the Primitive Christian the widest possible circulation. By effectual, fervent prayer, by holy living, by tearful expostulation, by heart-felt, heart-melting entreaty, by distribution of a sanctified, Christ-proclaiming literature, give yourself to the great and noble work of gathering jewels for the Royal Diadem of the God-man Redeemer. Consecrate your body, soul, and spirit to the God appointed, Christ-honoring, Angel-gladdening, Heaven-populating office of a HOME MISSIONARY. Be a flaming Apoeclypse of Jesus wherever you go. Let your whole life be a lamp kindled and furnished and burnished from the Upper Sanctuary. Let your feet be "like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." Set your neck as a tower of ivory," and make your eyes sparkle with the depths and brilliancy of Divine Love, "like the fishpools in Heshbon." May your whole body be so filled with the unfermented wine of the True Vine, and so fruitful of good, and so resplendent with the charms and decorations of the Bride of the Lamb, that your life may be fitly represented, by an overflowing "goblet" of nectar, a "heap of wheat set about with lilies," the gorgeous, many-hued "Carmel," the stately Palm-tree, the majestic Cedar, "beryl-gemmed gold rings," "bright ivory overlaid with sapphires," and all the sweets and beauties and glories with which the All Beautiful conserves and adorns and dignifies His elect. See Solomon's Song 5 and 7. God has done much for us, and He does not ask little in return. He has given every new-born soul a ministry, and "woe be to us if we preach not the Gospel," within our sphere, according to our ability, and in the manner commissioned by His Providence. Let this Centennial year be a year of wrestling with God, wrestling with ourselves, wrestling with sinners, wrestling with the powers of darkness, wrestling, wrestling till "the powers of Heaven be shaken," and the "gates of Hell" totter. While the nations of the earth congregate to see and be seen in Fair Mount Park, let the Brotherhood cling to Jesus and each other, and be a Philadelphia over which Jehovah will "rejoice with singing," and the angels troop down by millions to behold the handiwork of Redemption, and participate in the work and pean of recovering immortal souls from the thralldom of corruption and the menaces of eternal damnation, to the purity of holiness, the fellowship of God, and the inheritance of His ineffable Beatitudes. Be up and doing, all ye that love the Lord; our calling is Divine, our work arduous and responsible, our accountability rigid and impartial, our reward glorious, if faithful, and our doom terrible and eternal, if recant.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Be Ye Holy.

BY D. P. SAYLER.

"Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, ye shall be holy; for I the Lord your God am holy." Lev. 19: 2. And under the gospel dispensation the Lord's people "are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." 1 Peter 11: 9. So holiness, the grace of all graces, is a peculiarity God required of His people in all ages of man's being, for the obvious reason that God is holy; and without peace and holiness, no man shall see the Lord.

True holiness consists in a strict conformity to the nature and will of God, whereby a saint is distinguished from the unrenewed world, and is not actuated by its principles and precepts, nor governed by its maxims and customs. Holiness, then, requires a non-conformity to the world—a transformation from all its vanities and sins; not being yoked with unbelievers,—it is an unequal yoke,—but to come out from among them, and be separate from them in religious associations, not so much as touching any of their unclean things.

There are different degrees, or fruits of holiness in the saints; such as, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, &c. All these traits or graces in the Christian character are fruits, or evidences, of holiness, and a partaking of the nature and character of God. Against such there is no law. These evidences, or fruits, of holiness are common to all the Israel of God. But to the priesthood an additional law was given, and more signs, or marks, of holiness were required. I can do no better than transcribe part of said law. And as the Levitical law is seldom read, and not understood by the casual reader, I beg the liberty to quote freely.

Leviticus 21: 1—15, "And the Lord said unto Moses, speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, There shall none be defiled for the dead among his people: But for his kin, that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter' and for his brother, and for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband; for her may he be defiled. But he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people, to profane himself. They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, (Luther translates, "noch seinen bart abscharen")—literal, neither shall they shear off their beard.) nor make any cuttings in their flesh. They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the bread of their God they do offer: therefore they shall be holy. They shall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God." And to the high priest in this connection it is commanded, "And he shall take a wife in her virginity. A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or a harlot, these shall he not take; but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife. Neither shall he profane his seed among his people: for I the Lord do sanctify him." These things were enjoined upon the priests because they shall be holy.

Note, as marks, or evidences of holiness among others, "They shall not make baldness upon their head." It is supposed that these things were particularly prohibited because used superstitiously by the Egyptian priests, who, according to Herodotus, shaved the whole body every third day, that there might be no uncleanness about them when they ministered in their temples. This appears to have been a general custom among the heathen. In the book of Baruch, chapter vi, verse 31, the priests are represented as sitting in their temples, with their clothes rent, and their heads and beards shaven, and having nothing on their heads. Everybody knows the tonsure of the Catholic priests. Should not this be avoided as an approach to a heathen custom? (Clarke.)

"Neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard;" Because doing so was a heathen Egyptian practice; and as they shall be holy, it is unlawful for them to do so. The hobby, the "corner" what is it?

&c., is easily disposed of. He that cuts off all his beard, certainly cuts the corner; and he that cuts off any part of his beard is sure to cut his corner. But Luther puts away this corner hobby by translating "noch seinen bart abscharen." God's ancient people always let their beards grow. Aaron's beard came to the skirt of his garment. David, the man after God's own heart, had his beard; and when his servants had half of their beards cut off by enemies, they were too shamed to be seen in that way, or cut off the other half and be like our smooth men now are; but David issued orders to these servants to tarry at Jericho until their beards were grown again. This being the law and order for God's priests and people; and the perversion of it is the work of the papacy, the great whore, the mother of harlots, and the abomination of the earth, with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunken with the wine of her fornication. Brethren, from her came the Egyptian heathen practice of shaving, or cutting off the beard. Ignorant must be the man that does not know, that from the pope down through all the grades of officials to the village priest; all have, and must have their beards clean shaved off. And some officials high in position must even have the crown of the head shaved bald. For the reason, I presume, because they have eyes full of adultery. Brethren, let me entreat you to take no sip of the contents of her golden cup, though she offers it freely.

And to the high priest it was further commanded, "And he shall take a wife in her virginity." (The papal perversion says, "The priest shall take no wife, though he may have"——). "A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or a harlot, these shall he not take; but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife. * * * for I the Lord do sanctify him." These being the additional evidences of holiness, God required of his priests who had the "offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the bread of their God to offer; therefore they shall be holy." And now as the elders and teachers in the church are called to minister in all holy things, have they a right to depart from, or to disregard any one of these precepts? Does not the same reason why the priest should not make baldness on his head, nor to cut off his beard still remain? Does not the same reason why the priest shall take unto himself a wife in her virginity, still remain? Then does not the same reason why the priest "shall not take a widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or a harlot, but a virgin of his own people shall he take," still remain? I am well aware that in order to disregard these precepts we plead, "It's the law, which was done away in Christ," &c. I admit that all the ceremonial part of the law was done away in Christ, and with him was nailed to the cross; but I deny that a single jot, or title of the moral part was ever annulled or done away, but is as binding to-day as it was the day God delivered it to man to keep, and to observe.

Holiness is required of the elder, or bishop, under the gospel dispensation, as well as it was of the priest under the Mosaic. Paul enumerates a number of qualifications, or traits of Christian character in the bishop; one of these is holiness. "He must be blameless, the husband of one wife." Then certainly this wife must be one as directed in the law, from where Paul certainly obtains his idea of holiness in the minister. The reason why she should not be a widow, or a divorced woman, or a harlot, but a virgin of his own people, is as obvious now as it was then. As the steward of God; "he must not be self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men; sober, just, holy, temperate." If holiness forbid the priest of God to make baldness on his head, or to cut off any part (the corner) of the beard, it will forbid a holy bishop now to do so. I might continue this line of argument but I forbear, will only once more entreat my brethren, with all men to come out from the doings of papal Rome; sip not of her cup, though it be a golden one. She has introduced the shaving off the beard into modern Christianity. It is one of her abominations; touch it not.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Relations Between Moral and Intellectual Development.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

It is not when surrounded with the quiet, and familiar scenes, and circumstances of home, and meeting the ordinary exigences of a rural life, that we feel the great downward impetus of the world, or that we see the alarming contrast, between the pictures of holiness and humility, as drawn by the apostles, and the picture composed of such glaring anti-christian colors, as shown by the world; but in order to see the great pulsations of sin, and how the nerves of the world are energized by Satan's influence, and also to feel like clinging closer to Jesus and gaining a firmer hold upon him, we have only to resort to the crowded town, or the public highways, where there is a concentration of intensified evil, and where religious influences are impotent in the presence of an overpowering accumulation of opposing forces. The farther we get away from the world, and the nearer we get to Nature, and learning the lesson which she ever teaches, that her glorious panorama of potent laws and beautiful works owe their origin and fealty to God, the more do we come in contact with those natural and providential forces which operate to produce a grand and symmetrical moral development. God originally so created, and organized the faculties of the soul and mind, and the laws which relate thereto, that the consequent development was perfectly harmonious and symmetrical. Each of the faculties had appropriated to it its due amount of force, so that body, mind, and soul, under the guidance of a sinless growth, became, when matured, a glorious whole, fit, in its magnificent proportions and qualities, to honor God; but the blight of sin entered, and natural moral development has since been monstrous. Take, for illustration, a tree, and so regulate from its birth the application of appropriate laws as to make it grow straight and symmetrical, how grandly it spreads its ample branches forth, clothed in their beauteous robes of living green! and when, in its maturity, it assumes the invincible strength of the oak, how it laughs to scorn the assailing tempests! But mar it when it is tender, poison this root, sever that one, lop off this branch, strike the ax deep into its side, press it down with weights, exclude the light and refreshing rains, and all beauty and strength will be lost in the unsightly growth. Thus sin has warped the growth of the soul; and divine power and grace are necessary to its restoration and proper development. The fact that in places where there is an accumulated population there is also an accumulation of evil forces, may be accounted for on the simple hypothesis that they are habitually under the government of imposed and artificial regulations. Industry is exchanged for idleness. Night is used for revelry instead of refreshing sleep. The air resounds with vulgarity and profanity instead of the singing of birds and the sweet music of Nature and grace; and all the grand influences for good, which rest in God's glorious works, are exchanged for the narrowing and selfish impulses of an artificial life. Other than this, we find in these very places where moral development is meager, the most extensive and elaborate provisions for intellectual culture. The reflecting mind can easily discover the legitimate result of such conditions. Knowledge is power. How is knowledge power? In the sense that it gives to its possessor, such an intimacy with natural laws as enables him to utilize all of the tremendous forces which lie therein. These forces can be used either for selfish or unselfish purposes. It is a great and growing evil that the young should be given a thorough intellectual training, when as yet their tendencies and impulses are selfish and irreligious; for then the perception is only sharpened to see evil; the imagination, to "imagine vain things;" and the reasoning powers strengthened, only to be arrayed against a sinful, and humble gospel. But let the moral development keep pace with the intellectual. Educate, educate, I say with emphasis; but educate the heart first, and then the development, if guided by divine grace, is one which will, in large measure, resemble the great original idea of manhood; and as the birds, and trees, and flowers, clouds, and stars, and all things that are beautiful in creation, lift themselves above the mire and sloughs of earth, so all that is beautiful and good in imagination and conception and inspiration, will predominate over the sensual and selfish, and fill the soul full of happiness and useful strength.

Do we ever draw back from realizing an answer to our own prayers? When we ask the promise of the Father to be given unto us, do we hold a hidden reluctance to His visits lest He should come as the reprover instead of the approver, as the searcher rather than the comforter, as the sword rather than the balm? Our Christian life must be a very feeble and inefficient existence if it will not endure the most direct rays of the Spirit's light and the intensest beams of his heat; and that these cannot be endured nay, courted, is the very best proof of their necessity. It is the sore spot that shrinks from the surgeon's touch. Do we thus shrink? Is there any hidden thing that we fear to expose to the fullest light of the searching Spirit? He cannot fully comfort unless where he has the largest liberty to search and to slay the inbred man of sin.

I think it is as hard for Him to forget anything as it is for us to remember anything; for forgetting comes of weakness, and from our not being finished yet, and he is all strength and all perfection.

MURMURS.

Some murmur when their sky is clear,
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.
And some with thankful love are filled
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied;
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid
(Love that not ever seems to tire)
Such rich provision made.—Scl.

The Healing of Divine Love.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

Just now, my dear reader, take your Bible, turn to the fifty-third chapter of the book of Isaiah, and read slowly and thoughtfully.

Now you have read it, and what of it? Have you caught the spirit of this thrilling prophecy? Do you comprehend this theme of wonder—this Divine tragedy? Who do you think should expect to live such a life of grief and sorrow, and intense suffering?

Your Savior! Jesus, your only Savior. None other could execute it. He came to release us from the miry pit of perdition. He defied the dark legions of Satan's confederation. He "endured the cross, despised the shame," and burst the bars of death, that we might obtain redemption, and peace, and eternal life. It was Satan who devised and constructed the insuperable barriers that separated man from his God and Creator, but "this same Jesus," of whom we love so well to converse, graciously opened "a new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us." Heb. 10: 20. O what a noble, loving, adorable Savior we have! Let us seek to know and appreciate the healing of His love.

Believer in Jesus, what think you of the Word of the Lord by the prophet? Can you read the programme of that painful personal experience to be realized, and not behold your Savior as a mirror of agonizing Love? Can you ever read without tears and sighs the New Testament narrative of its actual fulfillment in the life and decease of your blessed Redeemer? Nay, do you not feel the healing of His Divine Love in the soul, giving newness of life, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost?

Let us draw near and look upon the scene. To be despised, oppressed, and afflicted as our innocent Jesus was, were, indeed, great considerations; but to be "smitten of God," to be "wounded for our transgressions," to be "bruised for our iniquities," to "pour out His soul unto death," these, verily, are beyond our conception of endurance. His sufferings were such as man never tasted. No wonder that a philosopher in the land of pyramids, who knew not Christ at His crucifixion, should say, "Either the world's end has come, or the God of Nature suffers." Jesus drank even the dregs of the bitterest cup conceivable in the Universe of God—making atonement for the sins of the whole world. For the transgressions of wicked men and women, He was "stricken of God," because He was the Only Remedy, and "because He had done no violence, neither was any deceit in His mouth."

Think of the groans, the bloody sweat, the agony, the wounds, the "water and blood," and then how unworthy we are, and how faithful we should be to Him. O the story of our rescue!

"Buried in sorrow and in sin,
At hell's dark door we lay!"

Not man, but the God-man has been our Rescuer. Not a man, but "the Lion of the Tribe of Judah," "the Son of the Highest," "the Prince of Peace," has been our Ransomer. The debt is paid. "We are not our own." O the "stripes" that fell upon the Immaculate Lamb of God! "By His stripes we are healed." It was Infinite Love, Divine Compassion, that only could make such a sacrifice. Let us remember the awful scourgings of our Lord when delivered by Pilate—"for our offences." Rom. 4: 25.

"See how the patient Jesus stands,
Insulted in his lowest case!
Sinners have lound the Almighty's hands,
And spit in their Creator's face.
With thorns his temples gored and gashed,
Scad streams of blood from every part;
His back with knotted scourges lashed,
But sharper scourges read His heart."

The instrument of torture used by the Romans in scourging was exceedingly dreadful. An history of those times says, "It was made of the sinews of oxen, and sharp bones were intertwined every here and there among the sinews, so that every time the lash came down, these pieces of bone inflicted fearful lacerations, and tore off the flesh from the bone."

Can we conceive of punishment more dreadful and wicked? My soul, weep. The Innocent body of your Lord suffered for you. But He only could endure it. Ours is only to "love Him who first loved us," and this will constrain us to "walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless." We can make no atonement for sin; it must all be freely forgiven. But we can bring our hearts, "broken and contrite," and ready minds, willing to live in the truth, and learn of Him. As we feel the blissful healing which His stripes have wrought in us, do not our hearts melt with grief and love? Can we now love Him more than ever? Can we not do more for the exemplification of His life, and the spread of the application of the healing of His love? How jealous we should be for the maintenance and purity of His Primitive Doctrine. May He give each one of us a fuller and clearer idea of what our sins cost Him.

"Salvation! O thou bleeding Lamb,
To Thee the praise belongs!
Salvation shall inspire our hearts,
And dwell upon our tongues."

Dear reader, perhaps you would weep in sympathy and grief for Him, who suffered for us; but remember, He is risen, and bids us to follow Him and rejoice in His conquest, and in our deliverance. To Him we owe the lasting debt of love, and to love is to obey, not by constraint, but by a willing, grateful, trusting mind. May this thought make a deeper impress upon our hearts, that the healing of His love may be made more effectual unto our sanctification in the truth. So shall we forget the former things, and things that now allure and so much hinder our holy service to Him. May we each day entreat Him to stamp the express imago of His Bleeding Self upon the tablets of our hearts, and oft return to Him, day by day, for grace to heal all our present bruises. Let us seek the healing of His love continually. Without this, all the world was an unpromising wreck of sinful, abandoned beings. With it, Heaven, with all its light and beauty, its joy and music and glory, opens to the Christian. This is the reason why we should set our affection upon things above, and not here on earth. Let us be faithful to Him who has called us, that we may enter the gates, and rest from our labors.

Frederick the Great and Why He was Called so.

BY AMASA LORDB.

In reading history, the fact becomes apparent that it is not merit so much as success that makes the military hero; and that many men are called great only because they are great robbers and murderers. How true the saying that "one murder makes a villain while millions make a hero." This is seen especially in reading a history of Prussia and the Franco-Prussian duel, by Rev. John S. C. Abbott. It contains among other things a brief memoir of Frederick the Great. Partly in the language of Mr. Abbott and partly in our own, we propose, in the following pages, to trace the career of this so-called great man in connection with sanguinary battles, burning cities, and desolated homes; and to show that it is a career not to be imitated but shunned. If only such acts as he committed make men great, God grant that we may always remain little and unknown.

The present kingdom of Prussia is less than two hundred years old. At the commencement of the eighteenth century, there existed on the southern shores of the Baltic, the marquisate of Brandenburg, about as large as the State of Massachusetts, and the small dukedom of Prussia. The Marquis of Brandenburg having come into possession of the duchy of Prussia, succeeded in having the united provinces recognized as a kingdom, with himself as king, and took the title of Frederick I. In 1714 he died and was succeeded by his son, Frederick William I. Previous to his accession to the throne, Frederick William had married his cousin, daughter of George, Elector of Hanover, who subsequently became George I. of England. On the 24th of January, 1712, a son was born to them, who afterwards became Frederick William the II., or Frederick the Great—great not in wisdom or goodness, but “great like Caesar, stained with blood.”

When Frederick was a boy, “he was gentle, affectionate, fond of music and books, and clung to his sister Wilhelmina with almost feminine love.” But he afterwards became a cruel fiend. One reason for this was, that his father was a bloody tyrant, and trained his son to imitate his conduct. Frederick William I. was very desirous that his son whom he called by the diminutive Fritz, should develop warlike taste, deemed the disposition which he had exhibited unmanly, and soon began to despise and hate the child. Still he resolved to leave no efforts untried to make a soldier of his boy. When Fritz was six years old, his father organized a company of high-born lads to be placed under his command as colonel. When he was seven he was placed under the care of tutors who were directed to press forward his military education with the most merciless rigor. Said his father to them:

“You have, in the highest measure, to make it your care to infuse into my son a true love for the soldier business, and to impress on him that there is nothing in the world which can bring a prince renown and honor like the sword; so he would be a despised creature before all men, if he did not love it and seek his sole glory therein.”

When the boy had attained his fourteenth year, his father appointed him captain of one of the companies of the Potsdam Grenadier guards, composed of giants, the shortest of whom were nearly seven feet high, and the tallest nearly nine. When he was about seventeen, he was taken on a visit to the court of the king of Poland, which, at that time, was exceedingly disolute. He fell before the great temptations which he there encountered, and it was a fall from which he never recovered. His moral nature received a wound which poisoned all his days. On his return to Potsdam, where was one of the royal palaces, his dissipated habits clung to him and he chose for his companions those who were in sympathy with his newly acquired tastes and character.

Frederick William I., the father of Frederick the Great, was a tyrant not only over his other subjects, but in his own family. He treated them not merely with abusive language, but with personal violence. When the Crown Prince was eighteen years of age, he openly flogged him and then, adding mockery to his cruelty, said:

“Had I been so treated by my father, I would have blown my brains out. But this fellow has no honor—he takes all that comes.”

Fritz goaded to madness, attempted by the aid of a friend (Lieut. Katté), to escape to England. He was arrested. The King in his rage seized him by the collar, hustled him about, tore out handfuls of his hair, and smote him on his face with his cane. He assumed that his son, being an officer in the army, was a deserter and merited death. He imprisoned him in a strong fortress to await his trial. He assailed Wilhelmina with the utmost ferocity, because she was in sympathy with her brother. “I hope,” said he, “to have evidence to convict the rascal Fritz, and the wretch Wilhelmina, and to cut their heads off.” “Katté,” he exclaimed, “is guilty of high treason. He shall die by the hands of the headman.”

A scaffold was erected in the yard of the castle, where Fritz, then a slender, fragile boy of eighteen, was imprisoned. Katté was taken to the scaffold on the death cart. Four grenadiers held Fritz to the window to compel him to see his friend beheaded. Fritz fainted as Katté's head rolled from the scaffold.

A similar fate had been designed for him by his father, but the Emperor of Germany and the kings of Poland and Sweden interfered and his life was spared.

Such were the influences under which the character of Frederick the Great was formed. On the 8th of January, 1733, he was by moral compulsion married to Elizabeth, daughter of the Duke of Brunswick. She was beautiful, amiable, accomplished, and of irreproachable character. But the Crown Prince was cold, severe and unloving. With undisguised reluctance, he took the hand of his innocent bride and ever after treated her with the most cruel neglect.

On the 31st of May, 1740, the career of the cruel Frederick William I. was ended by death, and Frederick II., or Frederick the Great, became King in his place, when he was just completing his twenty-eighth year. His kingdom was then about as large as the State of Michigan, and contained a population of two millions two hundred and forty thousand. He was absolute monarch, restrained by no constitution or parliament, and soon commenced the career of cruelty and blood for which the training and example of his father had fitted him. He regarded his subjects as so many cards to be staked for his success, or slaves to be sacrificed for his glory. One of his first acts was to increase his standing army to over ninety thousand men and his first gigantic robbery was soon after committed.

The sovereign of Austria, at this time, was the young and beautiful Maria Theresa, daughter of the Emperor Charles VI. The province of Silesia, lying on the southeastern frontier of Prussia, had belonged to Austria for more than a century and the assent of Europe had sanctioned the title. It was about twice as large as the State of Vermont, and contained a population of two millions. Of course Frederick had no just claim to this province but he was ambitious and determined to extend his dominions. With no more justification than has the midnight robber, he matured his plans with great secrecy—commenced his campaign in midwinter—gathered his army near the frontier of Silesia, and then without any declaration of war, rushed his troops across the border and commenced taking possession of important posts. There were not two thousand Austrian troops in the province to oppose him, and in a short time the country seemed subjugated. Within six weeks from the time Frederick left Berlin, he had overrun the whole province and virtually annexed it to his realm.

But Maria Theresa, as well as Frederick, regarded provinces as the property of sovereigns and not of the people who inhabit them, and the chivalric spirit of surrounding monarchies was enlisted in behalf of a young queen thus unjustly despoiled of an important province. She made great efforts to regain her lost territory, and the king of Prussia consequently sent an army of sixty thousand men into Silesia to retain his conquest. A terrible war was the consequence—a war in which nearly all the nations of Europe became involved. Millions of money were expended, hundreds of thousands of lives were sacrificed. Cities were sacked and villages burned, while an amount of misery was spread through countless homes, which no imagination can conceive. These wars extended even to the distant colonial possessions of the nations engaged in them, and in order that Frederick might rob a neighbor, or in consequence of his doing so, black men fought each other on the coast of Coromandel, and red men scalped each other and the colonists in the woods of North America.

Beyond the Tide.

BY DANIEL P. MILLER.

The brethren's home. Very well, do we believe in that home? Who of us have not more or less felt that our way was lonely in this life, be- times? When we see that we must die, and not always be here, then our thoughts are carried beyond the tide. In this life our thoughts are about many things, and oftentimes those things, or objects, as we may name some of them, that would be nearest to our hearts, are such as friends, a pleasant home, kind neighbors, a meeting, town, city, fruitful seasons; all these, with many others, are desirable to enjoy. But we may enjoy any of these things for a time; but when we leave them, afterward we see them no more on this side of the tide. Now in this world the city is often behind a hill; the meeting is too far away; and friends too are gone far out of our mortal sight—some are dead and some are living; but in the brethren's home that is beyond the tide, there there will be no hill, no full distance, no death, that will be in the way, but that immortal eye will behold them all the same as we see our family around the table, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and the sight thereof will never, never fade away. Glorious home beyond the tide! Brethren, think of this; sisters, forget it not.

Job says, "I know that my Redeemer liveth;" and we also should always try and have that faith. We know that there is a home in heaven, without doubt, without fear; for all these things our Saviour will take out of our way, if we ask him in true faith.

And now in the end, as we have thought of that beautiful life beyond the tide, we also should say something about the life in this world. If God hath made those glories so bright and fair, that we love, here and on the other side of the tide, then we should take more pleasure in doing his commandments, as they are not in vain.

God's Woe.

BY DR. MAHORNEY.

"Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! Saith the Lord.—Jer. 23: 1.

The tendency of modern popular Christendom is positive in opposition to that of primitive Christianity. The things it advocates, teaches and practices do, and ever will, lead men to discard the plain teachings of the doctrine once delivered to the saints, which is plainly recorded in the Holy Bible. These facts stare the learned part, the pastors, of modern popular Christendom, in the face, so boldly that they, like their father, fear and tremble, because they know, full well, that the things the early Christians advocated, taught and practice they style absurd, abominable, filthy, and old fogyism, and look upon, speak of, and refer to it as characteristic of the ignorance of early Christians and the dark ages, saying, "Ours is an age of advancement and progress, and we have a higher and more refined knowledge of God, than to think that he, for once, would be found guilty of requiring such simple, filthy and unbecoming things of this enlightened people." "Indeed," they say, "the idea the early Christians held relative to the duty God required of man, when compared with that of modern popular Christendom, sinks so low in the estimation of man that he turns from it as disgusting, saying that it is suitable to be spoken of and referred to in our pulpits only as belonging to the dark ages. The learned modern Christendom teaches it essential to take high sounding words, lofty conclusions, spiritual interpretations of all the teachings of Christ; such as common intellects cannot understand or comprehend, without the aid of some learned pastor to explain and dish out according to the most popular notion of the day.

These learned pastors speak of the plain teachings of the Bible, (as so strongly and ably taught and practiced by the Brethren,) as absurd innovations, which had their origin in the dark ages and papal Rome. If these learned pastors understood the plain teachings of the Bible, as did the prophets and apostles, they would condemn the very things they now teach, and teach the very things they now condemn.

If they understood the plain teachings of the Bible, they would weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon them. The woe of God, like a thunderbolt, is, in the text, hurled at them by the good old prophet. But they, wise in their own conceit, dodge behind some learned, popular fortification of man to await their doom. May God spare them until they learn this, and become rooted and grounded in the truth, if, perchance, they might bring forth fruit to His name's honor and glory. If they understood rightly the word of God, the text would drive them to the foot of the cross, compelling them to fall upon the rock of calvary to break their calloused hearts and make them whole, and then they would call unto those whom they style ignorant, unlettered, illiterate, drunken, filled with new wine, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?"

Sad, sad, sad! They, like the human family generally, fail to see the fulfillment of the text in their own case. The Christian may see the text fulfilled at any time by watching the movements of Modern Popular Christendom, where it convenes in the so-called Christian alliance, Christian Association, Christian Union and Christian union revivals; Indeed, wherever they meet or associate together and preach, using the word and name of God; for, when their day of reckoning comes, each pastor takes unto himself his own converts, into his own popular church, according to his own popular mode. We all know that wherever people congregate in this way, and use the name of God, it awakens, at least in some, a deep seriousness concerning their soul's salvation. These are God's sheep, of which each pastor takes unto his church, thus fulfilling the scripture which saith, "Have scattered the sheep of my pasture. The pastor who, a few days ago, pretended to be standing upon the wall of Zion, hand in hand, heart in heart, soul in soul, calling and gathering the sheep of God, have now scattered them and do eat the fat, and clothe themselves with the wool. (Eze. 34 : 2—3.) No wonder God hurls his woe at them ; for as soon as they get them into their own church, instead of teaching them to love those who were converted at their right and left hand, and bind them together in the strongest bonds of Christian love and affection, they teach them to hate one another, and turn their backs in contempt and discord upon those who were at their right and left hand interceding God for mercy, love, peace and salvation ; teaching them to fight against each other in achieving church honors and church popularity, and treat lightly, as illiterate and unpopular, every point of doctrine not found in their own creed on discipline. Thus they turn their love into jealousy, their aspiration for heaven and salvation into aspirations for popularity, deluding their innocent minds with the world's popular theories and abominable, sophistic, and dogmatical conclusions—teaching them the doctrines of men and devils instead of the doctrine of God. There is no wonder that God hurls his wrath of woe, like a thunderbolt at them—"Woe be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord."

Christ at the Wedding.

BY EMMA G. SPANOGLE.

The wedding hour has come at last, and the tears already begin to start as the bride's dress is heard rustling down the stairway ; and as the company of invited guests recede to make room for the scene to begin, the silent whispers, "God bless them," are heard from almost every corner of the house. As the ceremony begins, another deep and silent sigh is heard—"Wedded for life. How fair and innocent they seem to be!" Unbidden tears are oft made to moisten the cheeks on occasions like this,—but not bitter ones ; for, when the heart is stirred, the eyes cannot help but shed tears and cause letters of pure crystal to be written on the cheeks.

This wedding in Cana is one of an every day life : no coaches roll before the door to convey strangers to and from the scene ; no costly silks to rustle on the carpets ; no diamond rings and golden bracelets to wear ; no garlands of beauty to wear over their heads ; no soft music to reverberate in cheerful tones ; but simply an unostentatious ceremony. To this wedding Jesus and his mother have been invited, for it must needs be performed with the presence of the poor Nazarene ; and more people seem to gather together than were really expected, or, perhaps, even invited.

Of course, this being an extraordinary event for these two persons to start out in married life, a festal joy is by no means out of place ; but alas ! to continue the merry season, they must have more wine. Jesus observes the great embarrassment of the women, for the wine was just about all and he at once comes to their relief. He sees standing six water pots, and he immediately orders the servants to fill them to the brim ; then waves his hand over the water, and it becomes pure wine. The governor tastes it first, then the rest, and all are made to exclaim, "Why, this is really the best wine we have ever tasted!" "Thou hast kept the best wine until now," was the merry ejaculation. Thus it is with life throughout, that Jesus always preserves the best wine for the last. In this life the Christian has the bitter wine, and tears of sorrow are oft made to moisten his cheeks on the pillow of down ; but soon eternal felicity shall be his, and then he, too, shall be made to exclaim, "Thou hast kept the best wine until now."

Workings.

You cannot be Christ's without working for Christ. Where there is life there is a manifestation of life. The tree of righteousness bears the fruit of righteousness. If you have a genuine Christian experience, you will do the work of a Christian. "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." Titus 3 : 8. But there is great danger here of being deceived. Christianity has become thoroughly organized. The church has become a powerful machine. The division of labor is well nigh complete. One man preaches and prays. A half a dozen do the singing. Three or four more visit the sick read the Bible, and instruct the people from house to house. For all this the church pays. These preachers and singers and visitors do their part and draw their salaries. The members contribute their money, the work goes on, and the church prospers. All this may be done through zeal for the church, without much personal piety. Men worked upon the ark who were not saved in the ark. So many give their money to promote the Christianity of the day who have neither part nor lot in this matter ; for their heart is not right in the sight of God. Works, as the fruit of piety, are indispensable ; but works as a substitute for piety, are delusive and dangerous. They lead men to believe they are safe when they are not safe. This makes an entirely different test of the Christian character from that which the Master has made. He who gives most is he who is most highly esteemed, though he may be proud, self-willed and worldly. But little estimate is placed upon humility, faith and devotion. Conformity to the world is encouraged—for it is thought to add to one's influence. Thus many are deceived. If one who gives all his goods to feed the poor, and has not charity—inward religion—is profited nothing by it, how much less is he who gives of his income to sustain an aristocratic church. God will not accept of any offering in the place of the heart. He wants you. Cyrus was rewarded for the work he did in executing the commands of God. You will receive your pay for every good action you perform. You will feel better. And God will give you your reward for everything you do for others. But all this does not secure your salvation. The king pays his servants their wages ; but he takes his children into his palace. Keep on doing all the good you can ; but do not trust in your good works for your salvation. Seek that holiness without which you cannot see the Lord. —Sel.

Unkind Words.

How apt we are to speak them. How much harm they do ; how seldom any good. When once uttered how utterly beyond recall. The Chinese have a proverb : "An unkind word falls easily from the tongue ; but a coach and six horses cannot bring it back." Two ideas underlie this proverb : 1. An unkind word is a heavy weight. It often proves so to the person against whom it is spoken ; perhaps oftener to him who speaks it. 2. It travels fast. How seldom do we reflect that our unkind words have not only a wonderful tenacity of life, a sort of immortality, but that they fly far and fast. Most inexcusable is the fault of speaking them in the discussion of religious questions. We are taught to bridle our tongues. Do we properly do it ?

THE rebukes of a minister, when steeped in love, and prefaced by commendation, descend like an excellent oil that doth not break the head.

For The Young.

Not Very Good, and Not Very Bad.

"From what you have said, John, it seems you think yourself a fair kind of man."

"Well, Mr. F—, I will tell you my opinion about that exactly. I don't think I ever did much that was bad; nor can I say that I ever did a great deal of good. I think you may call me a middling man."

"That is your opinion, John? But don't you think that everything that exists must have had a cause from which it sprung?"

"Certainly I do, Mr. F—, for old John is not so void of sense as not to know that."

"Well, John, what do you suppose causes a man to be good?"

"God, of course, sir."

"And what do you suppose causes a man to be bad?"

"The devil, most certainly; for God never made anything bad."

"But, John, what is the cause of a middling man?"

"W-o-l-l, I s'up p-o-s-e—"

"John, I perceive you have got fast there. You say God is the cause of a good man, and Satan is the cause of a bad man, but you say you are neither. You are middling? Doubtless John, you must have had a cause that made you what you are."

"But as there is no middle between God and Satan, and only the two revealed causes of good and evil in man, then I am at an exceedingly great loss to know what has been the great moral cause that made you middling?"

"Why, sir, I have heard a great many folks like me saying that they are middling; that is, neither good nor bad; but, really, when I think of the matter in the way you put it, I begin to be somewhat doubtful whether I am right. Yet, I assure you, sir, I do not think I should be called a bad old man."

"John, did you ever see a middling gold dollar? Or did you ever see a middling bank-note?"

"No, never, Mr. F—; they are always either good or bad. But I have known some bad ones to pass for good ones."

Well, John, if you never saw middling money, you never saw middling men; that is, as before God. God is a being of perfect holiness, infinite purity, and he judges according to a perfect standard. To be accepted of him we must be perfectly fitted for his approval. He cannot adopt middling men, and call them good. You must be either righteous or unrighteous—either saint or sinner. A 'middling' man has no existence in God's sight. So, friend John, I want you, when you go home, to think seriously on this matter. 'You cannot serve two masters.' At this moment you are either serving God or Satan. You cannot be a middling man. You have no middling cause, no middling life, no middling death, and no middling destiny." —Sel.

Child-Life in Southern India.

"Tell me something of the child-life in India?" asked a lady of a returned missionary.

"There is so little to tell," was the sad reply. "Children there do not play and laugh and sing as the children here do. They do not seem to have games or playthings. One can scarcely conceive of a little girl here who does not play with dolls; but there, poor native children do not have even a rag baby, nor substitute of any kind for a doll. Some girls who once received from the missionaries, as a holiday present European dolls, were in ecstasies. Even women are pleased with such a present more than with any other thing that can be given them."

"When a boy is born, the father makes a great rejoicing and gives presents to his friends, in proportion to his station in life. The birth of a girl according to their religion, is a curse upon the family, and is never alluded to. If one asks a father how many children he has, if there are three girls and two boys he will tell you he has two children. Only the boys are counted. Girls are considered a curse because by the law of their religion the father is obliged to find a husband for every daughter under penalties of severe punishment after death, from which females, having no souls, are exempt. For this reason children are betrothed when mere infants. The betrothal and marriage are each attended with numerous, troublesome and expensive ceremonies, all of which must be conducted by a priest who receives a fee for every step he takes in the proceeding. The girl does not usually see her future husband until the marriage, and, of course, is not consulted in the matter. While she is a mere infant herself she takes care of a younger child, and is relieved from this only to do some greater drudgery. Swarms of naked little ones roll about in the open air, without games or glee, sometimes stupidly drawing figures in the sand and sometimes joining in a monotonous dance. There are no play-houses, no play-furniture, not even broken bits of old dishes to suggest playing 'mother,' 'visit,' or 'keep house;' games that fill so much space in the lives of children in a Christian land."

"The education of the girls is wholly domestic, unless we except the 'nautch,' or dancing-girls, who are taught to read sufficiently to learn the poetry which they are to sing.

When this is learned—and the dancing—they become slaves to the rich, where they may well envy their sisters who are destined to domestic slavery, and by whom they are held in scorn and reproach.

"At the latest the betrothed girl is married by the time she is fourteen, having been a slave to her brothers and father since her babyhood. No wonder children in India, particularly girls, do not play."

"The boys are sent to school as long as the means of the father will allow—and such a school! If an American boy were traveling in that country he would be likely to hear the school before he would see it, and, seeing it, would scarcely imagine what it was. 'On a pile'—an elevation of ground open on all sides, but covered overhead—sits the teacher crosslegged. His boys are seated around him in the same posture. If they have not yet learned their letters, there is a basket of sand near, where the master draws a letter and the boys copy it until they have attained sufficient skill to entitle them to a slate. If they can read, they may be conning a lesson in their queer olla-leaf books, which consist of prepared leaves loosely strung on two strings. They learn to 'read, write and cipher'—a little of each only compared with what an American boy learns before he is twelve years of age. In arithmetic they do not 'carry one for every ten,' as we do, but write down the whole amount, and proceed in a very clumsy, laborious way unless they have learned the Arabic method from European teachers."

"It is when the school is engaged in reading exercise, which is the greater part of the time, that it may be heard before it is seen. The teacher in a high sing-song tone, reads a portion from his book, and all the boys, in the same key, repeat it after him. The book is usually one of native poetry, which is their chief study and the text of their religion. Most of the time in school is spent in memorizing this poetry, and the amount committed is astonishing. Children of different castes never attend the same school."

"The low cast boy leaves school to help in whatever work his father does. Sometimes he is in the shop, sometimes in the top of a palm tree, where he cuts off the topmost buds and suspends a vessel to catch the sap from which is made their favorite drink."

"There is no choice of trades. The shoemaker's son will be a shoemaker, the baker's son will be a baker. Only in the land where parents believe in Him who took little children in his arms and blessed them, is there any true child-life."

"WHEAT INSTEAD OF BREAD."

A certain minister said of another who had preached for him, and who had cited a great many passages of Scripture in his sermon, "He has given my people wheat instead of bread." This idea of "wheat instead of bread," is both instructive and suggestive, especially to preachers. We have preachers among us of whom it may be justly said, as it was said of the preacher above referred to, that they give the people "wheat instead of bread." By wheat we are not to understand error or false doctrine or anything of that kind. It is truth in its unprepared state. The truth wants a certain preparation to adapt it to the spiritual digestion of the people. And it is the office of ministers of the gospel to prepare the truth for the people.

And what does the preparation of the word for the people consist in? Or, what is the work of the minister in this respect? It is not his work to simply read the word of the Lord, though the reading of the Scriptures should constitute a part of the divine service in the sanctuary. It was so in the time of the Babylonish captivity, as we learn from the eighth chapter of Nehemiah. In the eighth verse it is said, "So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." Dr. Clarke has the following just remarks upon the reading and expounding of the Scriptures by Ezra the priest:

"First, 'They read in the book of the law of God.' The words of God are the proper matter of preaching; for they contain the wisdom of the Most High, and reveal to men the things which make for their peace.

"Secondly, 'They read 'distinctly,' m'phorash from parash 'to expand;' they analyzed, dilated, and expanded it at large.

"Thirdly, 'They gave the sense': v'som sekel, 'put weight to it,' showed its importance and utility; thus applying verbal criticism, and general exposition, to the most important passage.

"Fourthly, they caused them to understand the reading; vaigabina banmikra, 'and they understood,' had a mental taste and perception of the things which were in the reading, i. e., in the letter and spirit of the text."

What Ezra did with the law to make it plain and attractive to the people, the preacher of the present time is to do with the Scriptures which he is to teach upon to the people to whom he bears the divine message. He is not simply to present the wheat as it is contained in heaven's garner, the written book, to use the figure contained in the heading of our article, but the wheat is to be ground into flour, and the flour is to be made into bread, and with this bread they that hunger after righteousness are to be fed. Then if the spiritual power of digestion is good, the food will become assimilated to the various parts of the spiritual body or Christian character that it is designed to form, and be taken up by the proper vessels and it will constitute the spiritual life that the bread of life is designed to produce. Or, dropping the figure, the Scriptures are not only to be read, or passages from them cited, but they are to be carefully and correctly explained, and judiciously applied in sermons, exhortations, and admonitions, adapted to the various spiritual wants of the people. In this way the word of the Lord is prepared for the people.

Again in illustrating the word of the Lord by the wheat and the bread, we may remark that writers on hygiene claim that bread made from unolted flour is the most healthy; that the bran of the wheat contains a very nourishing element, an element that is very necessary in building up a healthy physical organism, and should therefore be retained in the flour. So in regard to the word of the Lord as the spiritual food of the soul; there is no element in it but what is necessary to the formation of the inner man, perfect and entire. And in preparing gospel truth for the promoting and growth of spiritual life, it should not be subjected to a process of separation, to separate the essential from the non-essential, according to the theories of those who hold that some of the commandments of the Christian Lawgiver are non-essential.—Properly speaking there are no non-essentials in the gospel, but every part is necessary to complete the whole. Facts, doctrines, and commandments, and whatever else is comprised in the gospel of Christ, are all to be woven into the white linen representing the righteousness of the saints, and with which the bride was was clothed preparatory to her marriage with the Lamb. Rev. 19th ch.

No rhetorical figures, no poetic language, no logical syllogisms, will add beauty or strength to a sermon, like appropriate passages from the living oracles will do. And when Scriptural passages are judiciously introduced, and practically applied they add strength, beauty, and life to a sermon. And if a sermon made up of such elements does not nourish and promote the spiritual life of the people for whom it is designed and to whom it is addressed, the fault must surely be in themselves.

ENCOURAGING.

For the encouragement of those who feel an interest in the success of our work, and in the circulation of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and are laboring to promote them, we would say that subscriptions have come in so far very satisfactorily, and that our prospects are quite favorable.—We ourselves are pleased and encouraged with the successful labors of our agents in obtaining subscribers for us, and we tender our thanks to them, as well as to those who have sent in their own names. And we hope that all our agents and friends will continue their efforts to obtain subscribers. We are just in the beginning of the New Year, and much can be done yet, and we expect much will yet be done to extend our circulation. Judicious effort is wanting to secure success, and such effort will be likely to meet with success. We hope our patrons will be pleased with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and if they are, they will please recommend it to their neighbors.

The enlargement and improvement of our paper will add several hundred dollars to our expenses this year in publishing, and it is very desirable that our circulation should be increased.—Hence we are solicitous that our friends should do all they can to accomplish this. We are happy to believe from the expressions we have received, that the changes we have made in our paper will prove very acceptable to our patrons.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

Owing to the press of business caused by the number of subscriptions received, and orders for Almanacs, &c., at the beginning of the year, as well as to some other causes we could not well control, we are not on time with our paper. This we regret, and we are laboring to gain time, and we hope we shall soon be able to accomplish the desired object. Our subscribers will please exercise patience.—We appreciate their desires and feelings in regard to the timely arrival of their papers, and we shall use our best endeavors to have them reach their destination by the time they are properly expected.

When any of our subscribers do not receive their papers in reasonable time after their subscriptions are sent in, they will please inform us of the fact by sending a postal card. It is almost impossible to avoid all mistakes at the beginning of the year when there is so much to do, and so many names coming in, but we hope when we get properly under way with our new volume, there will be but few mistakes, if any, and but little delay.

OUR APPOINTMENTS EAST.

On Friday, the 28th instant, we expect to leave home to fill some appointments we have made in some churches east of us. We shall, the Lord permitting, visit the Dry Valley church in Millin county, the Lost Creek church, in Juniata county, and the church in the vicinity of Mechanicsburgh, Cumberland county. We will spend about four days in each congregation.

To brethren of other congregations on the route, who have requested us to call and labor some with them, we would say, our engagements with the churches named, will take as much time as we can spare then, and we hope they will excuse us, and we will endeavor to comply with their requests at another time.

[The foregoing was written by the editor on the 27th ult., the day before he left. With this explanation we hope it will be understood.—B.]

Almanacs for 1876.

Our almanacs for 1876 are exhausted. Send no more orders as they cannot be filled. Those who have sent money for almanacs, whose orders cannot be filled, will please tell us what disposition to make of the money. We are sorry that we cannot fill the orders.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.

As we are frequently written to for specimen numbers by those who have not seen the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and who, it seems, want to see it, we would say to our agents and friends, that if they know of any who they think might become subscribers if they would see the paper, they will please give us the names and addresses of such persons when they have occasion to write to us.

TO OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

Our correspondents writing to us on any thing which does not pertain to the business of our office, will please write private on their letters.

Cleanings and Gittings.

“WHY NOT?”—WHY.—A good brother writes thus: “Why does not my paper come to I. C., S— county, Iowa, instead of * * *? I got a postal card from you some time ago, directed to I. C., stating that I failed to give you the right directions to change my paper. I wrote again immediately. But what I can't understand about it is, that you directed the postal card to the office I wished the paper sent to, and not the paper.”

Well, we are willing to tell you, and all others who ask us to change their address, just how this little matter is. Others have made the same inquiry, and sometime ago a subscriber became indignant and refused to give the required information. Of course, we sent his paper as ordered, and as he refused to tell us at what office he had been getting his paper, we continued sending it there, too. We should not, in justice, have sent him a single copy until he told us his former office; but if we had not sent it, he probably would have felt injured and used his influence—for every man has influence—against us. But we must explain:

1. It is utterly impossible for us to remember everything. We cannot remember the names and addresses of six thousand subscribers, and it should not be presumed that we do or can. Hence when subscribers wish to have the address of their paper changed, they should let us know where they had been getting their paper so that we may quit sending it there; and they should tell us where they want to get it, so that we can send it there.

2. John Smith thinks surely we ought to know where he gets his paper. John Smith moves to Chicago, Ills., and asks us to send his paper there; but as he thinks we know where he had been getting his paper, he does not tell us. In this case we happen to remember that we are sending the paper to John Smith in Illinois, John Smith in Ohio, and to another John Smith in Pennsylvania. Now what will we do? If we write to him, he may tell us that we ought to know as well where to send his paper, as we do where to send his letter. We conjecture long enough to attend to the business twice over, if the proper information had been given; and then know no more about it than we did at first. But something must be done or John Smith will soon begin to wonder why we do not attend to our business more promptly. Of course we suppose that he is the Smith whose paper is going to Ox Bow, St. Clair county, Ill., and we quit sending it there and we send it to Chicago. In a few weeks we get a letter from Ox Bow, Ills., reading thus: “Why has my paper quit coming? I have paid for the whole year, and for the last two weeks I have received no paper. Please send it on, as I feel very much lost without it. Fraternally, John Smith.” Then we must examine our books, and letter files, and after discovering the error we are expected to write an explanatory letter to Smith at Ox Bow, and a letter of inquiry to Smith at Chicago.—About the time we are through with all this, we receive a letter from the postmaster at Hatch Hollow, Erie county, Pa., ordering us to discontinue the paper sent to that office to John Smith, stating that Smith has gone to Chicago, Ill.—Now everything is clear as daylight; but we have spent nearly a half day's worry and work in making a change of address, that might have been made in five minutes if Chicago Smith had been careful in ordering a change.

If Rule 4th of our “Rules for Agents” were strictly observed, all this worry and extra labor, expense and disappointment, would be obviated. You may think this an imaginary case, but we want it distinctly understood that it is a “dream that is not all a dream.” We have had many similar cases, some even worse. We do wish all our agents and subscribers would familiarize themselves with these simple rules, and strictly observe them in their correspondence with this office. Instead of presuming that we remember your names and addresses, and the business you have heretofore transacted with this office, it would be safer for you to write as though you supposed we remembered nothing about you nor our former dealings. It would save us much valuable time, expedite business, and prove more satisfactory to all parties concerned. We wish to say in conclusion, that many of our correspondents are careful. B.

A GOOD PLAN.—Brother Jacob Mishler, Mogadore, Ohio, says: “I am well pleased with the curtailing of the name of your paper. I will give you our mode of keeping a supply of Hymn Books for those in want. Last summer five brethren joined together. Four of them each paid in $5, making a fund of $20. The fish brother does the business. It is his business with this fund to keep a supply of Hymn Books on hand all the time, and to sell them at actual cost. We now have books in our meeting-house at all times, and persons can have them at cost. This makes it much cheaper and pleasanter than having them sent by mail. We have pleasant winter weather and generally good health among the brethren."

The above plan is certainly worthy of consideration. There is not a church in the brotherhood that could not raise a fund sufficient to keep a supply of Hymn Books. There are several features in this plan that recommend it very highly.

1. It is easier for four or five to furnish the means to keep up a supply of books, than for one to do it alone.

2. It furnishes books at the cheapest possible rates.

3. The books will always be on hand, so that when a person wants a book, he can have it at once.

4. It is a cash system, and as such would be of great advantage to the publisher. It is not a light matter for the publisher to send out books on commission, to be paid for when they are sold, as many ask him to do.

We suggest that the fund ought to be a little larger, and then it would be sufficient to keep up a supply of other books and tracts. B.

A REQUEST.—As I always have taken one of our papers since I belonged to the church, I wish you to send me the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN; for it is a comfort to read the news of the church; especially to one that in former years lived in Rockingham county, Va., where I could hear preaching by the brethren every Sabbath, and have the brethren and sisters to visit us. But alas! I have moved into a strange land among strangers. We have two sons living near us, yet it is not living among the brethren and sisters. If any of you laboring brethren should be coming west, by way of Lafayette, and inform me of your coming, I will meet you there and have an appointment for you to preach, where I believe good may be done.

Yours in love,

JOHN & DAPHNA STINESPRING,
Newton's Retreat, Ind.

In another column of this issue will be found an article by Amasa Lord, headed "Frederick the Great, and Why he was Called so." This article will be concluded in the next number. It is indeed astonishing, and a great pity, too, that men should be called great who oppress, and rob, and destroy their fellow men like this unworthy and unholy man did.

May every reader be enabled to see more clearly the hideousness of such a life, and learn to love and lead a life of peace. B.

BROTHER J. G. ROYER, Monticello, Ind., Jan. 17th, 1876, says:

"The first number of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN arrived a few days ago, and has thus far proved itself a very agreeable and entertaining visitor. Its pages have been conned by all who are able to read. May it continue to come, bringing us healthy and nutritious food for the inner man, and may it be successful in carrying primitive Christianity to many benighted homes, is my prayer.

"The health among us at present is pretty good; the weather is very pleasant; the calls for meetings numerous, and the people in most places seemingly anxious to hear the word of the Lord. We had five additions lately, and hope to be able to report more before the winter days shall all have passed away. May the work of the Lord prosper here and elsewhere—the prayer of your unworthy brother."

BROTHER LEVI KITTINGER of Massillon, Ohio, sends us a full statement of a shocking homicide, perpetrated in that city on Sunday morning, Jan. 16th. Edward Richardson was shot and killed by his wife. Mrs. Richardson, too, has a wound about her throat, made by the use of a razor, either by herself or her husband.—Bro. Kittinger will excuse us for not publishing the report as he gives it, as we do not wish to give much space to the record of such inhuman deeds, unless there is a good lesson to be taught thereby. B.

BROTHER P. S. NEWCOMER, Boonsboro, Md., writes:

"May the Lord assist you in spreading our religious Literature still more extensively; and may a fresh impetus be given to correspondents so that your columns may be largely and legitimately supplied with wholesome food for the digestion of your many readers. May their pens of inspiration contribute profusely toward the enlightenment of the brotherhood—toward our instruction in righteousness and true holiness; and may they be especially instrumental in ashing conviction into the hearts of many precious souls, who are still held within the bonds of sin and iniquity, that they may be transported from the power of darkness into the glorious liberty of the children of God. May God grant that the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN may be a swift-winged messenger of peace, and that numberless households may nestle under its protecting wing, and find comfort and safety in it from its legitimate teachings. May its vindication of truth be based upon sound theories, predicated upon the unadulterated "thus saith the Lord;" and in combating error, may it prove effectual in turning many from the error of their ways, and bring them to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ."

CAUTION.—The following is sent us by a brother:

"Brethren, before any of you, not physicians, that may answer the sharp Eye-cup advertisement which makes its appearance in No. 3, present volume of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, engage and lose as I did, read the following answer to a correspondent in the Herald of Health, February, 1866, published at No. 15 Lighthouse street, N. Y., and 337, Strand, London. 'J. E. W.—These instruments have been found useful in some conditions of defective vision, but cannot be depended on as a remedy for diseases of the eye, or impaired eyesight generally. They are not of much importance in "old age" or "shortsightedness." Read last sentence on page 19 of No. 2, present volume, PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. By no means buy more before you try one single pair of eye cups. Had I put my money into something belonging to my own regular business,—pigs or chickens, for instance,—I would, no doubt, have done much better. Had I that money now to pay for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for myself and several others who I know are walking in darkness, I would feel much better to think that their spiritual eyes might be opened, and my own improved."

BRO. J. E. BRYANT, of Carleton, Thayer county, Nebraska, writes thus:

"In 1873 I emigrated from Morgan county, Indiana, to Fillmore county, Nebraska. Up to this time I had no knowledge of the Brethren church. Last spring I united with the church, since which time I have been greatly interested in the salvation of my friends and relatives in Indiana. In reading the Companion and Visitor I was surprised to see that there were a goodly number of the Brethren in Indiana, and some even in an adjoining county (Owen). My motive in writing this is to persuade some Brethren minister to go and preach the gospel to the people of Morgan county. They have such a gospel(?) as is preached by the Methodists, but I fear it will not stand the test in the last day. If any brother or brethren will go and preach to them, I think they will be obeying the injunction, "Go preach my gospel to every creature," &c. If they will go and preach to them, and will let me know, I will pay the fare for them to Martinsville, the county seat.

"Now, brethren, here is a great field of labor for you almost at some of your doors, and many precious souls to save. I hope some of you will take an interest in this, and come over to Macedonia and help us."

BRO. SOLOMON SCREIST requests us to say to our readers that he "can cure the coughing consumption." His address is Columbia City, Whitney county, Ind.

SOMEBODY at Jewell Centre, Kansas, is no doubt beginning to wonder why his well-written article does not appear. The writer did not give his name, and, of course, we cannot publish his article until he does.

A QUERY.—It is said of Moody that he said he would like to see a person that was born into the church of Christ when he was born into the world. Now the query is, Is it contrary to the Scriptures to claim our little children belong to the church or kingdom of Christ? This query is offered to draw out the views of brethren or sisters relative to what relationship our children have in their state of innocence to the church. As there are different opinions, we seek to have sound doctrine upon the subject.

J. S. FLODY.

We have late intelligence stating that brother Hope and his family are still detained in eastern Pennsylvania, by the continued illness of sister Hope. They however, are among the Brethren and are kindly cared for.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

A Trip to Harrisburg.

Some weeks ago, leaving Indiana, in Indiana county, we took passage for the capital of the great State of Pennsylvania. Nearly everybody knows that it is the Pennsylvania Central Railroad that crosses the State from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg, and it is one of the the greatest thoroughfares in the world. Train after train whirled by—long freight trains, swift passenger trains, accommodating accommodation trains, and, once a day, the Limited Mail, with its white mail-car, and its swift flight and few stops.

Winding in and around the sinuosities of the Cnemahugh river, where the giant hills seem liable to topple over into the mountain streams below; in and around through the hills we go until we begin to creep over the Alleghany mountains, one of the backbones of the continent.

What a wonderful piece of engineering skill the P. C. R. R. is! Tearing along the incline with the mountains on all sides, and ravines and gorges flitting by, one involuntarily wonders at the skill of man in crossing a mountain in a railway car—steep inclines, long tunnels, horse shoe bends, and over and above all, mountains, mountains, mountains.

It seems strange to notice people living along the line of the road, with nothing but scrubby hill pines and rocks for their surroundings. Farms that make a man wonder where and how the owners get a living. But they seem to be contented and happy, and there seems to be a place for everybody and somebody for any place.

Over the mountains we pass places of considerable importance: Johnstown, Altoona, Lewistown, and other towns and cities pass in review.

A wonderful change in the face of the country is observable from the hill farms to the beautiful valleys, with the unpronounceable names, back of Lewistown, where so many of the brethren dwell in peace and quiet.

On the train I had the pleasure of meeting quite a number of our Legislators; Hon. Endsley, of Somerset, Hon. Thompson, of Indiana, Hon. Shugart, of Centre, Judge Orvis and others, all going to the capital to make laws, good and bad, wise and unwise, to govern us. I wonder if these men know what they are doing, and the destinies they make and unmake.

At the capital the Legislature was in session, and I saw Hons. A. Bell and Thompson of Armstrong county. I also had the pleasure of meeting Hon. Chas. Wolf, from Lewisburg, Union county.—This gentleman and I were schoolmates in early youth, and I was pleased to meet him where I did. One of the oldest members of the House remarked to me that he regarded Charlie Wolf as one of the "purest young men in the Legislature."

During my stay I met Hon. John W. Wallace, member of Congress, from Newcastle, and we called upon Gov. Hartranft. The Governor has made for himself an enviable record, and he spoke very favorably and complimentary of the Dunkard church. He evidently regards the Brethren as an "excellent people."

Gov. Hartranft, during his occupancy of the governor's chair, has introduced many salutary reforms, and made many advantageous changes. He would doubtless make a good president, if his party should bring him forward as a candidate.

I also had the pleasure of meeting Gen. Harry White, and Hon. A. W. Taylor, both enroute for the national capital.—Evoeywhere I heard the Brethren favorably spoken of, and if we only knew the power we held when acting conjunctively, great good might result from putting suitable men into office. People ought to embrace any and every right and honorable means to do good; and it is without a doubt that wise and good laws come only from wise and Christian legislators.

The Legislature, under the new Constitution, meets biennially, and can pass no special acts; thus doing away with the third house, the lobby, and its great number of private and personal bills.

As a body the present Legislature will compare favorably with any of its previous assemblages, and its chance of doing good is unlimited.

Harrisburg, as a city, has grown up wonderfully during and since the war.—Where there were only vacant lots and long stretches of fields ten or fifteen years ago, are now solid blocks of business houses and private dwellings.

The whole time of my stay was occupied in working for the good of a common cause in which every reader is interested, but which, I am sorry to chronicle, proved a failure, so we will say no more about it.

The Brethren church should come to the front. It cannot afford to lose its young men. It cannot afford to fall behind in the race. It should be where it can do the most good; and in everything where there is a moral issue it should be found ready to strike for the right and good.

Returning over the same route, I am back again, and found in school harness.

Yours truly,

HOWARD MILLER,
Prof. in Plumcreek Normal.

RIPON, Cal., Jan. 10, 1876.

Brother James:

Having seen nothing in your worthy periodical from this part of God's moral vineyard, I will endeavor to give you a few items which may be interesting, if not profitable, to some of your numerous readers, with many of whom I formed acquaintance in time past. Many of them I have not seen, neither heard from, for a long time. Perhaps the relentless hand of death has been laid on some of them, and his icy arms have encircled them, and like the northern blasts of winter, chilled their hearts' blood, and carried them to their silent chamber—the doleful tomb—there to await the sound of the trump of God to awaken them from their slumbers and raise them from the grave—to summon them to appear at the judgment seat of Christ, there to receive their sentence, and hear the invitation, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Welcome news! glad tidings! blessed thought! Purchased by the redeeming blood of the spotless, the immaculate Lamb of God, crying in ecstasies of delight, with joy unspeakable and full of glory, "Glory to God in the highest, and to the Lamb forever and ever!" One soul saved, which was lost and is found, which was dead and is alive again. God be praised. Yes, praise him all ye mountains, and ye isles wake up, join in the praise of him who sitteth upon the throne, and judgeth righteously. If this be not your lot, you must hear the awful, the dreadful, yes, the heart-rending and soul-piercing denunciation, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." What a solemn, awful, dreadful thought!

Reader, whoever you may be, have you ever given the subject of death and judgment a serious thought? Have you ever tried to measure the justice of God's laws, which he has given to you? Have you ever tried to weigh the words contained in the denunciation of God upon the wicked and ungodly? Have you ever tried to fathom the depths of God's love and mercy which he daily manifests toward you, in preserving your life, and caring for you in all the vicissitudes of life? And lastly, did you ever, in your lonely hours, when the curtains of night have overshadowed you, lie down upon your bed in your solitary room, where you could without hindrance muse over the past, and cast the mind's eye back to Calvary and there behold the guileless Nazarene, the spotless Lamb, nailed to the cross, crying, "It is finished;" and then with an eye of faith, look forward to the time which crowns the great and notable day of the Lord, and there hear and learn what is finished, from the songs of praise, hallelujahs and exclamations of great joy proceeding from the mouths of those blood-washed throngs who are continually praising God and making the vaults of heaven ring with their melody? If you have not, "to-day, if you hear his voice, harden not your heart;" for to-day you are nearer the end of your life—yea, nearer the judgment of the great day—than you have ever been before.—Remember what the Lord has done for you, and how unreasonable it is in you to serve your most bitter enemy, and disobey and spurn the counsels of the God of heaven, when all his counsels are given for your present and eternal welfare.—And if you have weighed this matter well; if you have counted the cost of your redemption, and have enlisted under the blood-stained banner of King Immanuel, in order to help fill up the ranks of the armies of the Lord, let me say to you, Put on the whole armor of God; be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Fight valiantly the battles of the Lord; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Your captain has taken the command; he has gone before you; he is in the vanguard; he bids you and me to come on, not to be fearful, but believing. Press onward and upward toward the mark of the prize.—You have only a few more battles to fight, and one more river to cross, and then you can shout, victory! victory!!! Soon we'll gain the victory, and oh, what a meeting there will be, when we have gained the victory! Blessed thought!

My intention, when I first took up my pen, was to give you a few items only, but my mind has been carried away from the subject, apparently involuntarily, and my pen has followed the musings of my mind. Pardon me if have trespassed upon your patience by my digression.

But to return, we are glad to be able to say that the brethren in this part of God's heritage are alive to God, and apparently realize a full sense of duty toward one another and toward God. The Stanislaus church, (of which I am a member,) numbers about 35 members, all in working order, and are bound together in the strong bands of love and Christian affection, being of one mind and speaking the same thing. "Behold, how pleasant it is, when brethren dwell together in unity!" We have had to labor under many disadvantages, but thanks be to God, the darkness is disappearing, the day is beginning to dawn. We have a large field of labor before us. The harvest truly is great and the laborers are few. There is a call gone forth Macedonia, and we feel to prolong the sound and say to our dear brethren who are sound in the faith, who have the worth of souls at heart, "Come over and help us." California is not in all things as bad as it is represented. It has the name of being a very rough place,—drinking, gambling, stealing and murdering, &c. There is a great deal of wickedness in California, but not any more than in any of the Atlantic States, where I have been. I have been in 7 of the Atlantic States, and never saw a more honorable and generous people than the early settlers of California. Though many of them make no profession of religion, yet their deeds of kindness so far surpass those of many of the loud professors of some of the States that such professors should be put to shame. I will name two instances as a sample of their liberality. One is that of a man near Merced river, who accidentally slipped into a threshing machine and had his leg badly torn and mangled. The people in that vicinity had him cared for, and immediately went to work and contributed one thousand dollars for his support. Another man in the immediate neighborhood of the Brethren, had his ankle crushed in a horse power. He was also immediately provided for and five hundred dollars raised for him; and according to the last accounts I had, they were making an effort to raise five hundred more. So much for the roughs of California. And as neighbors, in all my sojourning, I never met with better neighbors than we have had in this State.

Brethren, how does this come? what excuse have we to offer? But admitting that California was the most wicked and benighted State in the Union, is that any reason that we should forsake it and go where we can be strongly fortified on all sides, and protected by the heaviest artillery and mighty batteries of the armies of the Lord? Seemingly there is a weakness in us when we retreat before the enemy. And methinks there is a lack of courage in us when we call back our troops from the out-posts, and station them within the strong fortresses. Would it not be better to send reinforcements and strengthen the weak outposts, and thus retain our position? I would say to my brethren on the Pacific coast, who, with me, are standing sentinels for Christ our captain: Stand your ground; do not give an inch. Every inch is so much gained. Though Satan's forces may come near you, and encompass you around, and hurl his deadly missiles at you, do not be dismayed. Only keep on the whole armor of God. Wield manfully the weapons of our warfare, which are mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. Never give over the battle. Surely we must fight, if we would reign. If we are faithful and true to the Master's cause, by and by we will make an inroad into the enemy's ranks, and rescue from the powers of darkness many who are dear unto us, whose souls are precious in the sight of the Lord. Some of you have children in the adversary's ranks, and we all have loving neighbors there. We must make a strong effort to release them from the bondage where-in they now stand, that their souls may be saved from death. And to those who say, "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" I would say, "Come and see."

We have a delightful climate and productive soil—good chances for brethren to get ground whereon to pitch their tents and to erect their altars; and besides this a chance to get a good home in the church of the living God, and plenty of work to do in gathering sheaves.

Let me yet remind you of the declaration of one Jesus of Nazareth, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Yes; he came to save that which was lost.

I would further say, that we were favored with a visit by brethren Benjamin Kepner and Joseph Studebaker, both of Illinois. Brother Kepner is a minister. He preached a number of appropriate and awakening sermons for us. They both are very zealous, lively brethren, and appear to feel a deep interest in the welfare of souls. May the Lord bless their labors of love. We were also made happy to meet brother Samuel Riggle and his wife, sister Mary Ann, who came here to see the folks and also to see the country. They were so much pleased with the society and country, that they made up their minds to locate among us. I would say to many others who desire to change places of abode, come and do likewise. Bear in mind this one thing, we expect, by the help of the Lord, to carry out the principles of the doctrine of Christ and the general order of the brotherhood, and those who have not become willing to submit to those rules are not needed here. May the Lord help us all to be faithful, that we may receive the crown of righteousness held in reserve for those that love God. "Finally, brethren, farewell; be of one mind, be of good comfort, live in peace."

Yours in love,

JOHN FUNK.

Our Trip to Clayton County, Iowa.

VINTON, Ia., Jan. 7, 1875.

EDITORS OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:

Dec. 8th, 1875, brother P. Forney and the writer started from home to pay a short visit to the brethren in Clayton county, Iowa. The first night we stopped with brother Wm. Davis; the second night, with Daniel Marts. Mr. Marts and wife are Adventists. We were kindly treated by them, free of charge; but, as is usual with the members of that church, they had a great many questions to ask—some important ones, and some (perhaps the greater number) unimportant, since they were not of that nature that involves salvation. Brother Forney answered all questions presented by them in a manner that did some good; at least this is my mind. As often as they changed their manner of attack, they were met by the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." We left them on the morning of the 10th, if not better, we hope more wise in regard to the power that God makes use of for the salvation of sinners. We called on Mr. Marts on our return. We expected to be again attacked, and prepared ourselves for the occasion, but in this we were disappointed.

We arrived at the home of brother John Hansel, Clayton county, Iowa., Dec. 10th, in the evening. Found all the brethren and sisters well. In the evening we had preaching in a school-house near by. Brother Forney preached from the words, "Repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel." We held 14 meetings with the brethren in Clayton county, preaching principally on doctrinal points. We met with some opposition in the matter of preaching "works," but nothing worthy of notice. Suffice it to say, that we tried in our weakness, to present to all, both saint and sinner, the importance of obeying all the requirements of the gospel without one single exception. Our meetings were well attended, and with one exception, good attention was given. All classes seemed to manifest a desire to know all about this "strange doctrine." We received many calls for preaching,—from those, too, who differed with us as to the manner in which God will save sinners. This part of Iowa is, as a general thing, ignorant of the doctrine of the Bible as taught and practiced by the Brethren. In consequence of this fact, I feel like making a solemn appeal to the Brethren of Iowa. Brethren and sisters, can we not send ministers to those places in Iowa, (almost at our doors,) where the gospel, as we understand it, is not preached? Will we not give to these starving souls the Bread of Life? Remember we have the means; we can do it if we will. God will hold us responsible, if we have the means to do good and do it not.—Come, brethren, let us arise, every church, yes, every member of the church, and help God deliver souls from the power of Satan. It is not expressly necessary that more than two of us should be at one appointment at the same time.

Hoping that the churches of the Brethren in this State will give this matter their serious and prayerful attention, I subscribe myself your brother and helper in this work.

ELIAS TROXEL.

Something About Brother Stein's Books.

In answer to many inquiries we present the following, which will likely throw some light on the subject that heads this article.

Soon after brother Stein left the Baptist church he commenced writing out twenty reasons for leaving the Baptists, with the intention of publishing them in a book to be entitled, Twenty Reasons for a Change in my Church Relations.—This would make a book of 500 pages the size of my "Trine Immersion." Being in limited circumstances he was not able to defray the heavy expenses of printing the work, and was then requested, and consented, to put it out, part at a time, in pamphlet form.

By his permission, we then published one of his Twenty Reasons in pamphlet form entitled True Evangelical Obedience. This is an able work and is doing much good. More lately brother Stein has published another of his Twenty Reasons entitled, Christianity Utterly Incompatible with War. This is the ablest work against the practice of retaliation I have ever read. These are the only two yet published.

He has now ready for the press several more of his Twenty Reasons on the following subjects: Nonconformity, Christian Baptism, The Lord's Supper, &c.—These will be published whenever the money can be raised for the purpose. If there are any of our full handed brethren who wish to do a good work by getting these before the public, we would like to hear from them. This is about all that I know about brother Stein's "Twenty Reasons" at present, and will be sufficient to answer all questions presented to me regarding them.

Early last spring, one of the leading Baptist ministers of Tenn., wrote brother Stein to know if he had left the Baptist church, and if so, to give his reasons for so doing. In answer to this brother Stein wrote quite a lengthy letter, which was published in the Companion last spring under the heading, "Why I Left the Baptist Church." This article was so much admired by many of our brethren that they requested that it be printed in tract form for general distribution. This is not one of brother Stein's "Twenty Reasons," but a letter written to one of the leading Baptist preachers of America, giving in a very brief manner, his reasons for leaving the Baptist church, in the form of questions pointedly and clearly put to the learned minister. All the above works are kept for sale at my office.

American Genius. Moody & Sankey.

The great revivalists, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, who electrified staid old England with their eloquence and enthusiasm, are fair samples of American genius.—Springing from among the common people, their sympathies are alive to the wants of the whole people, and herein lies the secret of their great success. Those who seek to be popular must study and be familiar with the wants of the masses, and prove loyal thereto. To this fact we may trace the grand success in business, as well as in religious undertakings, which many Americans have achieved. Strikingly illustrative of these suggestions is that great establishment, located at Buffalo, N. Y., and known as the "World's Dispensary,"—a most appropriate name, indeed, for the vast institution, within whose walls are manufactured remedies which are in demand in every quarter of the globe, and at which a corps of distinguished physicians and surgeons, under the personal direction of Dr. Pierce, are constantly administering to the needs of thousands of sufferers everywhere, and whose success in the treatment of all forms of chronic ailments has become so well known that there is scarcely a hamlet in the land in which his name is not familiar. Its proprietor, says the  Herald and Twilight, of Detroit, "is a man of the people, writes for them, and to them tenders his eminent professional services." His advertisements are earnest exhortations. Like the great revivalists, his enthusiasm is multiplied by the unparalleled success of his enterprise, as well as by the efficacy of his remedies, because, as the New York Tribune says, "his sympathies with them in all their afflictions, efforts, and attainments." Hence, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is today more largely employed as a blood and liver medicine, and also as a cough remedial agent in the world. His Favorite Prescription, he does not recommend as a "cure-all," as is so often done by compounders of worthless, humbug nostrums, but for all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women it has proved itself so much of a specific that it now enjoys great popularity and universal confidence. Dr.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, "secretly larger than mustard seed," have proved so agreeable and reliable as a cathartic that they are rapidly taking the place of the large, nauseous pills heretofore so much in use; while his Compound Extract of Smart-Weed is a favorite remedy for Colic, Cramps, Summer-complaint, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Cholera and Cholera Morbus, and also is a liniment. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, little need be said, as they are known everywhere as the greatest specifics of Catarrh and "cold in the head," ever given to the public. And besides this large measure of success, Dr. Pierce seems likely to achieve as great renown as an author as he has as a physician. His COMMON SENSE MEDICAL ADVISER, a book of about 900 pages, which he sells at the unparalleled low price of $1.50, has already been sold to the extent of exhausting two editions amounting to forty thousand copies. The secret of Dr. Pierce's success, as well as that of the great revivalists, and scores of other Americans, who by their genius have advanced step by step from obscurity to affluence and distinction, consists in treating the people with consideration, sympathy, candor, and honesty. No man, who hopes to attain either wealth or distinction, can afford to deal unfairly with the world or be indifferent to the wants and best interests of humanity.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OUR READERS. SPECIAL CALL. Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practices.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and WM. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificates: FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1874. Dr. J. DALL & Co., Oculists:—

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has yet achieved. It is a great and important truth, in this or in any other branch of science and philosophy, have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public, but that truth is right and will prevail. It is only a question of time as regards their general acceptance and endorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merits. I, as a general and practicing physician of my county recommend your Eye Cups.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER. WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALYSA, KY., writes: "Thank you for the greatest of all gifts. My sight is fully restored by the use of your Patent Eye Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., ARCHBOLD, PA., writes: "After total blindness of my left eye for four years, by the paralysis of the optic nerve, by my utter astigmatism your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes." Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I got at a glance that your invaluable Eye Cups performed their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally fed the eyes that were starving for nutrition. My God, how blessed you are, and may your name be ascribed in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

HORACE B. DURAN, M. D., says: "I sold, and selected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch-ponny affair, but a superb, number one, tip-top business, promises, as far as I can see, to be lifelong."

MAYOR E. C. ELLIS wrote us, November 16th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age." Hon. HORACE GREELEY, late Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. DALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition."

Prof. W. MERRICK writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye Cups. May heaven bless and preserve all those who have spent their lives in many years. I am seventy-one years old. I do all my writing without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. DALL & Co., I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired eyesight, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, at my advanced period of life—90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BORNBERG, M. D. Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Essex, ss. June 5th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Bornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

WM. STEVENS, J. P. LAWRENCE CITY, MASS., June 9th, 1873.

We, the undersigned, having personally known Dr. Adolph Bornberg for years, believe and guarantee an honest, moral man, trustworthy, and in truth and veracity unspotted. His character is without reproach.

M. BONNEY, Ex-Mayor. S. B. W. DAVIS, Ex-Mayor. GEORGE S. MERRILL, P. M. ROBT. H. TEWKSBURY, City Treas.

Reader, these are a few certificates out of thousands we receive, and to request you to all guarantee your old and diseased eye can be made new; your impaired sight, dimness of vision and overworked eyes can be restored; weak, watery and sore eyes cured; the blind may see; spectacles be discarded; sight restored, and vision preserved. ## "NOT MY WILL, BUT THINE, BE DONE."

Jesus! Jesus! none but thou
E'er mine end, mine aim shall be!
Lo, I make my covenant vow,
Meek to bow my will to thee.
So thy love my spirit fill,
I can rest in thy dear will.

One there is for whom I live,
Whom I love both morn and even;
Christ it is, to whom I gave
All his love to me hath given.
If thy blood but cleanse me still,
Lead me, Lord, as thou dost will.

Whatso'er my good may seem,
If thine eyes as ill it see,
Take it hence, destroy my dream,
Only grant what pleases thee!
Give thyself, through good and ill,
Give thyself, and I am still!

Let thy will within me reign,
In me, through me, on me, Lord!
Through my lifetime's joy and pain,
Let that will still peace afford.
In thy presence, calm and still,
I can die when thou dost will.

For the Primitive Christian.
My Conviction—No. 2.

BY GEORGE BUCHER.

In No. 49, page 770, of Companion and Visitor, of 1875, I tried plainly to express "My Conviction" in regard to the minister's support; and in this article I will endeavor to express "My Conviction" as to what an evangelical support is.

My conviction is that it is only an evangelical support when the minister makes an effort to support himself. The following from that stanch historian, Neander, is to the point:

"In the names by which at first those who administered church offices were distinguished from the rest of the community, no trace of this confusion might as yet be found. The Latin expression 'ordo,' denoted simply the guiding senate of the Christian people, (plebs.) See above. (By "see above" he means the fashioning of the priesthood of the Christian church after the model of that of the Old Testament, comparing the presbyters with the priests, the deacons, or the spiritual class generally, with the Levites. G. B.) Into the Greek words kleros, klerikoi, men had introduced, it is true, already in the time of Cyprian, the unevangelical sense of persons pre-eminently consecrated to God, like the Levites of the Old Testament, men employed on the affairs of religion to the exclusion of all earthly concerns, and who did not gain their living, like others, by worldly employments, but for the very reason that, for the good of others, they lived only in intercourse with God, were supported by the rest, just as the Levites, when the lands were apportioned, received no particular allotment, but were to have God alone for their inheritance, and to receive tithes from the rest for the administration of the public functions of religion, oi eisin ho kleros tou deou, or on ho kleros ho deos esti.

See Deut. c. 18. This notion of a peculiar people of God, (a kleros tou deou), applied distinctively to a peculiar order of men among the Christians, is now, we must admit, in this sense, something wholly foreign to the original Christian consciousness; for according to this, all Christians should be a people consecrated to God, a kleros tou deou, and all the employments of their earthly calling should, in like manner be sanctified by the temper in which they are discharged. Their whole living and doing,—pointed with one reference to Christ, the great High Priest of humanity, striking root in the consciousness of redemption, and bearing witness of its effects,—should hence become a consecrated thank-offering, and a spiritual worship, (a logike latreia.) This was the original, evangelical idea." His. of C. R. and Church, Vol. 1, P. 195.

The above plainly shows that the Ministry of Christ is quite different from the Priesthood. That "employing men on the affairs of religion to the exclusion of all earthly concerns," is "something wholly foreign to the original Christian consciousness." And thus Christ, the Head of the church, and the Light of us all, gave every one of his followers an example by working at an honest trade. "Is not this the Carpenter?" Mark 6: 3. And in the call of his apostles he gave a further example. He chose working people—men who were engaged in the active duties of life—men who being faithful in that which is least would also be faithful in much; "For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" 1 Tim. 3: 5.

It is a question, however, whether the apostles were still engaged in their temporal duties after their call to the apostleship. In Luke 5th there is an account of Peter, James, and John engaged in fishing. This was after their call to the discipleship, but before their call to the apostleship. From the call to the apostleship, until the crucifixion, we have nothing on record that they were engaged in their temporal duties. And this is verified by Peter's question to Christ: "Behold we have forsaken all, and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?" Matth. 19: 27. After the crucifixion we find seven of the apostles at fishing again. "Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, we also go with thee." John 21: 3.

Though the apostles often lacked in faith, they never lacked in principle. When there was no preaching to do they were ready to "go a fishing."

"Satan has some mischief still
For idle hands to do."

But here were no idle hands. And if we do not often find them at fishing, it is only because they were engaged in their Master's Cause. But verily the twelve say little from which the supporting or non-supporting of the ministry can be inferred. The bulk of this subject comes from Paul. And how do we find him? Was he wholly consecrated to the service of God? or, did he wholly support himself? Plainly, neither.

He labored to support himself. "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel. Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me. I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20: 33—35. Paul said this to the elders of Ephesus, and he said it not only of himself, but also of them. This is plain from the expression: "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak."

Again: "For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? Forgive me this wrong. Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you; for I seek not yours but you; for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children." 2 Cor. 12: 13, 14. And again, "For ye remember, brethren, our labor and travail; for laboring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God." 1 Thess. 2: 9.

And he received support from others. "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service, * * * for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied." 2 Cor. 11: 8, 9.

Another important point to consider in this "giving and receiving" subject is, when Christ sent his apostles "to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" he commanded them to "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in their purses; nor scrip for their journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves: for the workman is worthy of his meat." Matth. 10: 9, 10. There was no necessity for these things under that commission. They would only have been a burden. But shortly before he gave the second, last, and great commission to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," he said unto them, "When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that has a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip." Luke 22: 35, 36. Here there was necessity for these things. And another point under both commissions is, "Freely ye have received, freely give." They should take nothing for their services; not seek their's but them's; "Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles." 3 John 17.

I will yet say in conclusion, that in the two articles headed "My Conviction," I have tried to show that

1. The minister's motives must be higher than dollars and cents.
2. Ministers should have support.
3. The support is only evangelical when the minister makes an effort to support himself; and,
4. The support must come from the church and not from the Gentiles.

I now commit these abrupt remarks to the consideration of the reader.

Patient endurance will soften every misfortune that befalls us when not aggravated by self-reproach; but remorse is of all others the most afflictive stroke the heart can feel.

Voices From the Holy Land.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother Levi Hauck, of the Big Swatara Church.

"The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your heart and mind, through Jesus Christ." I am "confident of this very thing, that He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Phil. 1: 6. But we must be "co-workers with God." "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Our daily bread does not come "tumbling into the host" ready baked. Judges 7: 13. "The life is more than meat and the body more than raiment." If God gives the greater, He will also give the lesser; but neither without human instrumentality. If we call on God we must mean God. The hand is as much the medium of service as the tongue of petition. If we ask with the mouth what the body is not made the instrument of doing, our prayer is a woful mockery. He that implores God either for justification or sanctification while he depreciates the means, is an insulter of Infinite Holiness. He that engages in worship, and leaves the altar to employ his tongue in gossip and defamation, spits in the face of the immaculate God man, and sets His wounds bleeding afresh. To fawn on the rich and lofty, and lightly esteem the poor and lowly, is to reproach the wisdom and goodness of God in selecting the poor and despised and illiterate as the embodiment and channel of His Infinite Love and Power and Glory. "Err not, my beloved brethren."

"Follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." Start with Him at Bethlehem, and keep His foot-prints till you stand on the "sea of glass before the Throne." Take a lesson of condescension in the manger, go to Egypt to strengthen your trust in providence, return to Nazareth to wait on and prepare for your special mission, repair to Jordan for your consecration, and then with all the zeal of a martyr and the wisdom of a saint grapple with the stupendous problems of eternal destiny. Sit down with Jesus at Martha's table and learn how to eat. Sit at His feet with Mary and learn how to listen. Accompany Him to the mountain peaks and recesses and learn how to pray. Follow Him to Gethsemane and learn how to wrestle with the powers of darkness. Draw near to the foot of the Cross and learn how to suffer. From all His parables learn wisdom, and from His miracles learn the necessity of holiness and the power of faith. Let the vine become the mouthpiece of God, and let the sun, moon, stars, air, water, field and forest, food and raiment, day and night, become spokesmen for Christ. Open your alabaster box and fill the house with the odor of the ointment. It will attest its presence without blowing a trumpet. Its Divine fragrance will penetrate every nook and crevice from basement to attic. Your very garments will smell of Heaven. The lock of the door will testify that Jesus is a guest there. Let it be Jesus, Jesus, and none but Jesus everywhere. Adorn your hands with "gold rings set with beryl;" beautify your person with "bright ivory overlaid with sapphires." Be a miniature copy of Him who is altogether lovely—"the express Image" of Infinite Beauty.

"Thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast dove's eyes within thy locks." "There is no spot in thee." "Thy lips drop as the honey-comb; honey and milk are under thy tongue." This is God's picture of a saint. O, for this untainted, dove eyed temper, these honey-dripping lips, this gentle, mellifluous life. A scowl is the devil's visor; an angry expression, his pass-word. In the one he writes his name on the forehead; in the other he utters the old falsehood of Eden. Be thou ware of him. His name is legion. His form is protean. His arts are innumerable. He can disguise himself in Divinity as well as in a serpent. He knows how to quote Scripture. There is nothing good that he cannot mimic. He has a mantle of silk and gold for everything repulsive. There is no pipe so narrow, or eigar so short, or quid so small, that he cannot find room to nestle himself. He has often been seen in a handsome face, or heard in an eloquent tongue. I have known him to toy with a cap-string, dance on the dainty rim of a hat, and reflect his fire-seared visage from a pair of well-polished boots. I have even seen him in sheep's clothing, where his triumph was in all that was rough and soiled and threadbare and unattractive. He likes to show a lily-hand, or wrap himself in a flowing beard or raven curls. I am speaking of members. How often is he heard to roar like a lion in the ready, smoothly-turned periods of the preacher, and jabber in the voluble prayer of some self-addressing suppliant. I have seen him grin out of the decorations of a coffin, and wave his sable sceptre on a tombstone. He is next to omnipresent. No key on earth can lock him out of our closets, and much less out of our hearts. He alone who carries the keys of hell and of death, can push the bolt that keeps out the arch-enemy. "Abide in Him," and that "wicked one shall not touch you." "This saying is faithful and true." "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." This is the attitude of an expectant of glory. Satan can entangle us in his net by a laugh as well as by an oath. Levity suits his purpose as well as profanity. An idle word has the hiss of hell in it. If we allow the tempter to weave a web as fine as a gossamer, he is satisfied. It prepares the way for something stronger. A spider can run on its slender film as nimbly as on a cable. If we give the wily foe access to fasten one web, he will quickly follow it by another. The web will soon grow into a thread, the thread into a rope, and this into coil upon coil from head to feet, over body and soul.

Set a sleepless sentinel over your thoughts, and "keep your heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." Pray Jesus that he may Himself stand watchman at the door of your mouth. If we make Him porter of our lips, no "poison of asps" or "gall of bitterness" will drop from our tongues. That "unruly member," although so small, is mighty enough to "set on fire the course of nature," to keep the whole world in turmoil, to ruin souls, to blaspheme God, and to populate the wrath kindled wastes of perdition. Dip it in the blood of Jesus, and make it the exponent of His love, boldly testifying for the Cross, although the shame and inhumanity and ignominy that were heaped on the Redeemer be repeated in our own experience.

Entreat God to impress His seal deeper and clearer in your forehead, so that the signature of your celestial citizenship may be seen and read of all men. Be not content with a dim likeness to your Master, or a doubtful title to your inheritance. "Make your calling and election sure." "Look unto Jesus" until His glorious image is burned into your soul, and you walk through the world a living photograph of Emmanuel. Have "the witness in yourself," and the evidence in your conduct. No merchant fills his house with ware without some external sign to announce his calling. True believers are Christ's advertisements—signs hung out to the gaze of the world to lure them to the exhaustless riches of God's Infinite Treasure-House. Be Jesus over again, according to your measure. Let all the outflows of your life be distilled in the great alembic of Golgotha—love, love that fails the Cross, even in an agony of blood and death, only so that the purpose of Infinite compassion be consummated. See that you pronounce the shibboleth of Heaven without faltering. Bring out the h plain and full. Life and death hang on that single letter. There are no nonessentials with God. There are no mutes in the vocabulary of Jehovah. If we omit the h we will fall at the passage of Jordan. Judges 12:5, 6. Heaven and earth will go to wreck before the Immutable will erase the dot of an i. Christ spells His Name with just such and so many letters. More or less is the devil's hand-writing. WATCH AND PRAY.

Manual Labor.

BY JAMES WIRT.

Since the expulsion of man from the garden of Eden, the Creator demands physical labor from the hands of his intelligent offspring. The mandate has gone forth, that, in the sweat of his brow, man should eat his bread until his corporeal body returns to its primitive element. During the present order of things, he is required to put forth muscular exertions in order to gain a livelihood; and being thus destined to labor, accords harmoniously with his constitution. Organized as man is at present, labor is conducive to the continuation of the vital forces, and the functional powers of the body are improved.

The earth was cursed for man's sake, that when he should till the soil, it would not bring forth plentifully, thereby necessitating greater toil to obtain a sufficient amount of the products of the earth to answer the purposes they are intended to subserve, to keep in operation the sustaining processes of his corporeal organization.

The laws of our being require a certain amount of physical force expended from the system that it may retain its normal muscular activity. Our endeavors should be to bring the physical man, by proper training, to the highest standard of perfection attainable, and so doing is truly beneficial to our moral nature.

Man is a creature of want, and the avenues through which his supplies are obtained remain open. The health of an individual depends upon the amount of exercise taken, as stated before; the tone of the system is improved by judicious labor. Physical exercise will profit in a small degree, but Godliness has the promise of the life that now is and that which is to come. It is incumbent upon us to accept our situation and faithfully work until we are called to a wider field of labor, to enter upon the heavenly employments of the future state. There we can rest from our labors, and our works will follow us. It depends upon our conduct through this life whether we shall enjoy the rest that remaineth for the people of God.

The Bible informs us on this wise, whatever our hands find to do, to do it with our might; for there is no work nor device in the grave.

The Christian is always willing to put forth the necessary exertion for the promotion of the cause of Christ. All have plenty of labor to perform in the vineyard of the Lord, for which they will be richly compensated by receiving eternal life. The life of Jesus after his baptism presents a scene of unremitting labor, as he was constantly engaged in doing good in order to complete the work whereunto he was sent; and when expiring on the cross he exclaimed, "It is finished, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." The work of Evangelization has been committed into the hands of faithful men, workmen approved of God.

For Those Who Love to Do the Right.

Come, brethren and sisters, one and all, put away vain and evil speaking of one another; speak every man truth with his brother or sister, for we are members one of another. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from us, with all malice. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another. If any brother or sister be overtaken in a fault, ye who are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; not by slights and snurs, for such things have a tendency to create anger, hard for a weak minded brother or sister to trample under foot. "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace. From your unworthy sister,

MARY J. SMITH.

Huntington, Ind.

Some people tell lies to children with a view of enjoying a laugh at their credulity. This is to make a mock at sin, and they are fools who do it. The tendency in a child to believe whatever it is told, is of God and for good. It is lovely. It seems a shadow of primeval innocence glancing by. We should reverence a child's simplicity. Touch it only with truth. Be not the first to quench that lovely truthfulness by falsehoods.

Sincerity is the basis of every manly virtue.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

A CRY OF THE SPIRIT.

I am so weary, Lord! my load of care Seems still more heavy with each opening day;
I cannot lift it. Father, hear my prayer!
And give me strength to keep the upward way.

I am so lonely, Lord! the gray and bright
And prosperous ones of earth all pass me by;
The friends of happier days ignore my sight;
I come to thee, O Father, hear my cry!

I am so hungry, Lord! my soul is faint
For heavenly nourishment, amid the strife;
I starve, O Father; hear thy child's complaint
And feed my spirit with the "bread of life."

I am so thirsty, Lord! my heart would sink Withered and parched upon earth's arid plain;

Fill thou my cup, O Father, let me drink
Of "living waters," ne'er to thirst again.

I am so sad, O Lord! the cries of woe
From suffering human souls afflict mine ear;
O save and help them, Father, and I know
They must be comforted when thou art near.

Weary and lonely, hungry, thirsty, sad,
With all my sorrows, Lord, to thee I come;
Safe in my Father's arms I will be glad,
And walk, in faith, till he shall call me home.

Frederick the Great and Why He was Called so.

BY AMASA LORD.

The "Seven Years' War" was now fairly commenced. The ambition of sovereigns and generals led them to disregard alike their own comfort and that of their troops. They were goaded forward beneath the blaze of a summer's sun and through winter's storms, and drifts, and freezing gales. The sweep of maddened armies spread desolation and misery over Europe. Starving soldiers snatched the bread from the mouths of starving women and children, and houseless families froze to death in the fields. When the city of Prague was besieged during this war, the scenes of misery witnessed were awful beyond description. An incessant storm of shot and shell fell on the crowded dwellings. Conflagrations were continuously bursting forth. Famine came. Pestilence followed. Demons could not have inflicted more misery than the wretched inhabitants endured, and the scenes witnessed here were repeated in many other cities of Europe.

At one time, depopulated and impoverished Prussia, made so by the grasping ambition of her ruler, and containing a population of less than five millions, had arrayed against her the combined armies of Austria, France, Poland, Sweden and Russia, which at that time contained a population of one hundred millions. Against such unequal numbers, the king of Prussia fought with the ferocity of a tiger. He filled his broken ranks with peasant boys and any raw recruits whom he could force into the ranks by the energies of absolute power. He even compelled prisoners of war, whom he had taken, to enlist under his banners and fight against their countrymen.

The results of this ferocity were terrible. Villages were burned, harvests trampled under foot, fields crimsoned with gore, widows and orphans starved on the dreary plains, and still there were no decisive results. Frederick acknowledged to his friends that his prospects were hopeless, but resolved to struggle to the last and bury himself beneath the ruins of his kingdom. Having rejected Christianity, and having none of the consolations of religion to sustain him, he carried constantly a phial of poison that, as a last resort, he might commit suicide.

At length, the tide was turned in favor of Prussia. The Empress Elizabeth of Russia, one of the most powerful of the coalition against Frederick, died on the 5th of January, 1762, and her death changed the fate of Europe. Peter the III., who succeeded her, hated Maria Theresa and admired Frederick. He withdrew his troops from the alliance and sent them to the aid of Prussia, for he too was an absolute monarch and his soldiers fought in blind obedience to his will without reference to the merits of the cause. The Swedish Court, which was allied to that of Russia, did the same thing. Frederick was at last successful, and retained Silesia. This success made him a hero, and secured for him the title of "the Great." If he had been unsuccessful, he would have been almost forgotten or remembered only with pity and disgust, and fewer boys would have been named for him both in Europe and America.

But his greatness was secured by the partial ruin of his own country, and that of others. According to his own computation, the conquest of the province had cost the lives of six hundred and seventy thousand of allies, and one hundred and eighty thousand of his own troops. The population of Prussia had been diminished five hundred thousand during the seven years' war. The day after the treaty of peace was concluded, Frederick wrote to his friend, D'Argens, as follows: "For me, poor old man as I am, I return to a town where I know, nothing but the walls—where I find no longer any of my friends. To form an idea of the general subversion and disolation, you must represent to yourself countries entirely ravaged—the very traces of the old towns hardly discernible; of the towns, some were ruined from the bottom, others half destroyed by fire. Of thirteen thousand houses, the very vestiges were gone. There was no field in seed—no grain for the food of the inhabitants—noble and peasant had been pillaged, foraged, eaten out by so many different armies that nothing was now left them but life and miserable rags."

But the cup of Frederick's iniquity was not yet full. The kingdom of Poland contained a population of twenty millions, and lay between Prussia, Austria and Russia. The monarchs of these countries, like so many greedy wolves, resolved to dismember it and apportion each a part to himself. The man who could rob Austria of Silesia, without any pretext, but his own aggrandizement, would, of course, not refuse to aid in the humiliation and partition of Poland for the same purpose. If Frederick was not the originator of this perfidious transaction, he was at least active in its consummation. Partly by bribing the leading members of the Polish diet, and partly by force, the three powers accomplished their purpose, and the kingdom of Poland was at an end.

Soon after this the mortal career of the "great" Frederick, falsely so called, was also ended. His death occurred on the 11th of August, 1766, aged 74. He died as he had lived, a dreary death of pain and hopelessness. He had no faith in the immortality of the soul, of the existence of any God who takes an interest in the affairs of men; and in the anguish of his dying hours avoided all allusion to religious subjects. The Prussian territory had been nearly doubled under his reign, and contained at the time of his death about six millions of inhabitants. But he left to his country, as a standing curse, a standing army of two hundred and twenty thousand men, which consumed four-fifths of the revenue of the state, and enabled his successors to inflict still further evils upon Prussia and the rest of Europe.

Such was the man whom historians call "great," and whom even the present generation honors and reveres. We have shown why he is so called, but it is only because wrong ideas of greatness prevail that the title is conceded to him. When warriors come to be regarded in their true light, such monsters of selfishness and cruelty as Frederick and his father will be classed with robbers and murderers, and their names and memory will be execrated. If what we have written will tend to divest such men of the halo of glory which surrounds them, and teach the boys of our country to be

"Great, not like Frederick, stained with blood, But only great as they are good,"

the object of thus exposing his wickedness and presenting him in a different light from that in which he is ordinarily viewed, will be accomplished.

The present king, William of Prussia, or Emperor of Germany, as he now styles himself, is not a descendant of Frederick the Great, but is a descendant of his father, the tyrannical Frederick William I, whom we have noticed, being a great-great-grandson of a brother of Frederick II. He inherits from his ancestors their false ideas of the divine right of kings, and by the aid of the unscrupulous Bismarck, represses the desires of the Germans for peace and liberty, and makes them subservient to his lust of dominion and power. And yet, unless the civilization of coming generations is in advance of that of the present, he, too, will be called great, and held up to admiration because he was successful.

The military system of Prussia is an outrage upon humanity, and a curse to that country and to all Europe. By it every able-bodied young man is compelled to spend several years of the best part of his life in the army, where he is liable to contract habits of idleness and dissipation, and to become unfitted for the duties of civil life. To avoid this slavish military service is one of the principal reasons why so many Germans emigrate to America. The large standing army of Prussia, ready to be used at any moment as an instrument of aggrandizement or revenge, is also one of the principal reasons why the war cloud so often bursts upon the nations around her, for no maxim is truer than that preparations for wars produce rather than prevent them.

"Were half the power that fills the earth with terror,

Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts

Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals or forts."

PREACHING AND PROPHEYSYING.

[This article, originally published in the  Gospel Visitor, May No., 1870, is here republished, by request of the author, who is frequently written to on the subject, and feels that he can do no better than he has here done.—B.]

Answer to a sister's query: "What is the difference between preaching and prophesying. Some think there is none; please answer."

Dear sister: While I try to answer your important query I will associate with it the covering of the head. The text reads: "Every man praying or prophesying having his head covered, dishonoreth his head. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head; for that is even all one as if she were shaven." 1 Cor. 11: 45.

Whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying in respect to the man, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the woman. Paul says in 1 Cor. 14: 3: "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and to comfort." This being the gospel definition of prophesying, he says in verses 39, 40: "Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues. Let all things be done decently and in order."

Speaking unto men to edification and exhortation, and comfort, being the true gospel prophesying, it is one of the peculiarities of the gospel dispensation that God will qualify both men and women to do it. This kind of prophecy was predicted by the prophet Joel (2: 28), and referred to by Peter (Acts 2: 17). Then if there be no such gifts bestowed upon women the prophecy cannot be fulfilled. Peter gives the prophecy of Joel in these words: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and daughters shall prophesy," &c. The last days evidently refer to the gospel dispensation, and not to the one day of pentecost, as some suppose. We do not find that women took any part in prophesying on that day. God's promise will have its fulfillment during the gospel dispensation. It is true, as Dr. Clark says: "We seldom find great scholars good preachers. This should humble the scholar, who is too apt to be proud of his attainments and despise his less learned, but more useful brother." God choosing the weak things to confound the wise, he pours out of his spirit upon both men and women, that they may speak unto their fellow creatures, unto edification, and exhortation, and comfort. With the qualification, that it be done decently and in order.

By referring to 1 Cor. 12: 28, we find that God has set certain orders in the ministry of the word in the church, and in the order is that of "helps." In this order the sisters can serve, and can become powerful auxiliaries to the higher order of the ministry. Dear sisters, the functions of the office of "helps" you are called upon daily and hourly to perform. Praying with and speaking to those you are associated with, "unto edification, and exhortation, and comfort." In your families, to your children and domestics, to those you meet in your social visits, let redeeming grace be the theme of your conversation to all. And should you live isolated, that is alone away from the society of the Brethren, speak to your neighbors of Jesus and of his true service. Call on your ministering brethren to come and speak to the people the ways of the Lord more fully, and you will become a nucleus around which will be gathered a band of seekers after truth, who will look up to you as a model of true Christianity.

The writer has some experience on this subject. Some years ago there was a faithful unmarried sister in a mountainous district of country, cut off from the society of the Brethren, none living near her; no brother had ever preached there. The sister prayed and prophesied, speaking to her neighbors of Jesus and his true service. When they began to heed and inquire after the ways of the Lord more fully, she called the brethren to her help. I went and preached for them, and left an appointment to meet with them in eight weeks. During the eight weeks the people inquired many things of the sister; she prayed and prophesied, speaking unto them to edification, exhortation, and comfort. When I came the second time it seemed as if all the neighborhood came together; preaching was an easy task. The word of the Lord found way to the hearts of some, among whom was an old sinner, who had lived a hard life. He was the day after on his field sowing wheat. He became so distressed he could walk over the field no longer; he laid his seed bag in the fence corner and made his way to the sister's home, crying as he entered: "Is there any mercy for me; is there any mercy for me?" The sister prophesied by speaking to him "unto edification, and exhortation, and comfort." And never will I forget the scene when I immersed him and his wife, with a number of others, in the little mountain stream; and also that of a few years after standing by his bedside, when under the triumphs of faith he passed from earth to his rest. All the glorious work of grace which followed was started by a sister's prayer and prophesying.

In this way every sister can and ought to both pray and prophesy. And to their comfort and encouragement I will say, that one of the reasons why there generally are more sisters than brethren in the churches is that sisters generally are more ready to speak to their own sex on the subject of religion than the men are. But in the church the apostle says he "suffers a woman not to speak."

"But the woman praying or prophesying with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head" (the man, and through him Christ), whether she was married or unmarried; for the head of the woman is the man, as the head of the man is Christ, whether he be married or single. "Then let the woman be covered; for if she is uncovered, it is even all one as if she were shaven; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered; if a woman has long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a covering."

The heathen priestesses prayed or delivered their oracles bareheaded, and with dishevelled hair, and otherwise in great disorder; but to be conformed to them would be very disgraceful to Christian women; and for her to be uncovered would be even as if she were shorn or shaven, which would be a shame to her; "for the hair is given her for a covering." Why it would be a shame for the woman to be shorn, or uncovered, and in what sense the hair is a covering to her, I will try to show.

The apostle writing to the Corinthian church bases his argument on the customs and laws of the country. It was the custom both among the Greeks and Romans, and among the Jews an express law, that no woman should go abroad without a veil (or cover). What the material was, or how the ancient veil was made, or wore, we know but little more than it was a covering. "Boaz said to Ruth: "Bring the veil that thou hast upon thee, and hold it. And when she held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her." Ruth 3: 15. What the actual amount was, we do not know. But as the Targum according to Clark says: "The Lord gave her strength to carry it," and as it was intended for a present, the quantity must have been considerable—enough to prove it was nothing like the flimsy thing our women wear as veils. It being for a covering, it was made to answer the purpose as there understood.

A covering in addition to that of the hair the apostle enjoins upon Christian women to be covered with while praying or prophesying, and says it is a shame for a woman to be uncovered.

Public prostitutes went abroad without veils. So to be uncovered being the mark of the prostitute, it certainly would be out of order for Christian women to be uncovered, and thereby dishonor their head. For all the Jewish brethren knew that by the law of Moses, the woman suspected of adultery was stripped of her veil, and had to stand uncovered before the priest while the curse of the bitter water was pronounced upon her. (No. 5.) In our own days a woman who dresses loosely or fantastically is often suspected to be not very sound in her morals; so in those ancient times a woman without a covering was considered impure in her morals.

These are good and weighty reasons why a woman should be covered. But there is another reason more weighty still why she should have power, that is, a covering, (margin), "on her head, because of the angels." The Savior says, "Their angels always behold the face of my Father which is heaven." Matth. 18: 10. And the apostle says, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 14. When are these ministering angels more active in their ministrations to the heirs of salvation than when they are in prayer and exhortation to edification and comfort? Dear sisters, the ministering angels, your invisible associates, will have it so. Will you have it otherwise?

"If the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn, let her be covered. If a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her, for her hair is given her for a covering." In what sense the hair is a covering to the woman, and why is it a shame to her to be shorn of it, I will try to show. Historical testimony abounds to prove that, by the laws and customs of these times, a woman proven guilty of whoredom, or adultery, had her hair shorn off as a mark of infamy and disgrace. In Germany a woman proven guilty of these crimes was punished in this way: "Having her hair cut off and stripped of her covering before her relatives, her husband turned her out of doors." Also woman reduced to a state of slavery had her hair cut off. These being the laws and customs, a woman having her hair cut off carried with her the public mark of infamy and disgrace; while her long hair were in glory to her, for they covered her from this disgrace. In this sense only were long hair a glory to the woman, and for a covering; but while they answered this purpose, the apostle requires an additional covering to qualify you for religious duties. A covering in token of subjection, purity, and virtue; a covering separate and apart from the covering for shelter and protection from rain and storm; for these are used only when needed for that purpose. When you are in the house, these are not needed; and when on a friendly visit, the first token of welcome is an invitation to lay off your head dress or bonnet. Then if you are not covered with a cover in token of religion, there you sit all day long uncovered, and so dishonor your head and grieve the angels. You say anything will answer for a cover. This is true in a certain sense; but then you must wear that anything for that purpose, and if your bonnet is intended for the covering you must keep it on in your house, or on your visits. And if you sit with it on in the public assembly, what difference is there between you and the woman who sits with you but makes no pretension of religion.

You say, times and customs have changed, and it is not now considered improper, or a shame for virtuous women to be uncovered, and even have their hair cut short &c. Dear sisters, I will not dispute this point with you. I will only say, the laws of God governing his service, have not changed, and never will change. And while that is the law which says, "It is a shame for a woman to be shorn, or to pray or prophesy with her head uncovered will dishonor her head," in violating these laws, you have no guarantee that God will regard you in any other sense, than in the sense in which the law was given.

"But if any one seems to be contentious, we have no such custom, neither the churches of God." That is, if any set themselves up as wranglers and disputers of these points, let such know that we in our churches have no such customs of wrangling and disputing these points; neither have other churches of God such disputings. Then don't you Corinthians have it in your church. Brethren and sisters, neither let us have any in our churches; but let the sisters wear a cap when praying or prophesying whether in the family, social meetings, or in the public assemblies. It is both decent, neat and chaste, and highly becomes your sex.

Permit me to close this article with a quotation from Dr. A. Clark on this subject. He says: "The apostle inculcates the necessity of order and subjection, especially in the church. Those who are impatient of rule, are generally those who wish to tyrannize. And those who are loudest in their complaints against authority, whether civil or ecclesiastical, are those who wish to have the power in their own hands, and would infallibly abuse it if they had. They alone who are willing to obey, are capable of rule; and he who can rule well, is as willing to obey as to govern. Let all be submissive and orderly; let the woman know that the man is her head and protector; let the man know that Christ is his head and Redeemer; and the gifts of God's endless mercy for the salvation of a lost world."

The apostle insisted on the woman's having her head covered in the church, or christian assembly. If he saw the manner in which christian women now dress and appear in the ordinances of religion, what would he think? What would he say? How could he even distinguish the christian from the infidel? And if they who are in Christ are new creatures, and the persons who ordinarily appear in religious assemblies are really new creatures, as they profess, in general, to be in Christ; he might reasonably inquire, if these are new creatures, what must have been their appearance when they were old creatures? Do we dress to be seen? And do we go to the house of God to exhibit ourselves? Wretched is that man or woman who goes to the house of God to be seen by any but God himself!

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

In Reply to Brother C. H. Balsbaugh's
"Diapason of Redemption."

BY MARGARET DEARDORFF.

Thank you, dear brother, for the consolation you have given me through the Primitive Christian. You know that it is much easier to bear with our infirmities when we know that others sympathize with us in our affliction. It is a great comfort to me in my loneliness to read such cheering words. When I am sitting in my accustomed seat, where the gospel is preached, how often have I been wishing if I only could hear what is said; but being so often disappointed in that respect, I have concluded to try at least to be contented in whatsoever state I am. When brethren have a strong voice I can understand a good deal of what they say; but when their voice is not so strong, it all appears to me as silent as the grave. If I could use my deafness as a garment, put it on and take it off when I pleased,

I would consider it a great blessing; but this I cannot do. Were it not for our periodicals my situation would be a distressful one indeed; but by reading our papers, I can hear preaching every week. What a blessed privilege! How often have I been refreshed by reading articles in our papers! It is true there are some that are not of much benefit, but then there are others that will pay ten fold. The greatest loss to me since I have lost my hearing is, that I cannot enjoy myself when they sing praises to God, as I formerly did. How my soul used to be enraptured with delight! But now when they sing I can but hear a faint sound as if it came from a distance. But as you say, "When that august reconstruction will roll its Divine 'Ephphatha' in upon your now paralyzed tympanum, and flood the heights and depths of your soul with the harmony which God has been to Himself from eternity," this is enough, dear brother, and more than I deserve; and I will patiently endure all the disadvantage that may arise from the loss of my hearing. God is good, and will answer our prayers in his own good time. You say, "we are both pushed to the outskirts of society by our physical infirmities." This is true when in some societies, but not so when in the society of the Brethren; for I can truly say that I have many dear, kind, and loving friends among the Brethren, who always seem to sympathize with me in my unpleasant situation. Nearly always when I am in a company of brethren and sisters, there is some one that will take a seat beside me and communicate to me, if not all, at least the greater and most important part of what is said. This I consider a very great favor. It is true, as you say, that my difficulty is local, and unaccompanied by pain, while yours is general and the source of continuous agony; but never mind, dear brother, there is a good time coming, when all our afflictions will be as nothing when compared with the glory that we can and will enjoy. I want you, dear brother, to write as long as the Lord will grant the ability. You can employ your time in no better way than to help promote the cause of Christ. You will receive your reward in the end.

We All Have Faults.

He who boasts of being perfect is perfect in folly. I have been a good deal up and down in the world, and I never did see either a perfect horse, or a perfect man, and I never shall until two Sundays come together. You cannot get white flour out of a coal sack, nor perfection out of human nature; he who looks for it had better look for sugar in the sea. The old saying is, "Lifeless, faultless." Of dead men we should say nothing but good; but as for the living, they are all tarred more or less with the black brush, and half an eye can see it. Every head has a soft place in it, and every heart has its black drop. Every rose has its prickles, and every day its night. Even the sun shows spots, and the skies are darkened with clouds. Nobody is so wise but he has folly enough to stock a stall at Vanity Fair. Where I could not see the fool's-cap I have, nevertheless, heard the bells jingle. As there is no sunshine without some shadow, so is all human good mixed up with more or less evil; even poor-law guardians have their little failings, and parish beadles are not wholly of heavenly nature. The best wine has its lees. All men's faults are not written on their foreheads, and it's quite as well they are not, or hats would need wide brims; yet as sure as eggs are eggs, faults of some sort nestle in every man's bosom. There's no telling when a man's sins may show themselves, for hares pop out of a ditch just when you are not looking for them. A horse that is weak in the legs may not stumble for a mile or two, but it's in him, and the rider had better hold him up well. The tabby-cat is not lapping milk just now, but leave the dairy door open, and we will see if she is not as bad a thief as the kitten. There's fire in the flint, cool as it looks; wait till the steel gets a knock at it, and you will see. Everybody can read that riddle, but it is not everybody that will remember to keep his gunpowder out of the way of the candle.—John Ploughman.

CURSOR reading, imported thought, passive acceptance of truth droned from the pulpit, mere splinters of time and of mind given to God, have their value, but they are not enough. Prayer and watching alone bring the heavenly vision. The heart is a great interpreter, a great prophet. Love is inspiration. Love will see a thread stretching down from the throne of God which is otherwise invisible. Love will hear a whisper when the unloving soul hears nothing. Eagerness and desire must be in it. God unveils many a mystery to the hungry heart.—Dr. Swazey.

For The Young.

What My Little Boy Taught Me.

"Tommy, come to mamma."

A sullen little face, with scowling brow and pouting lips, appeared at the door.

"What have you got to do?"

"I've got to stay in bed all day." And with the words Tommy jerked off his jacket, and kicked one boot across the chamber floor.

"What naughty thing have you been doing?"

"Spoiling the calla lily."

The words, tone and manner of the little boy of six were so hard and defiant that a vague alarm seized me, and I said gently—

"Come here, my poor little laddie, and get into mamma's bed. You look very cold."

The downcast eyes were lifted in a strange, glad surprise, and the remaining garments were laid aside softly. Slowly, shyly, and questioningly the little fellow crept in by my side and lay quite still.

"Now, Tommy, tell mamma all about it."

"I only just pinched the littlest leaf. I wanted to see what it was rolled up so tight for. There's ever so many more."

"Yes, Tommy, but no more like this one. All the year you have seen these little rolls unfold into broad, glossy, green leaves; but this one, Tommy, was a bud. If you had watched without touching it, you would have seen it grow larger and lighter in color, until some bright morning you would have run down stairs, to shout and clap your little hands over the most beautiful flower you ever beheld. It would have looked up lovingly into your face from its heart of gold, and its pure velvet lips would have smiled upon you for letting it live and bloom. I am so sorry you hurt the dear little bud, that now can never be a flower."

"Can't it be mended, mamma?"

"No, dear."

"You mended the cup I broke."

"Yes, darling, a broken china cup may be made whole again, but a sweet little bud, waiting to become a rich, golden flower, pinched and torn by cruel fingers, can never be restored."

"And cannot God restore it mamma?"

The penitence, pathos, and despair of the child's face were indescribable. I drew the little form to my breast in silent awe.

"I'm almost as bad as Cain, mamma," he said, sobbing heavily.

"How is that, dear?"

"I've killed something. But mamma, I did not mean to, truly. I didn't know I was hurting the little bud. I'll never touch a plant again—only look at it, mamma, and love it, and wait for the morning when it'll be a great beautiful flower."

Precious little teacher! What a lesson for us mothers! In the hurry and worry of this toiling, molling world, are we not in momentary danger, as we walk in the garden of our homes, of pinching, if not killing, something? Think of the tragedy it would be if, through our haste and heedlessness, we should crush and destroy the bud of tenderness—so full and bursting in the heart of a child—and give to a society a callous, unfeeling man or woman! There are such in every community. Did the good God, whose name is Love, make them so? Who then is the wretched culprit? And where shall he or she be found in that great and awful morning when the Lord of the garden shall demand the full and glorious flower which was to have been developed and perfected from the sweet little bud given unto the bosom of father and mother?—Home Guardian.

Ten Minutes To Live.

On board an English steamer, a little ragged boy, aged nine years, was discovered the fourth day out from Liverpool to New York, and carried before the first mate, whose duty it was to deal with such cases.

When questioned as to his object in being stowed away, and who brought him on board, the boy, who had a beautiful, sunny face, and eyes that looked like the very mirror of truth, replied that his stepfather did it because he could not afford to keep him nor to pay his passage to Halifax, where he had an aunt who was well off, and to whose home he was going.

The mate did not believe the story, in spite of the winning face and truthful accents of the boy. He had seen too much of stow-aways to be easily deceived by them, he said, and it was his firm conviction the boy had been brought on board and provided with food by the sailors. The fellow was very roughly handled in consequence.

Day by day he was questioned and re-questioned, but always with the same result. He did not know a sailor on board, and his father alone had secreted him, and given him the food which he ate.

At last the mate, wearied by the boy's persistence in the same story, and perhaps a little anxious to inculpate the sailors, seized and dragged him on the foredeck, and told him that unless he told the truth in ten minutes from that time, he would hang him from the yard arm.

He then made him sit down under it on the deck. All around him were the passengers, and the sailors of the middy watch, and in front of him stood the inexorable mate with his chronometer in his hand, and the officers of the ship by his side.

It was the finest sight, said our informant, that I ever beheld, to see the pale, proud, sorrowful face of that noble boy, his head erect, his beautiful eyes bright through the tears that suffused them. When eight minutes had fled, the mate told him he had but two minutes to live, and advised him to speak the truth and save his life; but he replied with the utmost simplicity and sincerity, by asking if he might pray.

The mate said nothing, but nodded his head and turned pale as a ghost, and shook with trembling like a reed shaken by the wind. And then all eyes turned on him, the brave and noble little fellow—the poor boy whom society owned not, and whose own stepfather could not care for—there he knelt with clasped hands and eyes turned up to heaven, while he repeated audibly the Lord's Prayer, and prayed the Lord Jesus to take him to heaven.

Our informant adds that there then occurred a scene as of Pentecost. Sobs broke from strong, hard hearts, as the mate sprang forward to the boy and clasped him and blessed him, and told him how sincerely he believed his story, and how glad he had been brave enough to face death, and be willing to sacrifice his life for the truth of his word.—Christian at Work.

Believing What We Understand.

A man once came into Mr. Day's store and asked:

"Do you believe in the Trinity?"

"Yes sir."

"Do you understand it?"

"No sir."

"How then can you believe it. I never believe things that I do not understand."

"How," said Mr. Day, "can I raise my hand to my head?"

"By contracting the muscles of your arm."

"But how can I contract the muscles of my arm?"

"The will acts upon the nerves, and causes the contraction of the muscles."

"How does the will act upon the nerves, and what is the will?"

The man at last replied:

"I do not know."

Mr. Day told him, "Since you cannot understand the simplest processes of life do not attempt to understand all of Jehovah. Let God manage his own affairs in his own way and believe that he is the truth."

THE BELIEF OF DISBELIEVERS.

From the circumstance that unbelievers, using the word unbelievers with its ordinary meaning associated with it, do not believe the Scriptures, or in revealed religion, we are likely to dismiss them from our minds as if they had no belief at all, or at least to forget their peculiar belief and what is involved in it. We should notice the difference between unbelief and disbelief. Unbelief is a mere failure to admit a proposition; disbelief is a positive rejection of the proposition. A person may be an unbeliever in Christianity because of ignorance, having never inquired into the truth of it; a disbeliever positively rejects it. An unbeliever is usually open to conviction; a disbeliever, having rejected that of which the falsity has been proved to his satisfaction, is not so likely now to be convinced of the truth of it, though it may be true.

The following remarks of Archbishop Whately upon the credulity of disbelievers have much truth in them: "Disbelieving is believing; since to disbelieve any assertion is to believe its contradictory; and whoever does this on slight grounds is both credulous and incredulous; these being, in fact, one and the same habit of mind. This, though self-evident, is frequently lost sight of, owing to the employing in reference to the Christian religion the words, 'Believer and unbeliever;' whence, unthinking persons are led to take for granted, that the rejection of Christianity implies less easy belief than its reception. Whereas, in reality, the infidel shows greater credulity than the Christian. The Christian believes that miracles took place in the setting up of Christianity; but assigns a sufficient cause for those wonderful events—namely, the Almighty power of God; and a sufficient reason for the exertion of that power—namely, to attest a divine Revelation. They, on the contrary, suppose that all the best established laws of the human mind were violated, and that man, in this one case, acted differently from the way in which they act in every other, while yet they are unable to assign any probable cause, or any specious reason for such an astounding miracle. And no one should make a boast of his 'incredulity' in disbelieving something that is very strange, while he is believing, as the only alternative, something incomparably more strange."

The remark that the "infidel shows greater credulity than the Christian," in the above paragraph, may seem strange to some and false to others. But when the case is properly examined, the truth of the remark must be conceded. Credulity means easiness of belief, and the remark implies, that disbelievers believe some things upon less satisfactory evidence than Christians have for believing in Christianity.

One of the arguments used in maintaining the truth of Christianity, is drawn from the miracles that were wrought in attestation of its divine authority. And this argument has great power. That Christ and his apostles performed works which required divine interposition or supernatural strength, is a proposition susceptible of the most satisfactory proof. And infidels perceiving the strength of the argument in favor of Christianity drawn from miracles, have denied the miracles attributed to Christ and his disciples. But what absurdities are involved in this denial!

If Christ and his apostles did not perform miracles, it follows that though they were obscure and uneducated Jews, with nothing to give them power, yet they were foolish enough to imagine that they could introduce and set up a form of religion whose precepts were in direct opposition to the habits, prejudices, and customs of the world from whom their converts were to come. But as foolish as the conception of such an idea would indicate they were, nevertheless they showed a great deal of practical wisdom in the course they pursued.

Again: If their pretensions to miraculous power were false, and they were wicked impostors, they must have had some ambitious or avaricious objects in view. But nothing whatever of this kind can be discovered in their conduct. On the contrary, they manifested great deadness to the world, self denial and humiliation. And to reconcile these traits of character with the general character of impostors, or of men of evil designs, is not easily done. Then to believe that the apostles were impostors, and that they imposed upon and deceived the people, and that their miracles, though performed in broad daylight and publicly, were a deception, is to believe what is most unreasonable and absurd. We may take the resurrection of Christ with all its attendant circumstances as an example. It had been taught and believed, at least by his friends, that he would rise from the dead. And to prevent his resurrection the sepulchre was sealed and well guarded. It is said that Pilate was requested to guard the sepulchre, "lest his disciples come by night and steal him away." It is evident the enemies of our Lord feared he would be taken away by his friends and hence took special care to prevent it. And strange and inconsistent as it may seem, the very persons who feared he would be stolen by his friends, and who had taken every measure they thought necessary to prevent it, were the persons who reported that he was stolen! Was not this equivalent to saying, "We could not prevent his leaving the grave, though we had the military power and all the power we asked at our disposal?"—It surely was. And thus the discomfiture of the enemies of Christ at his grave, shows the presence of a supernatural power, and by that power he rose. This is the testimony of Scripture. Disbelief affirms his friends stole him away. Which side, then, has the preponderance of reliable testimony? It is surely the side of belief.

The thought we have presented, and endeavored to develop in some degree, is the thought that disbelievers, though they reject the truth of the Bible, believe a great deal. To believe that the miraculous performances narrated in the Scriptures were all a human contrivance, to impose upon mankind; that although done by Christ and his apostles publicly, were never detected as a fraud; that the wonderful success Christianity met with in enlarging its dominion, and in multiplying its adherents, was accomplished altogether by human agency, is to believe what is little less marvelous than the gospel miracles which disbelievers reject. And the marvelous things which disbelievers believe from the ground which they occupy, are not accounted for satisfactorily. But according to the belief of Christian believers that Christianity is of divine origin, the wonderful things of the gospel can be accounted for very readily, since the power of a divine agency is acknowledged. And with much propriety may it be said that "no one should make a boast of his 'incredulity' in disbelieving something that is very strange, while he is believing, as the only alternative, something incomparably more strange."

DR. BEHREND'S MIGRATION.

On the 23rd ult., Dr. Behrends, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Cleveland, Ohio, tendered the resignation of his pastorate, to take place on the first of the present month. In connection with his resignation he stated that no reasons of a personal nature had induced this decision and action; but that after thirteen months of varied experience since the utterance of his "views on the communion question," he found himself "so radically at variance with the denominational spirit, that a peaceful withdrawal from the Baptist body" seemed to be his only honorable course.

In October, 1868, this same Dr. Behrends, on the Open Communion question, expressed himself thus:

"He who asks me to practice Open Communion, asks me to put the knife to the heart of my own denomination, and smile while its life-blood is gushing out. * * * Break down these barriers around the Supper, and if you are a thinking man, or a thinking woman, you must go one step farther—you cannot avoid the conclusion that the observance of an ordinance is not essential to obedience, but optional—that it may be set aside or modified at pleasure or convenience. And then you are ticketed on the express train that stops at no station this side of Rome—unless you jump off at the risk of life and bones. Instance upon instance could be produced where Open Communion has sapped the life of churches, and carried them right into the current of Pedobaptism."

In these prophetic words an important truth is put in strong terms; but he said, "My 'way of putting' this thing is not too strong." With this we agree, feeling that such truths cannot be clothed in language too strong; and the Doctor's after course is an irrefutable argument for the correctness of his position as above given.

How must his congregation have been taken by surprise, when, in December, 1874, he delivered a sermon in which he sought to "break down these barriers around the Supper!" In this sermon he argued that baptism was not a necessary practical prerequisite to communion; but that faith alone gave inalienable right to it. So far as he was concerned, therefore, the barrier around the supper was broken down, and, according to his own position and logic, he "must go one step farther." This step he has taken and now holds "that the observance of an ordinance is not essential to obedience, but optional—that it may be modified at pleasure or convenience." According to his own "putting," he is now "ticketed on the express train that stops at no station this side of Rome." Will he go to Rome?—He does not want to go so far yet, and therefore, "at the risk of life and sound bones," he is trying to "jump off" at Providence, R. I., as a candidate for settlement over the Union Congregational church at that place. The Baptist church at Cleveland accepted his resignation without dissent or murmur, and accompanies him with its prayers and good wishes.

Without stopping to discuss the question as to whether the Doctor made a "better" or a "worse" by the change, let us learn from the circumstance to stand up unyieldingly for the Scriptural doctrine that Christian baptism (by trine immersion) is a practical prerequisite to the Lord's Supper. B.

The Editor.

He left on the night of the 28th ult., as announced in our last issue. We have heard from him once since. He was then in his field of appointed labor, and reported the meetings as being interesting. May he have a pleasant and successful visit. B.

Gleanings and Gittings.

It will be observed that we have an unusual amount of correspondence in this issue; and we wish to say that we could not find room for nearly all. Farther, as news is most appreciated when it is fresh, we take the liberty of gleaning from some letters that were intended for the correspondence department the most interesting portions, and dropping the balance. This, we trust, will be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

We have letters from the north, south, east and west, stating that so far the winter has been unusually mild, and that the general health is good. The greater part of January was very pleasant here among the mountains; so much so, that the buds on the trees began to swell, and fears were entertained, that, if such weather should continue awhile longer, fruit trees might suffer from following frosts. On the night of the 1st inst. there was a sudden change, and since then it has been quite cold. B.

AMONG the letters we cannot find room for, is one from brother Gabriel C. Frey of Covington, Ohio. He gives an account of a flood in the Stillwater river. He says the banks were overflowed and much soil was washed from the bottom lands, and fences were swept away. He also states that the upper bridge at Covington was taken, and that a little boy (Newton Denvalt) and a little girl, aged about 12 years, daughter of Henry Langston, went down with the bridge. The boy swam to a tree about 50 rods below, whence he was rescued with a boat after much suffering from cold and exhaustion. The little girl, however, was not so fortunate. When the wrecked bridge struck the pier of the railroad bridge she sunk and was drowned. This was on the 28th ult. A few days later she was found about half a mile below. Her parents have the sympathies of the community. Let this be a warning to all, and especially to children, not to allow their curiosity to lead them into danger. B.

THE Danbury News says: "When a man detects a missing button after getting on a clean shirt, no one in the house is aware of the fact. He takes off the shirt and puts on another, quietly smiling all the while. He never, never speaks of it to a soul."

We can imagine that our subscribers have about the same pleasant feelings when they fail to get their papers on time. But they do not quietly put the paper off and put on another—they kindly inform us of the failure, and then patiently wait till the paper makes its appearance.

Just at this season of the year there will be more or less errors or failures in sending out papers. We are now beginning to see our way out of our present flood of work; and we hope that all who have failed in getting papers will notify us at once and we will send them. Do not say "Some of my papers failed to come, and as I do not wish to miss even one number, I wish you to send them." This would be nice enough, but it does not tell what is wanted. Tell us the number and date of the missing papers, together with your name and address, all plainly written, and then if your paper does not come, it is—not your fault. B.

In No. 4, page 59, under the head of "Poor Fund," we called S. R. Wells a brother. This, we are credibly informed by a beloved brother who knows, was a mistake. S. R. Wells is a sister, and we father the error and cheerfully make this correction. B.

We have no particular desire to know everything, and we certainly have no hope that we shall, at least, while in the flesh ; but we do wish we had such a general knowledge of persons, places, and things that we could attend satisfactorily to such letters as the following, without troubling any one :

"Brother Quinter: please add Wm. Kemper's name for the paper to our list, and oblige. John McCreary."

It may be humiliating to confess it, but it is true that we do not remember brother McCreary's address; and we are too ignorant to know where to send W. K's paper. If brother McC. had given his own post-office, it might have been a little help; and if he had also given the subscriber's address it would have been still better; but if we could only know all such things, this would be best of all, as it would help us in all similar cases. Any light on the points of darkness will be hailed with gladness. B.

BROTHER S. T. BOSSERMAN, Dunkirk, Ohio, Jan. 31st, 1876, says: "The Ark of the Lord is still 'onward' with us.—We have had several accessions to the church during the past season; and quite recently brother Jesse Calvert and brother J. P. Ebersole were with us and held a series of meetings, and 14 more were made willing to accept the offers of salvation and were admitted into the church by baptism, for which we 'thank God and take courage.'"

BROTHER B. E. PLAINE, of Guthrie county, Iowa, writes: "We have had the mildest winter, so far, with the exception of a few days, that we had since we are in Iowa, now over nine years. It has been thawing and freezing nearly every day and night for the last six weeks; consequently our roads are nearly all the time too rough to travel. In other winters the ground was frozen up all winter and the roads were smooth and solid as a turn-pike."

"I like the change of the paper very much. The paper is larger and better, and the correspondence much improved so far, and the name PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, a very appropriate one. I am much pleased with it, and think every family of the Brethren should subscribe for it. I am sorry that many of them prefer to take papers of much less importance, and pay more money for them, and feel too poor to take the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN."

BRO. S. Z. SHARP, Jan. 24th, says: "I write to thank you for sending to the paper to the parties named. I hope you may be duly repaid by some one's contributing for such purposes. Now, dear brother, I hope you will be more cautious than ever in rejecting every article that may be controversial, or that may detract from the good name of the brotherhood. I will do the best for you that I can. With prayers for your welfare, I remain your brother."

We are glad that we can say to you that a few liberal-hearted brethren have already come forward and authorized us to send more papers at their expense to such persons as brother Sharp may name. Such contributions, given from a proper motive, will certainly be acceptable unto the Lord, and, no doubt, in a short time, brother S. will be able to chronicle some good results from the papers thus distributed in his territory. B.

BRO. A. H. EMMERT, of Sterling, Ill., after his best wishes to us, adds: "The cause of the Master is prospering some in our district, which is large—the members being scattered—and few laborers."

BROTHER LEWIS M. KOB, in a note dated Jan. 22nd, at Franklin, Iowa says:

We the brethren in Decatur Co., Iowa, are still striving to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We expect preaching regularly ever 1st and 3rd, Sunday of each month, at our meeting-house near Franklin. We had Sunday school last summer; brother Jacob Caster Superintendent. This winter we have social meeting every Thursday evening, some of which have been very interesting, to me at least, and I think also to others. It is good to assemble together to exhort and admonish one another; for we all need encouragement."

BROTHER Z. ANNON, Thornton, W. Va. Jan. 30th, says:

"We have had a very open winter. We have had no snow to amount to anything; but we have had a great deal of rain and mud. Second, we have had three series of meetings in our district. Brethren Annon and Moses Fike held the first, at the Red Oak; and four were added by baptism. The second was at Nuzum's Mill. There the labor rested upon myself, as I tried to get help from various points but none came to assist. Hence in my weakness I delivered nine sermons, and the result was that five were buried in baptism and arose to walk in newness of life. The third was at the Thornton School-house. At this place elder E. Anvil was with us a portion of the time. Also brother Digman, from the upper end of the district, preached and for us. Four more were united to the church. * * * There is to be a young man buried to-day at the Thornton graveyard. Thus we see we are dying mortals."

THE PRICE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN is only $1.60 a year. We could easily accommodate a thousand more subscribers; and as we are publishing a cheap paper—our readers say it is a good paper—we hope there will still be an effort made to secure subscribers. This is a good time to solicit. B.

How is This?

In noticing the appeal from Denmark for the preaching of a pure gospel among them, and the response it met with, involving, as it did, the translating of some of the Brethren's works, and the expense of sending missionaries to that distant field, there were two things that occurred to my mind of considerable interest.—First, the existence of an active spirit of evangelizing, so that those of other lands may share with us in the blessedness of the truth. This is certainly very gratifying, and it is to be hoped that the movement may result in accomplishing much good, both where the call originated, as well as to develop among us still more of a spirit to carry the gospel into many untried localities.

In connection with the foregoing reflections there occurred to my mind, the repeated calls from the large and promising western missionary fields of America, embracing a population of several millions of people, with brethren singly and in groups over a large portion of this territory, without a preacher of the Brethren within reach; these would be the nucleus of many congregations were they supplied with a minister. Looking at this state of things I could not help inquiring in my own mind "how is this," since, no sooner is there one call from beyond the "Atlantic" for a ministry than all interest becomes active, and we cheerfully lay under contribution to this call, men, means, and church literature, while in our own home land there is call after call, long and loud, and comparatively little interest is awakened. Is it because more souls may be reached in Denmark in proportion to the effort than here? No, it is not that. Does the Danish call promise a better harvest than our own western States? No. Does it cost less in time and means? No; but vastly more to reach this transatlantic field. Is it because our response to the Danish call will trumpet our fame vastly more? Ah, who understands himself? Surely all will say that it is wrong to be influenced by the love of fame; but may not this account for it—i. e., we can reach Denmark by using our ability as a fraternity, and therefore are in duty bound to do so, (no one objects); and as regards our own home calls, we relieve ourselves from any sense of duty by thinking that those calls will be met somehow. But that way of dismissing the subject won't do, since that somehow leaves the hitch just where it has been lo, these many years. What is wanted is simply to inaugurate another home Danish movement, and push that "somehow" to the wall. Let us again lay under contribution the men, either by having them migrate, and station among those scattered members throughout the great west, or by some other method, if any better and more feasible is possible, who shall see that to them and many others the truth may be preached. And along with the men, also, the means and literature necessary to do a good work.—This will remove the perplexity from the mind of the writer which led him to inquire "How is this?"

Brother Quinter?

Having been present at a communion meeting of the "New Dunkards," as they call themselves, I will notice a few things that were said and done on that occasion. In the first place, one of the ministers remarked that they had come together to partake of the "Lord's Supper," or bread and wine, with the children of God, and it would be far from him to debar or prevent any denomination from coming forward and partaking of the "Lord's Supper" with them, and with a few earnest invitations to come forward to the "table of the Lord, remarked that they were not so "narrow, contracted, and bound up in a nut shell" but that they could commune with any who felt themselves to be Christians.—

After making some very unappropriate remarks on the Lord's Supper, he dismissed that part of the subject and turned his attention to "feet-washing." Upon this subject he made some remarks reflecting upon the church of the Brethren, remarking that he knew a brother in the church of the old Brethren that told him he had not had the privilege of washing the brethren's feet for upward of twelve years, and when he inquired of the brother the cause, he said it is generally understood among the old brethren that the bishop shall do the washing of feet, assisted sometimes by the deacons. This he related as an argument in favor of the single mode of feet washing, which they hold tenaciously. After hearing him misrepresent the Brethren and speak at length on some other topics, I wrote him a letter concerning his remarks, telling him that old Brethren were too well known in this part of the country for him to come 100 miles and preach that to a congregation with the expectation that they shall believe it. I also told him that I though if he wished to retain his influence over that congregation it would be advisable for him to rectify that expression the next time he came back, but he only made it worse, and besides that he misrepresented the letter that I wrote to him. But for all this I can bear with; but I want to say to the brethren and sisters, that if you do not wash feet when you meet for that purpose, the fault is with you, rest assured of it, and not as the friend stated above. The Savior said we should wash one another's feet. Now if we don't do it, it is our fault and consequently we must suffer loss.

Now in conclusion I will say to the brethren and sisters, "Let us hold fast our profession which we have professed before witnesses." "Let us earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints"—the faith which the "old Dunkards" are so earnestly contending for, and not give away as the "new Dunkards" have already done, in "feet-washing," "the Lord's Supper," "trine baptism," and "non-conformity to the world," but that we may earnestly contend for the simplicity of the gospel, and the necessity of church government and council, is my prayer.

My Experience; or, How I Became a Member of the Church of the Brethren.

To all the Readers of the Primitive Christian, Greeting: May "Righteousness and peace and joy in Holy Ghost," be in and prevail among you.

I will now avail myself of the privilege extended in No. 42 of the Companion of 1875, viz.: to give a statement of my experience, or how I have been led to obey God's word, and how I became a member of the church of the Brethren.

If it is not digressing too much, I would wish to begin by referring to the years of my childhood, and state that from my earliest recollection I was religiously inclined, and delighted in being so. I loved the Bible, and delighted in reading it. When assembled at the house or place of worship, I considered myself as being in the presence of him who knew the secrets of every heart. I was reared in the Methodist church. At the age of twelve I became a seeker; and continued for about five years, during which time I frequently knelt at the "mourners' bench," and with profound solemnity implored God for grace and pardon—for the Holy Spirit to guide into all the ways of truth and righteousness. My anticipations and desires at this time were never fully realized.

At the age of seventeen I came to the conclusion that it was not for me to obtain that degree of assurance of peace and pardon which others professed to have obtained. The importance of uniting—becoming identified with a religious body now became very apparent. The society known as the "Evangelical Association" became my choice, with whom I continued about eleven years. During the first year of my membership, a choice was held for an exhorter, whose duty it should be to assist in leading the class and conducting the exercises of prayer-meetings, &c. The lot fell upon me, and the office was solemnly accepted.

During the time of my labor while leading and exhorting the class, and during the hours of private devotion and meditation, when my mind was engaged upon the sacred rites and ordinances, which the great Head of the church instituted, something seemed to say, "Worship is not conducted in our day as the Lord hath ordained." For instance, when examining the subject of baptism, I became fully convinced that this sacred rite was designed for believers only—not for infants nor unbelievers—and that it should be administered in the water or by immersion; not by sprinkling or pouring. But when inquiring upon this subject, our preachers would try to persuade us to believe that there was no virtue in baptism, that it was only an outward work or sign, and that sprinkling or pouring were just as good as immersion. Thus I was, as it were, lulled asleep, and tried to be satisfied with what my parents had done for me in having me sprinkled for baptism in my infancy. After the same manner when reasoning upon the ordinance of feet-washing; this was explained to have been designed only for the Apostles. I being young, inexperienced and illiterate, came to the conclusion that the preachers ought to know; and I tried to confide in them. Thus I allowed it to pass, and continued to officiate to the best of my ability, in the sphere assigned me by the class or church, until in the year 1855, when we bade adieu to our class, to my father and mother, our kindred and our native State (Pennsylvania), to try the far west. Wisconsin was the State of our destination, where we arrived in safety on the night of October 5th. Here our lot was cast in a portion of country where we were deprived of the privilege of meeting with the people of our choice.—About eighteen months elapsed and we resolved to emigrate to a settlement where we could meet with our Evangelical brethren, about 100 miles distant, but the Lord prevented us. Our lot was cast in a neighborhood of regular Baptists and United Brethren, the Baptists taking the lead, with whom we frequently met.

Not much time elapsed until we were induced to investigate the subject of baptism more thoroughly. This we did: but having a little fault to find with some of the doctrines and practices of the Baptists, we did not consider it prudent to become identified with them; but I resolved to demand baptism at the hand of the Baptist elder, (for I conceived an impropriety in receiving baptism from the hand of one who had no faith in baptism, or thought that sprinkling and pouring would answer as well as immersion). Accordingly I determined to embrace the opportunity at the next regular (monthly) meeting. On Sunday the 10th day of January, 1858, during the services, a. m., when the doors of the church were opened, I arose in the midst of the congregation, and made known my request—gave them to understand that I did not wish to become a member of their church, but only wished to be baptized. This appeared to them to be something very strange, therefore the prudeness of the Elder demanded counsel. After the close of the exercises I was informed that my request would be granted. We repaired to the water. The officiating elder, (John Crandell) led me into the flowing stream I stood by his side while he with an uplifted hand toward heaven, solemnly addressed me thus: "Brother Bahr, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" then he immersed me backward once.

There was public worship again in the afternoon, on which occasion my wife took example after me, and was immersed on the same day at the setting of the sun.—The meeting was protracted, during which time I would occasionally express a few thoughts. Great inducements were offered us to accept the hand of fellowship; and in one week after our baptism, my wife and I became identified with the church of the Regular Baptists in Badaxe, Vernon county, Wis.

On the 27th day of March, eleven weeks after our baptism, the church was called together on business, and the same day the undersigned was chosen to the ministry, and was advanced to the third degree in the ministry at the same time. (Singular proceeding, indeed). The care of the church was now laid upon me. At the next regular meeting, April 10th, I took the position assigned to me by the church. When the invitation to receive members into the church was extended, among the number welcomed into the church was a young lady who desired to have baptism administered at the next regular meeting. This duty, of course, was expected devolve upon me. Never having administered baptism, and having had but little experience in this course, and looking upon baptism as a very important undertaking, I betook myself to the Bible with renewed zeal, with the design to acquaint myself, as far as possible, with all its bearings and connections, until the appointed time for its administration, so that I might be able to proceed according to the directions given by the great head of the church; for my greatest desire was to please my loving Savior.

Not many moments were now allowed to pass unimproved. A great light appeared to illuminate my pathway all around, and I thought I could see my way clear; but as I followed that light, my mind was arrested by the instruction given by the Apostle to the Pentecostian inquirers, from which teaching I became fully convinced that baptism was connected with the forgiveness of sins—that by obedience to God in faith, repentance and baptism, (which should always follow in close connection,) we have the promise of forgiveness. This doctrine was not taught by the Baptists in that section of the country; but rather that a person must have the assurance, and confess that he has experienced the forgiveness of his sins before he is a fit subject for baptism. Again, when reading Gal. iii. 27, I inferred from that Scripture that in or by baptism we become members of Christ's body, or, in other words, are admitted into the church. This also was contrary to the practice of the Baptist church.—However I entertained no fears but that I should succeed all right in that respect in time.

Next my attention has arrested by the commission as recorded by St. Matthew. And now a mighty struggle between life and death ensued; for I could not reconcile single immersion with the commission, and to administer otherwise would seem like advancing rather too fast. I tried in every imaginable way to reconcile the commission with the mode by which baptism was administered to us, but the longer I dwelt upon the subject, the more I became convinced that single immersion could not fill the commission, and when I thought to administer by single immersion, I felt assured that I should feel condemned. Yet before I became willing in this case to yield to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, I was impressed with the horrible state of one whose conscience is (as St. Paul says in 1 Tim. iv. 2) "scared as with a hot iron." The Spirit assured me that if I should persist and do contrary to the teaching I was now receiving, that deplorable condition must be my unhappy lot. Yea, more; I would grieve the Holy Spirit, and commit that sin which hath never forgiveness. This may appear very strange to you, kind reader, but let me tell you that to this day I look back with the same understanding, believing as I did then. But, friendly reader, my feelings are very different now from what they were at that time. While penning those circumstances I feel to rejoice and say, in the language of David, "Blessed be the name of the Lord, for he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my going.—Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust. Many, O Lord, are the wonderful works which thou hast done."—Psa. xl.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

I have stated above, that when I investigated the commission, a mighty struggle ensued. The conflict was for life, for righteousness, and for honor. I knew full well that unless I should officiate in the position which was assigned to me by the church, I could not retain the office; and to disregard the divine teaching should be death,—not temporal, but spiritual and eternal. And the honor which my brethren had already proffered, and what I might reasonably anticipate in the future, was not a little thing to reject, weighing matters after the manner of men. To deny myself of all the pleasure set before me, and the honor and good will of all, and allow, not only my Baptist brethren, but all who knew me, to look on me as having become a fool, I knew was rather more than I at first felt willing to suffer. But when I took another thought, I had reason to consider myself unworthy of all the great honor already bestowed upon me, and felt to prize more highly the honor which God promised to bestow up on those who would deny themselves, take up the cross and follow the meek and lowly Jesus. St. Paul said, "If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise." 1 Cor. iii. 18.

With profound solemnity, I now resolved to inform my brethren that I could not conscientiously administer baptism in any other way than by trine immersion, and inasmuch as I had not been baptized in that way, I should have to decline for the time. I carried this resolution into effect. How to proceed further I knew not; for all was dark before me, as I knew of no people who practiced as I understood the Scriptures. My chief desire was to have baptism administered unto me in the name of each of the Divine persons according to the formula as recorded by St. Matthew, which I understood then, and do still understand, to be the only place in all the good Book, where the form or mode of baptism is prescribed. At that period I was totally prostrated. Gross darkness prevailed. To describe my feelings would be utterly impossible. Yet even at that period my trust was firmly fixed in God. My confidence remained unshaken. I could not but believe that the Lord had a special design in bringing me thus low, and that he would lead me on, according to his own good will and pleasure to which I was now fully reconciled; for I had consecrated my body anew to the Lord, "a living sacrifice," which I desired would be holy and acceptable. Rom. xii. 1.

I was next informed that there was a people living south of where we then lived, (a distance of between 30 and 40 miles,) who practiced as I wished. I availed myself of the earliest opportunity of forming acquaintance with them. The first brother I met was Solomon Pippingier, (a deacon). I endeavored to obtain all the information possible in reference to the faith and practice of the church. I found some objection, the principal of which was coldness—not enough zeal in the cause of the Lord—which fault I deplore to this day. Yet I am happy to know that the churches, in general, have greatly advanced in this respect within the last few years. I learned at that time where the speaker resided, but my business required me to return. In about two weeks I left home again with the intention of having an interview with the minister at his house. When I arrived he was just returning from his mission, very ill, and had to retire immediately. I tarried with him all night, but he was not able to converse much. Next morning my business called me about 250 miles distant. On returning I resolved to demand baptism, without any further inquiry. As I came by some of the brethren's homes, I apprised them of my intention, requesting them to be present. I found the speaker still confined, very ill. (The minister's name is Henry Troxel). On the Lord's day morning a few brethren convened at his residence. Brother Henry (although by great exertion) undertook the great work, and baptized me on the 6th day of June. (I am happy to state brother Henry began to mend from that hour). Witnesses present,—two deacons (Solomon Pippingier and John Bowman) and others.

After baptism I expected they would extend an invitation to join, but to my surprise the subject remained untouched, until in our conversation further, I learned that they kept no roll, but whenever any person was baptized by the Brethren, he was considered a member with them; that baptism was the initiatory rite. That was precisely according to the view I entertained before ever I knew aught of the Brethren; which idea I gathered from Gal. iii. 27, and 1 Kings vi. 7. I at once became fully reconciled that they might consider me a member of the church, and I was willing to call them my brethren, which, I am happy to state, I delight in doing to this day; for the longer I continue, the stronger my affection becomes for the church in general; although I see many points in which we are yet in the rear. This, however, does not very seriously affect our own salvation; yet it does greatly deter a successful gathering in of souls into the fold of Jesus. But being fully persuaded in my own mind that the church of the Brethren is based upon that "sure foundation," and on an average, by far the nearest the apostolic order of any church I ever heard of, I patiently await the time when the Lord shall cause a general revival; when Zion shall become more fully awake to her best interests; when she shall put on her "strength, and Jerusalem her beautiful garment." Isa. lii. I will state here that to three weeks after my baptism I attended meeting and heard the first sermon I ever heard delivered by the Brethren.

I will state further, that of me it can be said, in a measure, as St. Paul spake of Melchisedek, Heb. vii. 3, "Without father, without mother, without descent." As regards my genealogy in the church of the Brethren, none of my ancestors, as far back as the line can be traced, ever belonged to this body of Christians.

In the grant of the privilege, as in the Companion, No. 42, 1875, one of the requests was to state by what hook we were led to obey God's word. This I will now state. It was the Bible; none other. I had no history, nor even a commentary. The books of any note which made up my library were a small pocket Bible, the discipline of the Evangelical Association, and a copy of their hymn book, and the articles of faith of the Regular Baptists.

The circumstances above stated prove clearly the truthfulness of the prophecy of Isaiah (xxxv. 8) who, in speaking in reference to the way of holiness, says, "It shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein."

Patient reader, I have now given you quite a lengthy detail of the circumstances which attended my conversion to the faith as practiced by the Brethren; and I will here state the reason why I have particularized every circumstance.

1. My conversion being of rather singular occurrence, the nature of the case demanded it in order to give a correct idea.

2. To convince the reader that I have not labored under any hasty or improper excitement; that I have not hastily decided in coming to the Brethren; but that circumstances required a steady advancement in my Christian course, or retrogression would have ensued.

I have not written these circumstances, kind reader, for a show, nor that you should judge me to be possessed of superior intellect, nor to be one of those who are called wise in this world; for no great learning is required to understand the way of holiness, but an humble and a willing mind—a willingness to obey God in all the lessons of love, as taught by our adorable Redeemer.

"God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called." 1 Cor. i. 26, 27.

Furthermore, dear reader, I have written this, my experience, that you might be enabled more fully to comprehend the wisdom and love of God, and confide in the word and promises.

In conclusion, I request an interest in the prayers of all those who have the prosperity of Zion at heart, that the Lord would enable me to assist my dear brethren in bringing about a more a more earnest working for Jesus. May God's choicest blessings attend all your labor in the Lord. May the peace of our dear Jesus be with you. Amen.

CRESTON, Iowa, Jan. 16, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—

I will embrace the opportunity this beautiful Sabbath evening of giving the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN a little news from this part of Iowa. We have no organized church of the Brethren here as yet, though we are still living in hope. Perhaps some of you remember an article that I wrote for the C. P. C., sometime ago, describing our country, and urging brethren to come out and see. Now, brethren, when this comes to your notice, if you think of selling your homes to try some other locality, let me invite your attention particularly to this part of Iowa. No doubt you think this is somewhat of an out-of-the-way place; but if you would come and see, you would think somewhat differently.—I shall not endeavor to give you a description of it at this time, any more than this: We have a good country for stock-raising, and for all kinds of grain—wheat, oats, corn, barley, rye—potatoes, cabbage and everything that can be raised east of us. If there are any that wish a full description of Union county, either privately or publicly, I will surely be pleased to give it; or I will send you the Creston weekly Gazette, which gives a full history, in the hope of getting you among us.

Now, brethren, I would like to have you come, and the reason is that I love you all, dearly. Oh, how much I would like to meet with you often, from time to time! Almost all other denominations are here, and building large and commodious church houses. The M. E. church has a large and comfortable house about one mile and a half from here; and directly north of it, the Presbyterians have built a substantial house for the worship of God; and the Congregationalists have a house—all being built within a year—and a brother of the Christian church is now around taking subscriptions for a house for them. Now does not this show that the people are wide-awake—up and a-doing. The Presbyterians preached their dedicatory sermon to-day. Now I think, Brethren, if you will only make up your minds and come west to Union county, Iowa, you would be pleased.—Most of our farmers think well of this country. As a goodly number will see this call, perhaps some relatives and friends, I hope it may have a tendency to bring you here among us few brethren; and I will further state that if you should make up your minds to come, we do not care where you live, or what your name may be, so you are in good standing, we shall do all in our power to help you in selecting a home. We are in rather poor circumstances; however we shall assist you, and be pleased so to do. I shall, by the grace of God, try so to live that when my days are ended here on earth, I may be able to walk the streets of the new Jerusalem. Brethren, let us be faithful to the end. May the Lord hear us and accept us, is the prayer of your unworthy brother, GEO. W. KEIM.

MARRIAGES.

By the undersigned, at his residence in Quemahoning church Jan. 28th, 1876, brother JOSEPH SHANK, of Somerset township, and Miss ELLEN KOONTZ, of Quemahoning township, both of Somerset county, Pa.

E. J. BLOCHER.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Stone Lick congregation, Clermont county, Ohio, of palsy, sister ANNA MOHLER, in the 79th year of her age, being born April, 1796, and died Nov. 17th, 1875. Sister Mohler united with the church of the Brethren in the 17th year of her age, and had been a consistent and worthy member of the church for over 60 years. Her husband, Eld. John Mohler, preceded her to the land of spirits some seventeen years, full of hope and peace. May the dear sons and daughters of the deceased who remain to strive for the mastery in this unfriendly world imitate the example of their parents, and at last meet where parting shall be no more. Funeral services by the brethren, A. J. Hixson and Joseph Pringle, from 1 Thess. iv. 14.

Fell asleep in Jesus, near Shellburg, Benton county, Iowa, Dec. 3rd, 1875, sister CATHARINE STERN, aged 73 years, 8 months and 17 days. Funeral services by the writer on the 9th of January, 1876, to a small collection of relatives and friends, from the words, "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory;" 1 Cor. xv. 55.

B. TROXEL.

Jan. 21st, 1876, of cancer in the breast, in the Owl Creek arm of the church Koox county, Ohio, sister SARAH, wife of brother Henry Hess, aged 51 years, 10 months and 2 days. She leaves an aged and feeble mother, a kind and sorrowing husband, 6 children, and many other friends and relatives to mourn their loss; but we have every reason to believe that their loss is her eternal gain. The evening on which she died she called her family to her bedside, bade them farewell, and departed in peace, after having suffered much, which she bore with great patience. The family have lost a kind companion and good mother, the church one of its most faithful and exemplary members, and the neighborhood one of its best neighbors. Funeral services by brother W. Arnold, assisted by the brethren of the above named church, to a large congregation, at the Brethren's meeting-house, where she was laid away to await the morning of the first resurrection.

WM. A. MURRY.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

In the Clarion congregation, Clarion county, Pa., Jan. 27th, 1876, CATHARINE DISLER, aged 64 years, 11 months and 24 days. Disease, pneumonia of the lungs. The deceased had poor health, suffering from heart and lung disease for about fifteen years. About seven months before her death she fell down stairs, after which she was a great sufferer, confined to her room all the time, and able to walk only with the aid of crutches. She leaves a sorrowing husband, 6 living children, and 21 grandchildren, to mourn their loss. The church also has lost a mother in Israel. She had been a consistent member of the church for 40 years, and died in the triumphs of a living faith. Funeral services on the 29th, by Rev. Geo. Copp, brother Geo. Shively and the writer, from 2 Tim., iv. 7, 8.

GEO. WOOD.

In Rochester, Fulton county, Ind., ELIZABETH RITTER; born in Cumberland county, Pa. Oct. 23rd, 1797, died Jan. 17th, 1876, aged 79 years, 2 months and 17 days. Sister Ritter was a member of the Lutheran church. Funeral services in the Methodist church at Rochester, by the writer; text, Rev. xiv. 13.

NOAH HESTER.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

In the Crawford church, Crawford county, Ohio, Nov. 3rd, 1875, sister ELIZABETH BRILLHART, daughter of Eld. John Brillhart, aged 26 years, 8 months and 1 day. Sister Elizabeth became a member of the church at about the age of 13, and was a faithful Christian for over half of her brief stay in this world. She was afflicted for several years with "disease of the throat and lungs, but died with spinal affection. Her sufferings were intense, but she bore them with Christian fortitude, and exhorted her friends and young associates to search the Word and embrace the truths contained therein. Some time before her death she made a choice of who should preach her funeral. We have known sister Elizabeth from childhood; were with her the last afternoon and night of her stay on this earth, and were made to recall to mind the language of one of old, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Funeral sermon by the writer in the English, and brother John Shontz in the German, from Rev. xiv. 13.

S. A. WALKER.

In the Logan district, Logan county, Ohio, Dec. 8th, 1875, brother PHILIP BRENNER, aged 29 years, 3 months and 27 days. Disease, consumption. Brother Philip was baptized about four weeks before he died. Funeral sermons preached by the writer and Eld. J. N. Kaufman, from Rev. xiv. 13.

Also, near De Graff, Logan county, Ohio, Dec. 10th, 1875, our friend LOUIS SMITH, aged 35 years. Disease, bronchitis. He leaves a wife and three small children to mourn their loss. Funeral sermons preached by the writer, from St. Luke xiii. 40.

J. L. FRANTZ.

In the Welsh Run congregation, Washington county, Md., Jan. 22nd, 1876, near Broadfording church, in the 36th year of her age, our esteemed sister MARYLINA, wife of brother Samuel Greenwaldt. She leaves an affectionate husband, daughter, an infant son, and several step-children and friends to mourn her loss. Her illness was of short duration. How uncertain are all earthly joys! and how soon can the strongest and tenderest ties be severed! She lived a consistent and exemplary life, and was esteemed and loved by all who knew her. We can truly say that our loss is her gain. Although she is dead, her kindness will be long remembered. Truly, this is a world of sorrow. In the very moment when our happiness, like a gentle cloud, hovered over this beloved family, death burst upon them and swept away their joy. Our pilgrimage in this life is short, and if faithful we soon shall arrive in our Father's house, where no separation or sorrow is known. Her remains were followed by a large concourse of persons to the Brethren's burying-ground, where it was interred with a scene of solemnity. Services by the Brethren, from 1 Peter, i. xxiv. May the Lord bless the bereaved family, and strengthen them by his spirit in the love of man, is the prayer of their sympathizing brother,
A. B. B.

In the German settlement church, Preston county, W. Va., Jan. 8th, 1876, sister SARAH FIKK, supposed to be about 35 years of age. Disease, not known. The deceased had lost the use of her limbs for many years, by inflammatory rheumatism, and has ever since been cared for by the church. Sister Sarah had a strong desire to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord. Funeral occasion improved from the words, "Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children," by Eld. Samuel A. Fike and others, to a large concourse of people.

"Facts are Stubborn Things."

Thousands of human beings are yearly borne on the swift current of disease down to the grave, just because they do not possess a sufficient knowledge of themselves. A man meets his neighbor, and the first salutation is, "How are you?" or "How is your health?" The reply frequently is, "Oh, I am well, with the exception of a cold." Most persons lightly regard a cold. Reader, do you know that a cold is one of the most dangerous of maladies? A cold not only clogs up the pores of the entire system, and retards circulation, but it is productive of Catarrh, which is quite apt to lead to Consumption. "Oh," you say, "it is nothing but a cold in my head." True; but that cold is really a mild form of Catarrh, and if not arrested in its course, will become chronic. Catarrh is one of the most disagreeable, offensive affections in the catalogue of diseases. The passage to the nose is obstructed, the sense of smell impaired, and there is a disagreeable sensation of pressure in the head. In the more advanced stages, there is a discharge having an offensive odor. If the disease be allowed to continue in its course, thick, hard incrustations will form in the head, the bones of which sometimes become softened and break away in pieces. Why will persons continue to suffer from such an annoying, disgusting disease, when they can just as well be cured of it? Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure the worst forms of Catarrh; in fact it is the only pure and safe remedy that has yet been offered to the public. Many harsh, irritating preparations may, for the time, relieve the urgency of the symptoms, but they do not cure the disease. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is soothing and healing in its effects, and when used with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, according to directions, does not fail to effect a cure.—Sold by all Druggists.

THE DOOMED MAN.

There is a time we know not when,
A place we know not where,
That marks the destiny of men,
To glory or despair.

There is a line by us unsewn,
That crosses every path,
The hidden boundary between
God's patience and his wrath.

To pass that limit is to die,
To die as if by stealth;
It does not quench the heaving eye,
Or pale the glow of health.

The conscience may be still at ease,
The spirits light and gay;
That which is pleasing still may please,
And care be thrust away.

But on that forehead God has set Indelibly a mark—
Unseen by man, for man as yet
Is blind and in the dark.

And still the doomed man's path below
May bloom as Eden bloomed—
He did not, does not, will not know,
Or feel, that he is doomed.

He knows, he feels that all is well,
And every fear is calmed;
He lives, he dies, he wakes in hell,
Not only doomed, but damned!

O! where is this mysterious bourn,
By which our path is crossed;
Beyond which, God himself hath sworn
That he who goes is lost?

How far may men go on in sin?
How long will God forbear?
Where does hope end, and where begin
The confines of despair?

An answer from the skies is sent—
"Ye that from God depart,
While it is called to-day repent,
And harden not your heart!"

—Dr. J. Addison Alexander.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Preaching the Cross.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Christian Bucher, Bishop of the Tulpehocken Church, Penn'a.

"Christ and him crucified." Here are the fullness of God, the completeness of redemption, and the whole duty of man, in four words. Eighteen centuries of study and exposition and preaching and praying have not exhausted them. The Cross is still "the power of God unto salvation;" the saint's only weapon, the preacher's only theme, the sinner's only refuge, the devil's only conqueror. On the Cross Love greets with her sweetest smile, Mercy sheds her warmest tear, Holiness darts her brightest gleam, Righteousness inflicts her deepest wound, and peals her loudest anathema. God is there, in mysterious union with law-infracting, law-condemned, hell-enduring humanity. The Cross is the symbol of all that is dreadful and hateful and vile; and of all that is glorious and alluring and pure. There Heaven and earth and hell—God and man and devils are focalized. On the Cross we have God's estimate of sin, and it should be ours also. It is light views of sin, and a corresponding laxity of life, that damn the world, enfeeble the church, and that will turn the resurrection of countless professors of religion into "everlasting shame and contempt." Heaven and Hell are watching with what fidelity the Cross is represented by those who bear the Christian name. How shocking to see brethren privately preface and supplement their sermons with jesting, teasing, impertinence, giggling, and even broad, vulgar, unrestrained laughter. All this is Christ-dishonoring and Christ repelling. A preacher's levity is the devil's triumph. It makes the angels hang their heads, and the fallen principalities clap their hands. A Christ-elected, Christ endowed ambassador will be preaching the Cross at all times, even when he says nothing. He will proclaim the beauty of Goodness and the hatefulness of sin, by the constant exhibition of the one, and the practical reprobation of the other. As "Christ was made unto us of God," so must He be made in us and through us by the Holy Ghost.

God is Love, but it is the love of Right—which is Righteousness—and has just enough fire in it to make an Everlasting Hell. It is Holy Love, and this guards the Tree of Life with a Sword of Flame. It is Just Love, which metes out to every disobedience and transgression an equitable recompense. It is Love that shouts Amen to the wail of every soul in perdition. It is the love of Principle, of Character, of Order; and with a firm hand heaps together all the combustibles of the Universe, applies the torch of Divine indignation and kindles the great conflagration of Eternity; inserts the sting of the undying worm, rivets "the everlasting chains of darkness" upon "the angels that kept not their first estate," lashes every incorrigible sinner into the dungeon of damnation, slams the door of hell, and springs the bolt with a key whose mechanism admits of no reverse movement. It is the Love of God,—the Love of which the Cross is the exponent—and this is the All of God. In the crowning act of His Love, God revealed His sin-hating nature and His sin-punishing purpose. As revealed on the Cross so He should be preached. The culminating grandeur of a faithful ministry is to show the world God's relation to sin, both as "a consuming fire," and a self-consumed, wrath-suffering propitiation. The expiation of the Cross offers no premium to sin, but aggravates its guilt. All the marvels and glories and ecstasies of redemption are what they are because sin is what it is. The Cross has all the heights of Heaven and all the depths of Hell in it. All that God has to say of Himself and Satan, of sin, salvation and the second death, is said in the Cross. It is the Polyglot of all moral natures, from God's Throne down to the lowest, darkest abyss of damnation. "Knowing the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." Study the vocabulary of the Infinite for the most soul-searching terms to unfold such an awful theme. Make "sin exceeding sinful." Heap guilt on guilt, wrath on wrath, horror on horror, and open hell within hell, and still a deeper hell, till the very thunderbolts of an offended God seem to come crashing through the ceiling, and the lurid blaze of the pit is felt flashing through the floor. Set the benches on fire on which the ungodly sit, and say nothing smoother or softer about sin and its deserts than the Lamb of God felt when He bore its dreadful curse on the Cross. Rake coals out of God's furnace on the heads and hearts of all transgressors, whether in or out of the Church. Strip sin in silk and broadcloth of all respectability, and girdle and core it with the wrath-glowing terrors of Infinite Holiness. No danger of overdoing the matter. Your utmost stretch of imagination and intellect, and emotion and eloquence will leave an Eternity full of meaning—both as to holiness and sin, Heaven and hell—untouched.

Give the Devil no quarter. Drag sin out of its kennels, and thrust the blood-bathed spear of the Cross through its black, infernal heart, till the most seared, foul-mouthed blasphemer trembles. Deal with sin in yourself and others as God dealt with it in His Son on the Cross. Drive in nail after nail, till the privy council of pandemonium wince under your blows. Strike for Jesus and with Jesus, and the foundations of the nether prison will be shaken. O for more pulpit limners who will draw the sinner's portrait as it has been painted by the Divine Artist on the Cross, and as it hangs in the gallery of Hell. Unsheath and wield the sword of the Spirit till the dreadful gleam of every God-whetted edge prostrate every sin-eating soul with terror. Portray the mystic hand of an angry God on the wall till every demonized heart quails, and the knees of every God-defying Belshazzar smite together. Hurl the smoking denunciations of injured Holiness "against all unrighteousness of men" until there be hissing and boiling and heaving and surging and scalding in the heart of iniquity, as when a fire-choking volcano vomits its incandescent lava into the sea. Cry aloud: spare not. Proclaim the mandates and judgments of the Eternal Throne. Prolong the thunders of Sinai. Echo the hoarse, roaring, curse-laden surge of Hell's melstrom. Lift the sledge of Divine authority, and if Luther, or Calvin, Zuingli, or Menno Simmons, or Arminius, Behm, Otterbein, Williams, Winebrenner, or Campbell, come in your way, knock them on the head, and let nothing live under your ministry that cannot live on the Cross. "Call no man master on earth," and challenge all great names to prove their claim to greatness by exhibiting the blood-written, Cross-stamped signature of the Holy Trinity. Insist on a promissory note without defalcation, in good faith, written with the blood of Jesus, from every one that "names the Name of Christ." "These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee." Nail thyself to the Cross, so that you may preach as a man who can boldly refer to his life and say: "I am crucified with Christ: never, theless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Set up the blood-dripping Cross in your family-room, your kitchen, your bed-chamber, your studio, your closet; place it on your counter, let it be the beam of your balances, the measure of your yardstick, and the trade-mark on every article that goes out of your establishment. Keep so close to it that you unceasingly hear it groan out its ELOI, ELOI, LAMA, SABACHTHANI, and see it flash out its eternal hostility to sin, and bleed out its love to sinners, till you are so filled with its self-sacrificing spirit, and so thrilled with its lofty purposes, that "an eternal weight of glory" and responsibility constrain you to cry out, "wo is me if I preach not the Gospel."

To preach the Cross means investigation, labor, prayer, study of God's symbols, observation of God's providence, and a well-kept, God-endorsed life. The Cross is a polygon which has an angle and side for every soul. The preacher must awe without repelling, and proclaim amnesty without abating one jot or tittle of the Divine Law. He must thunder as well as distil dew, and purify the atmosphere with lightning and tempest as well as waft the odor-laden zephyrs of Paradise. He must burst out in vehement fervor and holy indignation, and yet mellow the stern tone of Righteousness with the soft, cooing accents of Divine tenderness. He must show the wrath of the Lamb through the prism of His tears, and the love-throbbing compassion of Deity through the wrath-smiting rigors of the Cross. He is entrusted with the keys of the Invisible World, and the Holy Ghost is commissioned to give him wisdom and skill to unlock the Pearl-doors of Glory and the flaming Gates of Hell, and lay open to the sinner the whole realm of human experience, both as saved and lost. The ministry of the Cross must deal with the White Throne and "the blackness of darkness;"—must bring into the pulpit Majesty of Jehovah and the writing tortures and blood-curdling outcries of the damned. He meets the devil in every sanctuary, and has a message for his vassals in every sermon. The Pentecostal fire of God is to crown his head and dart from his lips, so that the "word of God may be quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword," and leave the sinner naked and dissected before God and himself. And at the same time he must have a robe and a ring and shoes for the tattered mendicant, and a fattened calf ready on the table for the home sick, wasted, hungry prodigal. He must know Jesus for himself as a Saviour and a Judge, as Prophet, Priest, and King, Lawgiver, Law-fulfiller, and Law-avenger. He must cut and heal, wound and bind up, burn and flay and salve, lure with the breasts of Divine Motherhood, drive with the scourge and draw with the cords of Divine Fatherhood, so as "by all means to save some." He must be full of the charms of Emmanuel and the beauty of holiness, as well as the booming, stunning, death-dealing artillery of Righteousness. He must negotiate for saints, for sinners, for workers, for drones. Under his Heaven-sustained ministry the saint is to become more saintly, the sinner blasted and scorched and lured out of his rebellion, the worker made more zealous, and the drone whipped into the traces. Half-dough, half-crisp cakes must be turned, and slinking heifers must be goaded or unhooked. Hosea. vii. 8. iv. 16. Arduous, complex, solemn, and glorious is the work of the ministry. Preach the whole Christ, and carry not the Cross where he is not crucified. The Cross, as the instrument of redemption, belongs to the earth. Do not expand its efficacy into a purgatorial expedient. God accepts no post-orbit bond from any one, and authorizes none of His ambassadors to preach a post-mortem salvation. PREACH THE CROSS. Stop at the Gates of Hell, press through the Gates of Heaven, and fill your shepherd's crook with blood-washed souls.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Weep for the Lost!

BY LEVI ANDES.

When we contemplate on the past, present, and future, when we call to memory those dear ones with whom we mingled in sweet company, who are now sleeping in their graves and are no more to be found in this vale of tears, they appear to be lost to us, and we sometimes feel to weep for them.

When we think of that sister who made such a good, bold confession of Christ, and appeared to be in her Master's cause with all her soul and body for a while, and then again turning to the beggerly elements of this world—to vice and folly—and voluntarily leave the fold of safety and is lost, we feel to say, Weep for the Lost.

When we think of that brother, who was so zealous of his Master's vineyard; who appeared to have given his all to his Redeemer, and was so fervent for awhile, but who, through temptation, was over-taxed by his carnal disposition, and through it let the cross of Christ fall to the ground, and turned back to the world and its carnal lusts, we feel to say, Oh, Weep for the Lost!

When we think of that minister, who appeared to be such a good warrior, and a shining light to the world; who made many a sinner quake and tremble; who roused many a one to flee from the wrath to come; who poured oil of consolation into the wounded hearts of many; who raised the heads of the discouraged and bade them be of good cheer. But who, through neglect to take heed unto himself, was thereby entrapped in the snares of Satan to such a degree as to make him utterly unfit for a captain of the Lord's Host, and is no more among the heralds of truth, we may say, Oh, Weep, Weep for the Lost!

When we think of those who are living in this world and following the desires of their Carnal Mind to such a degree as to bury them in oblivion to the Religion of Christ; who follow after ungodliness, and count gain godliness, and committing of sin happiness; whose eyes are so blinded, that, they cannot find the way of truth, and are lost in sin and trespasses, we may well feel to say, Weep, yes, Weep for those lost to us! Weep for those lost to the church! Weep for those lost to Christ! and weep for those lost to heaven—lost forevermore in that long night of Woe!

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Salvation by Fire, and Baptism with Fire. Matth. 3: 11.

BY MARY ROHRER.

If John the baptist did not understand every word he said, we must still believe that he spake as he was moved by God to speak; and that his mission fulfilled the prophecy of his coming as a messenger to prepare the way of the Lord, showing that we must believe on Jesus who would come after him, who would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire. Hear the prophet Isaiah, (31: 9), "And his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the Lord, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem;" and 33: 14, 15, "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil." These will endure the baptism of fire; their works will not be burned. The prophet Jeremiah (23: 29) says, "Is not my word like a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" The word of the Lord will break in pieces, it will burn and purify, and give its light. "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried; they shall call on my name, and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." Zech. 12: 9. See also Mal. 3: 2: 3, 4. Until we have passed through God's refinery, we cannot, with all confidence, call on his name, knowing that he heareth us and gives us the witness within us that we are his and he is ours; but while we are passing through this time of trial, we have enduring hope as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast. Jesus was baptized in suffering. Paul says, "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." 2 Cor. 4: 10. Peter says, "Beloved think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you." 1 Peter 4: 12. Who will shrink from the righteous judgments of God? Will we not rather say, "With Christ at my side, watching the process of my purification, and strengthening me, I can do all things; yea, I will suffer for all things?" Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it (the day of his life) because it shall be revealed by fire (by trial); and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward (be blessed and made happy even in this life). If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire. 1 Cor. 3: 13—15.

The church at Corinth had at this time fallen back, and become carnal. Sometime after Paul had left them, Apollos of Alexandria, who was very eloquent in speech, came and preached for them, to whom many of them became very much attached on account of his excellency of speech. When Paul preached, he did not use his eloquence of language, but spake plainly the wisdom of God, which some preferred. So they differed about their ministers, and were divided into parties; forgetting that God should have the honor, they honored their ministers, and grew carnal. (Even at this present day we see, sometimes, a similar disposition manifested.) This was communicated to Paul by some of the brethren of the house of Chloe, whereupon he writes this letter to them, showing the danger of worldly wisdom and of their carnality, and tells them that he laid the foundation for them, Jesus Christ, and no better can be laid; and now they are building on it; but if they go on in this manner, doing according to their own desires, not giving God the honor by submitting to his will and doctrine, their work would be of combustible matter, such as wood, hay, stubble, and will not endure the searing trial of God's people, but they will lose their labor in the church: though they be not destroyed, they will suffer the burning conscience of disobedience. See Exodus 32nd, Moses' Song, and apply 22nd verse. See also Isaiah 9: 18.

The Love of Christ.

It was on the love of Christ that the early Church so strongly leaned. It is to this love that we find the apostle Paul so continually turning. This was his soul's true resting place and refuge. It was under the branches of this palm tree that he found a shadow from the heat. This was the deep well out of which he drank his endless consolation. He needed no other. To be "able to comprehend with all saints the length and breadth, the height and depth" of this love was his aim; and to know that love which "passeth all knowledge" was the sum of his prayers.

This love is our refuge too—our true and quiet home. The knowledge of this love is perfect peace. We sit down and let this love breathe freely into us, and straightway all is calm. Each storm has gone to rest; each gust has died away. Love beyond all loves in greatness, in freeness, in efficacy. Gifted with strange power of soothing, and healing, and comforting! He who has possession of this love, has got hold of a hidden spell, mighty to charm away all heaviness of heart, all bitterness of soul. What can withstand it?

In this love are all the loves of earth gathered up and centered. It is a Father's love, yet far above the love of an earthly father. It is a brother's love, yet passing far above it. It is a bridegroom's love, as the song of Solomon shows us, yet tenderer than the love of mortal bridegroom. It is a husband's love, yet truer and more faithful than husband on earth. It is a love without beginning and without end—a love without intermingling selfishness, or jealousy, or coldness, or forgetfulness, or weariness—a love without intermission—a love without fickleness—a love without decay.

PRAYER requires more of the heart than of the tongue, of signs than of words, of faith than of discourse. The eloquence of prayer consists in the fervency of the desire, in the simplicity of faith, and in the earnestness and perseverance of charity. Our trust and confidence ought to proceed from that which God is able to do in us, not that which we can say to God.

THE SHEKINAH.

BY JAS. Y. HECKERL.

The pillar of fire was a cloud in the day,
 And the Angel of Heaven directed the way
 That the children of Israel were destined to go,
 With their eyes to the Lord and their heels to the foe.

The pillar of fire was a lamp in the night,
 Like the face of the Lord, so exceedingly bright,

'Twas the visible glory of God in a cloud,
 Like the burning of fire enclosed in a shroud.

The sea was divided and chained was the flood,
 And the glory of God descended and stood,
 Like the wings of the Lord spread out in the sky,

In protecting his own when his presence is nigh.

The minions of Egypt, the haughty and proud,
 Who discerned not the fire and who saw not the cloud,

In their madness went on till the Lord in his wrath
 Made an end to his foes in the midst of his path.

Then came the Lord down in the depth of a cloud,

'Mid the flashes of lightnings and thunders aloud,

Upon Sinai, involved in a mantle of smoke,
 When the voice of Jehovah so terribly spoke.

The people of Israel were standing agaze,
 When the top of the mountain appeared in a blaze,

And they all were encumbered with terror and awe,

When Jehovah descended to give them the law.

The "holy of holies" with curtains was raised,
 And the ark of the covenant within it was placed,

And the pillar of fire, as the visible God,
 Like a statue of light 'twixt the cherubim stood.

Whenever the Angel intended to move,
 Then his visible glory ascended above,
 O'er the portable temple, directing the way
 For his people to move without any delay

SHEKINAH was God in a pillar of fire,
 In his visible glory—his terrible ire—
 As the dread of the wicked—the hope of the blest,
 And the Angel of Mercy to guide them to rest.

A Letter—Supper on or off the Table.

[By request of the writer, I send the following letter, verbatim, for the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. M. M. E.]

DEFIANCE, Ohio, Dec. 14th, 1875.

Dear Bro. M. M. Eshelman:

Grace, peace, truth, unity of the Spirit and mind, all speaking the same thing, be multiplied to the meek and obedient followers of Christ.

I had received several of your kind letters in due time, but did not answer them. Now I also see a piece in the Companion (page 738), giving me a hint on the mode of the Lord's Supper. I would rather see you take the right side of the mode,—then you could make a much better argument than you do on the wrong side,—and say we ought to wash feet before we sit to the table with the Supper on, and not turn our backs to it when it is set before our faces and we all see it. When we put our hands to the plough, then we see it; and also, that this is a mode or figure of the heavenly supper, at the end of the world. You say, "Modes that are based on supposed figures are not safe modes." Now I would like to know why not safe, when they agree with the word of truth, and are in good order. We will quote one passage for an example. "And it shall be that every one who shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." (Acts 2:21.) This passage itself requires no conditions. Is this right, or not? We know that we have some words and sentences that have different meanings, and we can apply the wrong one as well as the right one, if we will have it so. Then we have to prove by the word of truth which is right.

The word changeth not; the Holy Spirit changeth not; his teaching runs parallel with the word. The brethren did establish a good order according to the truth, and by the guidance and light of the Holy Spirit, and also according to the figure, and kept it so for more than one hundred years; till now, within a few years, it was found out that the one sentence, "riseth from supper," will apply just as well to the rising from the table with the supper on as off. But it will not apply to the other sentence, "supper being ended," which is supper preparing, or coming; nor will it apply to the fact which it represents, neither to decency and good order; neither to nature, because nature itself will teach us better. And all good parents teach their children to wash before they sit to the table with the food on; and the Scripture itself will only admit of this one sentence to sit to the table with the food on to rise up and go and wash. And that is only because the sentence can be applied to different meanings, because it does mean to rise from supper while eating, or before eating, or when done eating, when there is no supper on the table. It is not rising from nothing. It is also rising from the anticipated supper which we expect to partake of in the kingdom of heaven, which we only see with an eye of faith.

We do not see it with our eyes in this world; neither should we see the Lord's Supper, at the time we wash feet. If we could wash feet and not turn our backs to the table, and the Lord had said the supper should be on the table when we wash feet, and the man could have put on the wedding garment after he was in—if these three were so—then you would be right; but as it is, I think you are not in the Lord's steps, but one step outside (Luke 18:8), "But yet when the Son of man comes, will he find faith on the earth?" implies that there will be but few in the church prepared to meet the Lord in the air. It will be about the same with us as it was with the Jews at his first coming. A large majority were not prepared to receive him. The reason, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men (Eph. 6:12), "For to us the contest is not against flesh and blood, but against the spiritual powers of evil in heavenly places," or, in our churches. "Now I beseech you, brethren, to mark those who cause divisions and offenses contrary to the teaching which we have learned, and avoid them." Rom. 15:17. Read also, 18, 19, 20, 25 and 26 verses; also 2 Cor. 10:5, 6; 2 Cor. 2:9, 10, 11, that no advantage might be gained over us by Satan, for we are not ignorant of his devices. Now I think I will come to a close. This has cost me about 21 hours of hard work, where, perhaps, you could do more in less than one hour. But if it will only do some good then it will all be right.

Yours in love

AARON DIEHL.

P. S.—I think it would do well to copy this and have it printed in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. A. D.

ANSWER.

Dear Brother:

I pray that my reply may be only in accordance with "the word of truth," and then our beloved brethren may judge as to the argument and spirit of our letters.

1. I had no allusion to you in the article you mention, in Companion of 1875, page 738. I do not claim anything for my arguments, they stand or fall upon their own merits; but for the Lord's arguments I claim what every child of God should claim—namely, respect, observance, and constant adoration.

2. I confess I fail to see what mode, in the Lord's supper, has to do with the heavenly supper.

3. I still maintain that modes based upon supposed figures are not safe modes. If modes agree with "the word of truth," then they are not suppositional modes. If figures agree with "the word of truth," then they are not suppositional figures, but the Lord's figures. Hence you see why modes based upon supposed figures are not safe modes.

4. The words found in Acts 2: 21 are right, because they are the Lord's words. Certainly, "whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." Did not you, my dear brother, "call on the name of the Lord?" And whosoever calls on the name of the Lord does precisely as the Lord commands him. If a man does not the "things" which the Lord commands he has not called on the name of the Lord, but on some other body's name.

5. Truly, kind brother, the word of the Lord changeth not; the Holy Spirit changeth not. This is what I have, in my great weakness, tried to maintain. This is why I have been claiming that "riseth from supper" means rising "from supper," not that "riseth from supper" means "rising from nothing."

6. I have never denied that somebody established an order more than one hundred years ago. Whether they were Brethren or not, I am not prepared to say. One thing I do know, and that is, that the order for which I have been all along contending was set up by Jesus Christ, and every brother and sister, from Christ's time to this, has followed that order. This we know is a fact. They never pretended to follow Christ by following somebody else. If you and I have followed Christ's order then we are Christ's children; if not, then we are not Christ's children, and not on a good foundation.

7. To your assertion that I am "not in the Lord's steps, but one step outside," I will simply say: "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; for wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things." (Rom. 2: 1).

8. And I am glad that you know that there is "one scripture" ("riseth from supper") that will admit of the truthfulness of our position. I know that this scripture means just what it says, for the Holy Scriptures do not condemn themselves. I say I am glad that you see this, for it shows that we are becoming of "one mind."

9. There are many other things in your letter which might be noticed, but I forbear, fearing you could not endure it. I know many are unable to bear my method of reasoning out truth; hence, rather than wound any loving heart, I will forbear.

10. I would like to present an article on the Lord's Supper, but I am fully persuaded that many brethren could not endure the solemn, stubborn facts which attend this subject.

11. In conclusion, dear brother, permit me to assure you that your letter makes me love you none the less, and if I ever get through your country I'll stop with you and talk with you upon the subject. "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith we may edify another." (Rom. 16: 19).

I hope that my reply may be received with the same spirit with which it is sent, and that anything which I have written may not be a "stumbling block" in any "brother's way."

May the Lord add his grace to his beloved children, and enrich us all with a knowledge of his truth. Amen. Yours in Christ,

M. M. ESHELMAN.

The Highway of Holiness--Isa. xxvi.

BY J. S. FLORY.

A highway is a free way, a way for all to travel on who choose. The highway of holiness is a way opened up by the free grace of God, and a way on which "whosoever will" may walk. "The unclean shall not pass over it;" but, thanks be to God, the unclean may become clean through the "washing of regeneration"—through the cleansing efficacy of Christ's blood—and then pass over on the highway of holiness to the better land. Travelers on a highway are "wayfaring persons," seeking some distant point. If strangers, how often their own judgments lead them astray, or how natural it is for them to take the path most traveled, or the one that leadeth over "flowery beds of ease." But wayfaring men on the highway of holiness, "though fools, shall not err therein." Such are the words of the prophecy of the Lord; and 'tis true, for the Lord leadeth them by the "waters that break out," and along the "streams of the desert." "No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up therein." The Lamb of God bath by the power of his might driven all ravenous beasts—devils—from the way, so that even those of "a fearful heart" are commanded to be strong, and not to fear, for God cometh "with a recompense; he will come and save you." He cometh to strengthen "the weak hands and confirm the feeble knees."

Oh, what a glorious way through the wilderness! The glory of Lebanon hath been given to it, and the excellency of Carmel and Sharon.

"The glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God" are seen in this living way made for the redeemed to walk on. Yea, "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Wonderful prophecy that we live to see fulfilled through the blessings of the gospel. Oh that this generation would more fully appreciate this way, truth, and life. This highway of holiness is besieged on every side with howling fiends—beasts of prey, that gnash their teeth and spout forth their venom at plodding pilgrims. Along the wayside, too, are seen birds of shining plumage, who by their sweet voices would lull the "Lord's anointed" to sleep by the way, to live at ease in Zion.

"Children of the heavenly King"—travelers on the highway of holiness, beware! beware of the fascinating influences that surround you! The world is full of flatterers and abominations. The cup of God's wrath is filling. Soon, yea, too soon for thousands of souls, will he measure to them of his indignation and wrath. Remember, the righteous scarcely are saved. How needful, then, to keep unspotted from the world. Step not down from the highway of holiness into the miry clay of worldly pleasures. Leave not the narrow way for a wider range—a range that would adapt the gospel to progress and science rather than that all things should be brought into subjection to the will of God, as expressed in the gospel. The highway of holiness is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever—unchangeable as the immutability of God, who is its great author.

TRUE CHARITY.—What Paul calls charity is to edify your neighbor, to esteem all men members of the same body, to think all are one in Christ, to rejoice in the Lord at your brother's welfare as if it were your own, to remedy his misfortunes as if they too were your own; to correct the erring gently, to instruct the ignorant, to raise the fallen, to comfort the cast-down, to assist them that are in trouble, to succor them that are in want; in fine, to direct all your powers, all your zeal, all your care to this end; to do good in Christ to all to whom you can do good, in order that, as He was neither born, nor lived, nor died to Himself, but gave Himself wholly for our advantage, so we also may serve our brother's needs and not our own.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MIFFLIN, Pa., Feb. 4th, 1876.

Dear Primitive Christian:—Feeling like contributing something to the edification of your numerous readers, and as something in the way of editorial correspondence will suit our present circumstances better than ordinary editorials, our contribution will be of that kind.—We did not wait long at the station when we left home, and it was well we had no occasion to wait long, as the station house was not opened. It is an unpleasant state of things, and very inconvenient, not to have the station opened at night, or at the time the early train passes in the morning. When it is cold, or dark, or wet, it is very unpleasant for travelers to have no house to go into. It seems that our town is entitled to better accommodation than our Railroad company is disposed to grant us. We have about fourteen hundred inhabitants, with two weekly papers, the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and the Meyersdale Independent, with a very respectable circulation, and of some respectability in other respects according to some of their friends, who, we hope, are not so much prejudiced in their favor as to be disqualified from judging impartially; and in addition to the foregoing considerations, important elements in the building up of a town, we have besides the main line of Railroad on which our town is located, two branch roads, one east and the other west of us, both running near town. We hope there will, before long, be better accommodations afforded to travelers leaving and arriving at Meyersdale.

We were much surprised upon arriving at Bridgeport, which we did between one and two o'clock in the morning, to find that the train leaving Bridgeport at 6 a. m., only runs to Mt. Dallas, and that we could not get to Huntingdon to connect with a train on the Pennsylvania Central before about 7 o'clock, p. m. By this arrangement we could not have reached Lewistown before 9 o'clock, p. m., and then we had about four miles to go to the place of meeting at which we were expected in time for the evening service. Upon a little reflection we thought as there was a train going westward from Bridgeport in about twenty minutes after our arrival there from the west, we might return to Connellsville, and there take the Southwestern Road to Greensburgh, and there connect with a train that would take us to Lewistown in time to meet our appointment. We consequently took the western train, passing our home which we had left a few hours before, reaching Connellsville about 5 o'clock a. m., at which place we had time for breakfast, the train for Greensburgh not leaving until seven o'clock, a. m. This arrangement took us to Lewistown a little before six o'clock; and it was only the want of a little better understanding with the brethren at Lewistown that prevented us from reaching the place of meeting in time for the evening appointment. As it was, we did not get there until the meeting had commenced, and upon our arrival found brother Archy Vandye addressing the congregation.

We have alluded to the foregoing incidents of our journey, not because it will of itself be likely to interest our readers generally, but to afford an opportunity of giving a little of our experience, and of making some suggestions which perhaps may be of some advantage to our brethren in the ministry, and especially to our young ministering brethren. We have always endeavored to meet our appointments, and as far as our presence with the people would prevent a disappointment, we have tried to be with them when we gave them reason to expect us. This was particularly the case in the early years of our ministry. For a number of years after we commenced our labors in the ministry, we failed in very few instances, if in any at all, in meeting our appointments. We were blessed with good health, and feeling an interest in the work in which we were engaged, it was a pleasure to us to labor in the holy calling. It seems necessary that a minister should feel interested in the holy labors he is called on to perform, and do his work because he loves to do it, as well as because he feels it his duty to do it, if he would pursue his holy calling successfully.

In regard to punctuality and perseverance in fulfilling and meeting engagements, our experience is this: As long as we thought of nothing else but of meeting our appointments when there was no insurmountable obstacle in the way, we had not much trouble to bring ourself up to the work, though we had to "stem the storm," endure the cold, and encounter some difficulties in the way. But when we began to yield a little to the wants and desires of our fallen nature, which asked to be relieved of labor, and to be permitted to enjoy ease, we found there was danger in so doing. And we found if some cause, which was scarcely a sufficient one to keep us at home from our appointment one day, was permitted to hinder us from going, a less one would do the same thing another day. Such things grow upon us, and we should be careful that habit does not exert an influence upon us for evil rather than for good. And in reference to what we are remarking upon, we would suggest to our young ministering brethren to let no cause but what seems to be one that justifies us in doing so, prevent us from meeting our appointments. The sad effects upon a congregation that is often disappointed, are well known. They will after a while think there is no use to go to meeting to hear the preacher because he will not be likely to be there.

And as it is unpleasant for the congregation to be disappointed by the preacher not being at his post, let it not be forgotten that it is likewise unpleasant for the preacher to be disappointed in seeing some of the seats of his members vacant, when he fears there is no sufficient cause for the absence of such members. So the members of the church, as well as the preacher, should try to be in their places when they possibly can, and honor the worship of God, and encourage the minister by doing so.

We had a very pleasant meeting with the brethren of the Lewistown congregation. A part of the time the state of the roads and of the weather was such that was unfavorable for people going to meeting, but notwithstanding this was the case, the attendance was very good, and the meetings solemn. The brethren and sisters seemed to enjoy the meeting. And we think something more was done than the promotion of their joy at the time of the meeting. The pleasure we have when partaking of food which is good to the taste, is desirable, but the strength we obtain from that food which prepares us for labor after we have eaten it, is still more desirable. And that worship which affords us both pleasure and profit, is the best and the right kind of worship. We attended eight meetings with the Lewistown brethren, and felt very comfortable with them. There were no additions to the church, but a seriousness and attention which indicated thoughtfulness on the part of some of the friendly aliens who attended, and it was thought that the labors of the meetings on that class were not altogether in vain. Our last meeting with the brethren was on Tuesday, night, but they designed continuing the meeting.

We are now in the Lost Creek congregation in Juniata Co., having come here yesterday. We had meeting last night and this morning. We anticipate pleasant meetings. Brother John Gluck, from Germany Valley, in Huntingdon county, is here. We had with us at the meeting at Lewistown, brethren Hanawalt, A. Myers, P. Meyers, and A. Vandylke, already named, all of the Spring Run congregation, in Mifflin county.

We are writing this at the house of brother William Kurtz, who is postmaster at Van Wert, Juniata county. And his wife is a granddaughter of old brother David Shellaberger. We are quite well, enjoying Christian fellowship with the brethren, as well as with our elder brother, the Lord's Anointed. And although quite comfortable by our surroundings and associations, we shall welcome the time which frees us from the arduous labors connected with our present journey, and which will permit us to return to the bosom of our family, and to the enjoyments of home. Yours, &c.,

J. QUINTER.

POOR FUND.

Several brethren and sisters have responded to our invitation for help to send the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor. In our next issue we will report. We shall also have a proposition by a brother which may be of some help toward raising means for this purpose. It is very difficult for those who have more books and papers than they can read, to appreciate the condition and feelings of those who have scarcely any books and no papers at all. It often occurs, too, that those who are poor—too poor to pay for a paper—are so situated that they cannot often get to meetings. If our well-to-do brethren could just imagine themselves reduced to such a state, their sympathies would, no doubt, be enlisted. Try it.

B.

WANTED WITHOUT DELAY.

At least one thousand more subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. We can yet accommodate subscribers with back numbers to the first of the year. Will not our agents and readers make an effort to send us a few more names each? If they could do so we should certainly feel grateful to them.

B.

Gleanings and Gittings.

FIRST in order we will call your attention to the flood—not a flood of water, but of correspondence. You will observe that nearly half of this issue is deluged by it. To make room for it we were obliged to move our editorial department from its usual place. We are glad that our correspondents have something to write about, and that they do it. And we are doubly glad that the general style of the correspondence is much improved. It was always an unpleasant task for us to read "Notes of Travels," when the greater part consisted in telling of comfortable lodgings, good beds, dinners, suppers, &c. We have had but little of these things, for some time past, and, if possible, we hope for still less. Let us have less of the temporal and more of the spiritual and enduring.

B.

NEXT we feel like noticing the correspondence of the editor. He gives some good hints to young ministers, and a few to members in general. These, coming from age and experience, and being confirmed by sound reasoning, demand our respect and observance. In the opening of his letter he manifests a little chagrin, and ventures a few hints for the benefit of our railroad officials. We do wish he could have been a little more at liberty on this subject. We would like for the proper officials to know that many of the prominent citizens of our town and community, as well as travellers stopping at this place, feel that their neglect is a shameful outrage. But as the editor was a little reserved, perhaps we had better not be too free.

B.

WONDREUL BROTHERHOOD!—Calcraft, who recently retired from the trying position of hangman in England, had an agreeable custom of always shaking hands with those upon whom he was about carry out the sentence of the law. But it has been observed that Marwood, his successor, never does this, and speculation has been rife in several quarters as to the cause of his departure from this precedent. Freemasons will be interested to learn that the reason is, "because he is a Free and Accepted Mason and dreads the condemned man giving him a Masonic grip in return."—Sunday Democrat.

We call attention to the following from brother R. H. Miller. We are glad that he has concluded to give us the results of his investigations in book form. We hope he may find ready sale for the work:

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 3, 1876.

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:—By permission I will say to the brethren, that I have now in press a book which, as many of you know, has been in contemplation for some time. It contains the defense of our faith and practice which I have tried to make in the discussions which I have had.

Having been frequently called upon by the brethren to engage in public discussion, some brethren may think I sought such controversy; but that is not the case. I have never got into it on my own account, as the brethren know where such discussions have been held. I always advise only to engage in it when the church believes the cause will suffer without it, and then only as a matter of defense.

The book we now offer to the brethren is on the following subjects:

The Divinity of Christ and the Holy Spirit; Immersion and Affusion; Trine Immersion; Feet-washing; The Lord's Supper, The Holy Kiss; Non-conformity, or plainness in dress, Secret Societies.

These subjects are investigated in such a manner as to give the arguments on both sides, and show, when they are fairly examined that the doctrine and practice of the Brethren is founded on divine truth.

There will be an index to the work, making it more convenient, as a book of reference. It will contain about 400 closely printed pages, in large, plain type.

One dollar and fifty cents is the price. When sent by mail, ten cents extra, to pay postage. As we now want to sell the book as fast as possible, on account of the expense incurred, we ask the brethren to send in their orders, which will be filled about the first of March. Address,

R. H. MILLER,

Ladoga, Ind.

Bro. John H. Caylor writes: "At the late District Meeting of Southern Indiana there were several brethren designated to travel and preach in the southern part of the State. We have made one trip to Harrison county; held a number of meetings, and amongst them was a communion. The brethren and sisters seemed to enjoy themselves. There was one added to the number, and others made desirous of coming to the fold where Jesus is the chief Shepherd. We would like to see the work go on briskly, and make it a success; but George Studcbaker, having received a plurality of votes, we would like for him to say when and where to go. Brethren, (those who were chosen to travel and preach in the southern part of the State,) let us try and make it a blessing both to those in and outside of the church. The work is a good one."

For The Young.

A Touching Incident.

In traveling we often meet with persons of different nationalities and languages. We also meet with incidents of various character, some sorrowful, and others joyful and instructive. One of the latter character I witnessed recently, while traveling upon the cars. The train was going west, and the time was evening. At a station, a little girl about eight years old came aboard, carrying a little budget under her arm. She came into the car and deliberately took a seat. She then commenced an eager scrutiny of faces; but all were strange to her. She appeared weary, and placing her budget for a pillow, she prepared to try to secure a little sleep. Soon the conductor came along, collecting tickets and fares. Observing him, she asked if she might lie there. The gentlemanly conductor replied that she might, and then kindly asked for her ticket. She informed him that she had none, when the following conversation ensued. Said the conductor: "Where are you going?" She answered, "I am going to heaven." He asked again, "Who pays your fare?" She then said, "Mister, does this railroad lead to heaven, and does Jesus travel on it?" He answered, "I think not. Why did you think so?" "Why, sir, before my ma died, she used to sing to me of a heavenly railroad; and you looked so nice, and talked so kind, I thought this was the road. My ma used to sing of Jesus on the heavenly railroad, and that he paid the fare for everybody; and that the train stopped at every station to take people on board; but my ma don't sing to me any more. Nobody sings to me now, and I thought I would take the cars and go to ma. Mister, do you sing to your little girl about heaven? You have a little girl haven't you?"

He replied, "No, my little dear, I have no little girl now. I had once, but she died some time ago, and went to heaven." Again she asked, "Did she go over this railroad; and are you going to see her now?"

By this time every person in the coach was upon his feet, and most of them were weeping. An attempt to describe what I witnessed is almost futile. Some said, "God bless the little girl." Hearing some person say that she was an angel, the little girl earnestly replied, "Yes, my ma used to say that I would be an angel sometime."

Addressing herself once more to the conductor, she asked him "Do you love Jesus? I do, and if you love him, he will let you ride to heaven on his railroad. I am going there, and I wish you would go with me I know Jesus will let me into heaven when I get there, and he will let you in too, and everybody who will ride on his railroad—yes, all these people. Wouldn't you like to see heaven and Jesus and your little girl?" These words, so innocently uttered, brought a great gush of tears from all eyes, but most profusely from the eyes of the conductor. Some who were traveling on the heavenly railroad shouted aloud for joy. She now asked the conductor, "Mister, may I lie here until we get to heaven?" He answered, "Yes, dear, yes." She then asked, "will you wake me up then, so that I might see my ma, your little girl, and Jesus? for I do so much want to see them all." The answer came in broken accents, but in words very tenderly spoken, "Yes dear angel, yes, God bless you." "Amen!" was sobbed by more than a score of voices.

Turning her eyes upon the conductor, she interrogated him again, "What shall I tell your little girl when I see her? Shall I say to her that I saw herpa on Jesus' railroad? Shall I?" This brought a fresh flood of tears from all present, and the conductor knelt by her side and embracing her, wept the reply he could not utter. At this juncture the brakeman called out, "H—s." The conductor arose and requested him to attend to his (the conductor's) duty at the station, for he was engaged. That was a precious place, I thank God that I was witness to this scene; but I was sorry that at this point I was obliged to leave the train.

We learn from this incident that out of the mouth of even babes God has ordained strength, and that we ought to be willing to represent the cause of our blessed Jesus even in a railroad coach.—Christian Expositor.

The Broken Swing.

"Father, may I go and play today with the swing?" said a little boy, just as he was getting ready to go out.

"No, my child, not to-day," answered the father: "to-morrow you can go."

To-morrow! it was too long for the impatient child.

A little later, when his father had gone out, the child, standing at the window, saw right before him the swing hanging between two trees at the bottom of the garden.

"If I swing a little," he said to himself, "nobody would know it. I will only have just one turn."

So he ran into the garden and climbed into the swing. Great was his joy for a few minutes, and he could not help crying between each swing, "I wonder why father said this morning that I must not swing?" All at once the chord broke. The child fell to the ground. His mother, terrified, ran out with a servant; they lifted him up and carried him into the house. The poor little fellow had broken his right arm.

His sorrow was very bitter when he saw his mother's grief; he had, too, to bear a great deal of pain when the doctor "set" his arm; but what vexed him most was to see his father come home at night, bringing a beautiful rope, quite new, intended to secure against accident the beloved son, whom that day he had been obliged to deprive of a pleasure that had become dangerous.

Dear children, your parents also find themselves sometimes obliged to refuse your requests. Have confidence in their love and in their wisdom, without always seeking to know the wherefore of their refusal.

When you are older, you will see that our kind heavenly Father does the same with us. He does not always grant us all we ask, because he knows that it will be hurtful to us. Trust, then, and with greater reason, his love and his wisdom, when you cannot understand the motive of his dealings with you.

We often ask for things which, if they were granted, would prove to us what the swing was to the little boy; and our disobedience is sure to produce only bitter fruits.—Sunday School Visitor.

A Lord in the Family.

A pompous, silly school-boy was one day boasting how many rich and noble relations he had, and having exhausted his topics, with an important air he asked one of his school-fellows:

"Are there any lords in your family?"

"Yes," said the little fellow, "there is one at least, for I have often heard mother say that the Lord Jesus Christ is our Elder Brother."

Blessed are they who have the Lord in their family, and who know him as their Elder Brother.

WHERE hunger and thirst is not, the body is not nourished; he must have a stomach to his meat that will have good by it; chewing will not do it, though he swallow it; if his stomach be against it he will vomit it up again. And can this spiritual hunger and spiritual thirst be where the inward man is not sanctified?—Joseph Mede.

Meeting at Shiloh Church--Awakening of the Members--Influence upon Sinners--Successful Conclusion--Immediate Results, etc.

VALLEY FURNACE, W. Va., }
Jan. 25, 1876. }

Brother Quinter:—

We have concluded a protracted meeting at Shiloh church, which lasted nine days, during which time brother Elias Auvil, assisted by brethren Z. Annon and William H. H. Shaffer, preached the doctrine as enunciated by our Savior.

Brother Auvil is one of those earnest, energetic ministers, who seems to feel what he says, and to carry conviction with the word. Brother Annon is considerable of an orator and a zealous minister; while brother Shaffer seems to possess that furious impetuosity with which to will is to do. All the elements of success in a revival seemed to be happily combined in the ministers; and truly the meeting was a success. The members became alive to their duty, and fervent, effectual prayers were poured out by the members in the prayer-meetings, which not only stirred the hearts of the brethren and sisters, but of the whole congregation.—Brethren there is power in prayer, and it was fully manifested at Shiloh. Let us continue to pray, and never cease until Satan's kingdom is fully destroyed.

The earnest and candid reasoning of the ministers, and the fervent prayers of the brethren, had a wonderful influence upon sinners, and many were heard to say, "Lord, what shall I do to be saved;" while we are sorry to say we heard of some who resisted the influence of the good Spirit, and left the church house declaring they must yield if they longer attended the meeting. May God have mercy on such. "My Spirit," says Christ, "shall not always strive with man." The meeting was concluded with a powerful outpouring of the Holy Ghost. Many were made alive in the pardoning love of a Savior; and it has seldom been our fortune to witness the conclusion of a meeting attended by such happy results, and so much oneness of mind and purpose.—All seemed to separate with the love of God burning within their hearts, and a new determination to live more devoted Christians. The results of the meeting were a spreading of love with the accompaniments of Christian influences, and a healing of many neighborhood troubles, and a general diffusion of the principle of love, not only in the church, but out of the church. The results are largely in the future. With these great results let us be thankful and continue our meetings.

There were seven accessions of precious souls who were admitted according to the usual ordinance of the church. Our anticipations for the future are truly hopeful. With the work begun, and trusting to its diffusion through the benign influence of the gospel, we have indeed a source of congratulation, which, with the earnest determination of Christians, we may hope to see as bread cast upon the waters to return again.

One thing, brethren, let us be united, and all contribute our mite to the spread of the truth of the gospel.

In conclusion: Let us bear in mind the beautiful and appropriate admonition of brother Auvil. Let there be no sluggards in the cause of religion. How beautiful and appropriate was the language of brother Auvil, when he requested all to join in singing, and, at least, contribute this much to the praise of God. Let this admonition be heeded, and may we never need a like reproof.

A VISITOR.

Our Winter Revival.

The term "revival" is not very readily accepted by many of our brethren, owing to the fact that its meaning is not properly understood. As applied to religion, "revival" implies a renewed and more active attention to religion, or an awakening of men to their spiritual interests; with the above view of our subject, where is the member who cannot in faith—yea, who does not humbly implore our Divine Helper for a revival in his congregation, in his neighborhood—yes, in his own heart?

The different congregations in Northern Ohio this winter, as usual, are generally giving attention to the services of the above kind, lasting several days in each congregation. These labors are not as successful in winning souls in many places as desired, nor as we sometimes think they ought to be. For this there is certainly a cause. Let us seek for it. The failure cannot arise on God's part, for the Apostle would tell us that the man of God is "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

We are sometimes told that the lack of the results desired at these labors is owing to a want in the ministry. This, unfortunately, may sometimes be the case. The proper qualifications in ministers are both important and essential. They should not only be teachers, but doers of what they teach; not only urge piety upon their hearers, but they themselves should be examples of pious lives. While it becomes their duty to teach humility, it is also of the most vital importance that they be also examples of humility. It is very certain that the progress of Zion depends much upon the zealous, united, and watchful labors of her ministers. May the Holy Spirit, therefore, enlighten their minds, and God's unseen hand guide their feet in the path our dear Redeemer trod, is my prayer.

But may we not, with some propriety, seek for a lack among the hearers—among the brethren and sisters also. Not unfrequently these meetings are waited for with much anxious curiosity to see the preacher and observe his manner of expression. So much are they thus engaged that they forget to pray; hence how can the divine blessing be sent when not asked for? These seasons of grace ought to be made especial subjects of prayer, by all the saints; thus giving evidence that we realize that, "without him we can do nothing." That the influence of the private membership has much to do with the progress of the work is certainly evident. When they manifest no desire for meetings, are irregular in their attendance, careless in their attention, how discouraging is such influence to the faithful ministry!

Again, these meetings are often conducted simply with evening services. Where they have morning sessions, we have frequently seen that the attendance consisted almost entirely of members, and then only a part of them. Upon inquiry it was found that this brother went to mill, or to town on some secular business, and hence could not attend meeting; some little domestic affair prevented the sister's attendance; thus the entire family was absent. The above circumstances, we may safely say, always prove detrimental to the desired success of such meetings.

Our brethren and sisters ought to be agents in the work; first, to be the means of securing a prompt attendance of their own families; second, they should be interested in the attendance of some of their neighbors; they should have some kind, seeking neighbor, anxiously awaiting a visit from the minister, whose mind they have previously prepared for the visit. Thus, all prayerfully and anxiously awaiting the meeting, eager for its immediate results, having all secular business suspended, so that nothing shall engage their attention save the interests of the meeting; with this influence the church may expect her spiritual strength renewed, and sinners gathered into the fold. Gilboa, O.

PENN RUN, Indiana Co., Pa., }
Jan. 26, 1876. }

Dear Brother Quinter:

Accept my cordial greetings, with a weak expression of the appreciation I feel in regard to the change and improvements made in the paper you edit and publish.

A few weeks ago brethren J. A. Sell and Stephen Hildebrand held a series of meeting at Belsano, with good results, of which you have, probably, ere this, been apprised.

Brother J. B. Wampler is now holding a series of meetings at Fyock's. I was with him on Saturday and Sunday last.—I thought there was great interest manifested in the word preached, and confidently anticipate the joyful news of souls converted to God. My temporal affairs—being a school teacher—called me away on Sunday afternoon. I, with many regrets, left the place where I felt in my soul it was good to be. On the morning of the 24th, being the forty first anniversary of my earthly pilgrimage, I met my interesting little school, but soon received a message that my services were wanted to conduct a funeral, of which a notice will accompany this epistle. * * *

Permit me now to turn beggar, not for my own benefit, but for that of another; and if you respond, it may perhaps be to the mutual benefit of us all. Brother G. W. Burkhardt says he is unable, from bad health, either to pay for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, or procure the means of preparing contributions for its columns. I urged it on him, considering him to possess a talent for usefulness to improve the same. I gave him what I could afford at this time, to procure means and promised to ask you to favor him with a copy of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. His address is Nolo, Indiana county, Pa. If you send it to him, and I should happen to get anything that I think I can devote to the cause, I will send to you; but I am myself in such circumstances that I can not afford either to take time to prepare essays, or pay the postage on the same.

The sister whose obituary accompanies this left six children outside of the pales of the church, but all have a warm feeling toward the same.

Pardon me for my boldness; I feel the worth of the cause. That makes me bold.

Sincerely,
JOSEPH HOLSOPPLE.

Southern Missouri District Meeting.

The District Meeting for the Southern District of Missouri will be held in the Brethren's meeting-house, four miles north of Knobnoster, on Friday and Saturday, the 19th and 20th of May. Brethren and sisters coming on the cars will stop off at Knobnoster, and by notifying brother Isaac Wampler in due time will find conveyance there upon their arrival to take them to the place of meeting. A hearty invitation is given to brethren from other States to be with us to help us.

By order of the church,
JOSEPH WAMPLER.
Per JOHN HARSHEY.

Sunday, February 6th, 1876.

I went to church this morning; not to one of those costly and imposing edifices, of which we see so many in our city, but to a rather unpretending one for the present time, and one in which the difference in the different classes of society is not so painfully apparent. The morning's lesson was Matthew, 7th chapter. The morning's text was from the beginning of 24th to end of 27th verse of same chapter. I felt that the words spoken therefrom were really good and true.

The speaker first endeavored to show that in order to have a solid building we must build upon a solid foundation, and all the while think our building would stand the test of the storms and floods.

Some, he said, thought, "I am a pretty good sort of person; I do not steal; I wrong no one in any way; try to do as I would wish others to do to me; yet the foundation is sandy." Others thought, "I surely shall be saved; I say my prayers, read my hymns, go to church regularly, give to the support of the church, give to the poor, am active in the meetings;" yet, with all these supposed good works, the foundation was more miserably sandy than the first.

He then went on to state that we were not saved by human merit, and he thanked God that we were not—that "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." He said by nature some persons were born fifty years behind another in intellect, and if Christ saved us by human merit, how could the one born so much later be equal to the one born so many years ahead?

To illustrate that we must come trusting alone in the merits of Christ, he related a little story of a white man and an Indian being convicted of sin at the same time. The red man soon received comfort, while the white man was several weeks in receiving this peace. He asked the Indian what made the difference. He said this: "Christ offered us each a robe. You thought your own was pretty good—satisfied you pretty well—and therefore you were longer in accepting the robe offered by Christ. Mine was naught but rags, and I gladly accepted the better one offered by my Savior."

He further stated that some who even profess to follow Christ are so painted and whitewashed by their own supposed good works that they are depending on them for their own salvation. He thought these would be among the number to whom Christ would say, "I never knew you."

These, he said, depended on their own morality to save them; and further remarked that if there was anything which chilled him through and through, it was to hear persons laud their own good works, and that he would rather preach to a drunkard raised from the gutter than to a moral man who trusts in his own works to save him.

He argued that none of us could be perfect with our imperfect and desperately wicked natures and deceitful hearts; and then went on to show how we could be deceived. In some persons, he said, the evil came right to the surface; in others, not quite so near; and many of us were ready at once to exclaim, "Oh! I am not nearly so bad as that person." But, he said, although the evil might lie dormant, it was still there; Christ included all in sin, and without his saving blood to cleanse our hearts from these hidden sins, spoken of in the 19th verse, Matthew, 13th chapter, we were not one particle better than those persons upon whom we might be disposed to look as much more wicked than we.

He concluded by repeating earnestly, that to have an house securely built, so as to withstand all storms and floods, the foundation must be Christ alone; for, he added, there is no other name in heaven or among men whereby we can be saved than by the name of Jesus.

Stray Thoughts.

My dear brethren and sisters, this is Sunday morning. We have been at home all day. Our meeting to-day was held about twenty miles from here. Two Sundays in each month we have preaching within seven miles; and once in a while at our school-house. We received No. 5 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and, as usual, its pages tell us the harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few. Calls are being made all over the west for preaching, and I think the Brethren are doing well to heed them. Many, very many, are leaving their comfortable homes in the east and moving out to a country that is new and full of hardships. But their sacrifice is not made in vain. Good preaching is like the genial rain upon parched ground. The people do not want eloquent, wordy sermons, but pure and weighty ones. We hope our ministering brethren in the east, or wherever there is an abundance of help, will consider this matter. Rest assured there is a field ready for every one of you who can be spared from where you are.

A long time ago considerable was written about voting. How is it? Can a brother vote and not fight? Can he help give power and then not stand by the officers in the discharge of their duties? We can be subject to the government, but can we be subjects of it and of Christ's too? Brethren, this is a subject that should engage some of our thoughts. We should indeed be thankful for such a government as we have in our country; thankful that pure and noble men are making the laws which govern us; thankful that our brotherhood is held in esteem by them; but should we "do evil that good may come?" I think like brother Miller in No. 5, that we ought to embrace every opportunity within our power to do good; but the field is large, and I think we can have enough to do without going to the polls. Yours truly,

MARY C. MILLER.

Centennial.

In looking carefully over the pages of the Companion and Visitor, volume 2, No. 46, I see in the arrangement for the Centennial set forth a vast collection of curiosities and wonders of the world, if they may be so called; and as the carnal mind is so easily led astray, and is so much for feeding on curiosities, it leads me to think that not only thousands, but tens of thousands, will be found parading and hovering around the great carcass, which is the very appearance of evil in its full extent. There will be many a man's pocket picked, human life lost, and deeds of the darkest dye committed.

Will I be there to behold the sight? I say, No; I would not be seen there. Why not? Read the Scriptures and you will get my answer; besides, I have learned many beautiful lessons by hearing our dear brethren transact business in the Lord's house. Will there be any of our brethren there? I greatly fear. I have learned in the words of eternal truth, which I take for my guide, that we are not to seek our own interest, but the interest of one another. So, for my own good and the love of precious souls, I ask for some dear brother to give us light on this subject through the columns of your paper, that will be for my good, and for the good of members that might not be fully acquainted with the order of the Brethren, if there be any such. We have reason to believe that there are such, for we know of some here in the west that never heard of the Brethren until a very short time before they united with them, and it is reasonable that our belief and all our order cannot be learned at once. ### Children in or out of the Church.

In No. 5 brother J. S. Flory proposes the following query:

"Is it contrary to the Scripture to claim our little children belong to the church, or Kingdom of Christ?"

The brother says there are different opinions entertained upon that matter, and desires to hear one founded upon sound doctrine. I propose to give mine, and leave it to the brother and any others to say whether sound or not.

Whilst I might agree with Mr. Moody, that our children (little, of course,) are not born in the church, yet I claim that they are subjects of Christ's Kingdom; but not by virtue of their fleshly birth. "Right," says one, "that which is born of flesh is flesh;" hence we "must be born of water and of the Spirit."

I say right, too, but do not apply this Scripture to innocent infants or children. Nicodemus had lost his innocence, hence, when applied to him it was all right, but when applied to little children it becomes wrong; and in this wrong we have the source of the many varieties of opinion in this matter, as well as in many others. But if not born into the church, how does it become the subject of Christ's kingdom? By virtue of it's innocence. "Innocent, indeed," some will say, "do they not display, when quite young, a great degree of anger?" True, but no malice. Anger itself is no sin in an adult, (much less in a child,) unless it prompts to evil action.

When God created the world and all things therein, man included, he pronounced all good, yea, very good. And the apostle James says, James v. 17, "Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning." Hence God is unchangeable, as James says, and as we believe. Then it follows that if Adam was created without sin, our children are also in a similar condition in that respect, and must sustain to their Creator the same relationship, which we may call subjects of his kingdom, or of Christ's kingdom, as we believe Christ was present at the creation at the beginning. They are not members of his church, but a creation of a higher order; sufficiently so that he uses them (the children) as a standard by which he tests our qualification. If not so, where the propriety of the following language of Christ (Math. xviii. 3), "Except ye be converted and become as a little child, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Evidently children are here recognized as subjects fit for the kingdom of heaven, and as such they become a standard by which to measure our qualification for a similar position. Yet, whilst we may be called members of the church militant, they are subjects of the church triumphant. They have the advantage of us who have arrived at the age of accountability. Their righteousness is an imputed one, whilst ours is to be acquired, and retained, too, through the same source theirs was, but with our co-operation. Hence the Savior says: "For of such is the kingdom of heaven," without their co-operation or anything that might be done for them by their parents, or any one else.

I might now refer to many passages of Scripture which would fortify me in the view I have taken, but will content myself with but a few. Refer to the history of Adam's fall. Why was it that he fell? Was it not in consequence of violating God's commandments? He ate of the tree whose fruit was forbidden him. Will he deal more rigidly with his creation now? I feel to say with emphasis, No; for he is unchangeable. His language is, "Eat and die, refrain and live;" "The soul that sins, it shall die."

When God gave the law to Moses the second time, he prefaced the gift with many impressive declarations, among which are the following: "Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin. And will by no means clear the guilty." In these words I recognize three classes of persons referred to. The first obtains mercy, which may have referred to little children; the second, those who confess their transgressions will be forgiven; and the third will be punished—the persistently guilty.

Some will say, "Does he not also say that he 'will visit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generations'?" Yes; but those children will not suffer because of their sins, but of their parents', and only in this life, some entailed physical infirmity. Bear that in mind. David lost his child because of his sin; yet when it died he ceased mourning, and resolved to prepare to meet it in a better world. So may we. Let us all resolve to do it, for many of us have such innocents in heaven to draw us thither, and all will then be well.

Editors Primitive Christian:

As I am not at meeting to-day, and consequently rather lonesome, I thought I would give you a little church news.—When a brother or sister attends meeting regularly every Sunday for two or three years, and then stays away, it is only then that he can fully realize the benefits derived by attending meeting every Sabbath. There was once a time when I thought it was not so necessary to attend meeting every Sunday, and would only go when it was convenient and near to me; and the more I staid away the less I cared for meeting; but since I attend meeting regularly, it is not a hard task to start on Sunday morning and go from 10 to 15 miles to meeting and back the same day. I fear there are many of our brethren and sisters who attend meeting only when it is convenient, and in consequence fail to receive good instruction and admonitions. More than this, there is nothing that is better calculated to discourage the minister than a coldness on the part of the members, and their absence from the place of meeting. Then for your own good and advancement in the divine life, and the encouragement of your minister, attend church regularly. Let the minister stay away from meeting several times, and how soon you will begin to complain of him, and say that he is not faithful to his calling, forgetting that the command, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together," (Heb. x. 25,) is to you as well as to the minister. But I started out to give some church news.

Our church (Bear Creek) is in a prosperous condition. Everything seems to move off quietly and peaceably, at this time.—We were favored with a number of sermons, by J. W. Stein, from Necocho, Mo., last fall, which had the desired effect.—The Sunday following brother Stein's leave from us, two of his Baptist friends—a man and his wife—came out and said they wanted to unite with the Brethren, and were baptized the same day. Week before last we were favored with the same number of sermons by brother Daniel Vaniman, from Virden, Ills. Our congregations gradually increased in number and seemingly so in interest; but as is often the case, about the time the people became deeply interested the meetings closed. Good impressions were made, however; and we hope it may be as bread cast upon the waters to be gathered up many days hence.

Several families of members moved out of our district into other districts, among whom was one of our worthy ministering brethren, brother Henry Brubaker, and his wife, who took the offer of friend Crothers, in Gage Co., Nebraska. This leaves our ministry too weak to fill all the calls for preaching. We received nine by baptism this last summer, which leaves our number about the same as it was a year ago.

Could you not get the discussion brother Robert H. Miller is about to engage in and publish it in pamphlet form, and sell it to those who want it? As the discussion between brother Miller and Hodges, is scattered over a good many numbers of the Companion and Visitor, it is not likely to do the amount of good it might do if we had it in pamphlet form. * * * We expect a full report of Annual Meeting next spring, but we want it in pamphlet form. There is not one brother in our church district that feels like spending the amount of money it would cost to go to the place of A. M., from here, when the whole can be got for a trifle. There are different calls now for money, and I think we had better give liberally to such calls, and not give so much to the railroad companies to go to places of Annual Meeting, when we can get all that is said and done for the small sum of 10 or 15 cents.

ABRAHAM S. LEER.

SCIOLA, Iowa, Jan. 24, 1875.

To the Brethren and Sisters in Christ,
Greeting:

Something over a year ago I wrote a letter which was published in the Companion and Visitor, giving some information about Montgomery county, intimating to brethren and friends who were thinking about moving west to call and see our country before purchasing. The result was a very heavy correspondence for several months from brethren and friends in various parts of the country, making more inquiry about our country, making more inquiry about our country. Some visited us, a few located with us, and all, or nearly all, expressed themselves as being well pleased with the country, and left us with the impression that they would locate with us as soon as they could make the necessary arrangements. To such, and all others, we would say, perhaps there never was a better time to buy improved lands than now since the settlement of South-western Iowa. Wheat having failed last season, to some extent, and the quality being very poor, and having an enormous crop of corn, which was also somewhat inferior in quality in consequence of the long continued heavy rains in the fall, which kept the corn growing so late that it did not ripen well, making the price for both wheat and corn very low, thus bringing in but very little money to the farmer, and as most of our people came here with but limited means, most of them being more or less involved in debt on their lands, or machinery, etc., and now the close times for money coming on, has had a tendency to embarrass those involved more than before. The result is many are offering to sell their farms very reasonable, ranging in price from $20 to $25 per acre with pretty good improvements. Almost any number of acres from 40 acres to a one half section. There are also large tracts of wild lands for sale at from $12 to $15 per acre. The R. R. Company has but few desirable pieces for sale in this county; yet they have some pretty good land which they sell on 10 years' time (four years before any principal payment is required) at 6 per cent. interest.

The lands here mentioned lie in the vicinity of Brethren, where there is regular preaching, and where they contemplate building a house for worship next summer. There are about 40 members living here on West Nodaway River, 22 miles west of Mt. Etna in Adams county, where the main body of the brethren is located, known as the Adams county congregation, which has been for many years under the charge of our worthy brother, Eld. Christian Harader, and by his unceasing labor, patience, and perseverance, and his zeal for the cause of Christ, the church has grown to her present strength. But he left this arm of the church last summer and located in south-western Missouri. May the Lord bless him in his new field of labor.

The brethren on West River have received into fellowship since last March, 12 by baptism and several by letter. We held our lovefeast on the evening of Sept. 26th at the house of the writer. Had a very pleasant meeting, good attendance and good order. Having failed to secure the services of an ordained brother, the labor of serving fell upon our dear brother A. Harader, from Mt. Etna. He did the work well. On the next day the brethren preached the word to a large congregation of attentive listeners, and on the day following, the brethren at Mt. Etna held their feast, and it was truly a feast of love. No Elder being present, the labor again fell upon brethren in the second degree in the ministry. The meeting passed off very pleasantly. Had several good meetings, the brethren preaching the word in its purity with much freedom and earnestness. Two precious souls were received by baptism, and one lamb that had strayed from the flock was found and reclaimed.

Our district is about eighty by one hundred miles in extent, and but few laborers. In many parts of this territory the people know but little about the Brethren. The Savior says to his ministers, "Go," and we invite you to come and help us, live with us, and preach for us. The wages are good, even eternal life to all his faithful children. There are many districts of the Brethren in the East that have from three to seven speakers, and the territory comparatively small. Oftentimes all of these brethren are present at the same meeting, while thousands of precious souls are perishing for want of the bread of life. Oh, how many cries have saluted our ears from the far-off west and south, "Come and preach for us and our neighbors!" How many times have we heard brethren and sisters say in their entreaties for preaching, "We have not heard a brother preach for one, two and sometimes three years." Brethren, do you ever think of those calls when there are from three to six of you at the same meeting? If you have never thought of these things please think of them when you meet again, and think seriously.—Above all, remember that the Master has said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and ask yourself, "Have I obeyed that command of my Lord as far as I could? have I obeyed the calls of my brethren when they have begged of me to come and preach for them? Don't console yourselves by thinking these calls and commands are meant for some one else. They are for you. There is no hiding behind brother Quinter, or brother Saylor, or brother Davy, or some other brother whose age or circumstances will not allow him to go. You are the brethren that are young and strong.

In conclusion we will say, Come and help us. We have a healthy country and good soil. Any one desiring more knowledge of the country, by enclosing stamp will receive all the information we can give.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality.

BEATRICE, Gage Co., Neb.,
Jan. 22, 1875.

Dear Brethren:—

By your permission, according to promise before I left Illinois, for the satisfaction of many friends, and to answer the inquiries of many, I wish to occupy some space in your columns.

We landed here on the 13th of October, 1875. Since then we have had the finest weather I ever saw for the time of year. We have had only two rains, and very little mud, as we have but little of that even when it rains a great deal. The weather has been very favorable for me, as had to build, and to improve my place. I now have my house so far completed that we can get along quite comfortably.

We now enjoy our new home, and are well satisfied with it and the country; and feel that we made a good exchange.

This country is very productive of all kinds of grain; and so far as it has been tried it has proved to be a good fruit country. I think, too, that I am quite safe in saying to you that it is a fine stock country, for cattle, hogs, and sheep; and for the latter it cannot be excelled. All kinds of poultry also do well. For mills and manufacturing facilities, the Blue River cannot be surpassed. The valley of the Blue River is beautiful and fertile. Then we have rich, rolling prairies, beautiful magnesia limestone for building purposes, a sufficiency of timber, good water, and many other things that we might mention. Taking all together we think it one of the most desirable places we have yet seen.

Now a little of our spiritual condition, labor and encouragement, as this is of the greatest importance. In the Beatrice church we now number about forty-five members. This church was organized last spring. About half of the members live in the neighborhood of 16 miles west of Beatrice, in Saline county, at which place we have monthly meeting.—On New Year brother Urias Shiek and his wife, brother Levi Fry and myself, set out for this point and stayed nearly a week preaching with them. During this time we had a council meeting as the enemy had made some trouble among the lambs; but under the blessing of God, he was routed and love was restored. We hope the members will be more careful, and watchful on their picket posts.

We have meeting every Sunday in the vicinity of Beatrice. We have had five additions since I am here, and we have a fine prospect for more. Our encouragement from emigration is quite flattering. Two brethren bought here last week, within three miles from my place; and brother Shiek and his brother-in-law bought within two miles. We have visitors almost every week from some quarter, and all are well pleased.

In conclusion, we will invite brethren who think of coming west to please come and look at our country. It holds up its own excellence, and will bear inspection. With our love to all concerned, we ask an interest in your prayers.

HENRY BRUBAKER.

The Stein Fund.

Brethren and sisters, shall brother Stein have what he asks for? I think I hear many kind, feeling hearts saying, "Yes." He has asked our aid to send out 13,000 tracts containing a clear vindication of true immersion. There is, indeed, no good reason why he should not send them, but many good reasons why he should. If only one soul should be induced to come to the Lord by this means, would not the Lord be glorified? What is $1,000 compared with a soul? Not anything. I hope, therefore, the work of publishing and sending out may not be delayed for the want of money; but that the required amount may be raised immediately. Are there 15,000 brethren and sisters who are willing to each send five cents to brother J. H. Moore, Urbana, Champaign county, Ills., for this purpose? Let us see what can be done by April 1st, 1876. May the Lord bless his beloved everywhere.

Yours in love,

M. M. ESHELMAN.

Dear Brother Quinter :

I will try to contribute a few thoughts for the readers of your valuable paper.—I have been a reader of the Companion and Visitor for two years, and now have received three numbers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, in which, I rejoice to say, I have received many good and wholesome instructions and admonitions. It is true we should not neglect the reading of our Bible, which is the Book of books; but when we read our periodicals, which are composed of Scriptural quotations and explanations, it will enlighten our minds and enable us to see clearly into things which we could not ourselves comprehend. The Bible is a study, and it requires explanations on certain points; and the brethren have an opportunity to give their views through our papers. I verily believe our religious papers have done much good in convincing many of the error of their preconceived opinions.

Many people, nowadays, think that if they only read the Scriptures and are praying people, that will do, whether they obey the commands or not; but let me tell you that you will not be saved on these grounds. The Apostle James says, "Show me thy faith without thy works and I will show thee my faith by my works." We must have a working faith, or we fail of a blessing. In spreading the gospel in its true light through our periodicals, it will not only be read by our brethren and sisters, but by many who make no profession whatever, and by the many who claim to belong to some church and do not the things which are commanded in the divine Scripture. For this reason I believe our periodicals have done much good. Let those who are well informed in the Scriptures, and are good composers, make use of their talents in this way.

Many have not the opportunity of hearing the gospel preached in its true light, and by having our periodicals sent to them, they can read for themselves and see whether these things be so. Brethren and sisters, let us pray God to give us grace, knowledge and understanding, that we may be able to show our good works by our faith—the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

Some of our old brethren, who are wearing the blossom of the grave upon their heads, who are no more able to go into the world to preach the gospel, on account of their feebleness, have now an opportunity to write for the periodicals, and give good and wholesome instructions and admonitions, which are profitable for us all. Let us receive them, for they will do us good. We should try and give our editors good encouragement. Supply them with plenty of reading matter, and contribute to their wants, so that they may not be in want—pray God to give them grace and light that they may always publish what will be for the good of the church, and for the welfare and up-building of Zion.

Now brethren and sister, let us put our shoulders to the wheel, and push forward the good work of the Lord. We lay members can do much good by letting our light shine and keeping ourselves in our places, as becometh professors of Christianity. Let all the members endeavor to show that they have a zeal for the cause of Christ.

Trip to Virginia.

On the 1st of January my wife and I, by special request, visited Flat Rock church, Shenandoah county, Va., to help labor in preaching the word. We stopped off at Maurertown and had preaching at Coop's school house, on the evening of the 5th. The brethren were enjoying good health bodily, and we trust, spiritually. Next evening we had meeting at Mt. Jackson. Next morning we went to Cedar Grove meeting house. The meetings continued here morning and evening until noon the 9th; the Lord evidently working in the hearts of his people, to will and to do of his good pleasure. In the afternoon we were taken to Plaine's Mills, where we had meeting on Sunday and Monday evenings. On Tuesday at 2 o'clock, p. m., we had meeting at P. Barry's, and in the evening at Timberville; also on Wednesday evening. We visited brother David Wine, who was very ill, whom we anointed. We also, in company with brother S. H. Myers, assisted in the funeral services of a colored man. On Thursday we had meeting at Flat Rocks, and in the evening at Forestville. On Friday morning meeting again at Flat Rocks, and in the evening we came again to Plaine's Mills; on Saturday evening again to Cedar Grove; and on Sunday to Fairview M. H. This is a new house, just finished, a fine, commodious house for worship. The morning's services were regarded as the dedicatory services. The meeting was largely attended and much interest was manifested. We hope the few meetings at this place will prove the beginning of the dedication of many souls to God.—On Monday evening meeting at Mt. Jackson again. Tuesday morning again to Cedar Grove, where, after inducing some by baptism into the body of Christ, we took leave of each other for home, commending one another to the grace of God and communion of the Holy Spirit.

The Elder of this arm of the church is Jacob Wine; co laborers, A. Neff, S. H. Myers, B. W. Neff, J. Elias, and David Cline. The church seems in a flourishing condition. The brethren and sisters seem to be active in the cause, devoted and zealous; at least so much so during these meetings that they did what they could in adapting everything to the best use and advantage for the promotion of the cause, and to add to the interest of the meetings. The people who attended these meetings seemed interested, and we trust they were lastingly benefited. While many saw the light of salvation and were almost persuaded, some were altogether, and are enjoying its power in the beauty of the light.

We feel particularly to say a few words to the children of our brethren, their sons and daughters, their neighbors and their children, who during these meetings, did manifest so much interest, and were so much concerned. Your attention, your kindness, your interest in the preached word, your longing desires, secret sighs, and your tears, will not pass unheeded; While your cup of joy, mingled with tears in fear, was filling before the throne of God, your burning hearts were filled with longing desires to enjoy the richer grace, and a larger measure of the love of God in the union and fellowship of the church. But to enjoy that, you will have to yield the consent of the mind, or will, to come to Christ. Take his yoke upon you; and learn of him. He wants you to come.—He has called you and is still calling upon you to come. Come; he has said, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."—Will you come? May God still work in you to will and to do of his good pleasure.

In Memoriam.

On Friday, January 14th, I attended the funeral of my dear cousin and much loved sister, Lizzie Rhoads. I was very sorry to hear the sad news that she had departed this life; but when I heard of her sufferings I was made to feel glad that she had gone to a world where there is no more sorrow. Lizzie was loved by all who knew her. She was a remarkable child in all respects. She was very obedient to her parents, kind to all by whom she was surrounded, and truly pious. The bereaved parents are now bereft of their only daughter. They can no more see her smiling face, or hear her sweet voice utter kind words of love and affection in this world; but they have a strong hope of meeting her beyond the river, never more to sever.

While Lizzie was here on earth she suffered a great deal. Her sickness was heart disease. She had been poorly for some time, and, in fact, never had been very healthy. Last summer she was taken sick, and no one thought she could recover. She began to be concerned for her soul's salvation, and as soon as she had recovered somewhat, she and her brother, (older than she,) became willing to be the Lord's children and obey all his commands, and were led, or rather carried, to the water and baptized. Lizzie sought her Savior in her youthful days. At her death she had just arrived at the age of 16. Methinks she heard her Savior's voice telling her she had no continuing city here. Therefore she earnestly sought one to come. She suffered a great deal in her afflictions; but she bore it all patiently and with Christian fortitude, and died in a fond hope of going where there is no more suffering. Yes, Lizzie is gone; she can no more press the kisses on her mother's cheek, or entwine her with her loving arms. We think it almost impossible for so sweet and lovely a rose to wither and die away in so short a time.—She sprang up and budded on earth; now she is blooming in heav'n. And dear parents, methinks if Lizzie could tell of the glories of her new home, freed from all pain and suffering, she would say, "Oh parents, haste! O brother come and don't delay in the pleasures of this world which must all vanish away; but lay up your treasures in heaven which shall forever stand. Shortly before her death she expressed herself that she was one of her Savior's lambs, and he has taken her home. Now she is resting

"Safe in the arms of Jesus, Safe on his gentle breast."

Methinks without the aid of Jesus it would be impossible to bear a bereavement so great; but Jesus can turn weeping into joy. Jesus can comfort the broken-hearted, and he will wipe all tears from our eyes. My dear uncle and aunt, you may not see the object Jesus has in view, but you shall see it some time. May you say as David says, "Hope, thou in God, for I shall yet praise him." Oh, that we were all where Lizzie is, from trials and temptations free, and could join the angels praising God. But we are not there yet. No one knows of his trials and troubles save Jesus alone. But if we trust in him and obey his commands he will do all things for our eternal welfare. Let us all take courage anew, and where our weary feet have wandered away from the Lord's commands, let us retrace them and not stray from the fold, but cling near to Jesus and he will cling near unto us.

Book Notice.

A treatise on trine immersion, proving from the New Testament, and the established rules and principles of language, that Trine Immersion is the only valid baptism. It consists of a grammatical analysis of the commission, and analogy of the commission and other passages, and miscellaneous proofs.

This work has been some expense to me to get it printed. And as I presume the pecuniary advantage in tracts is a little doubtful, I of course am anxious to sell them as fast as possible. I did not rely on my own judgment only, as to the propriety and utility of having it printed, but showed the manuscript to several brethren, (H. D. Day and David Bowman,) whose favorable expressions were somewhat instrumental in having it printed. This tract will be sent to any address at the following rates: Single copy, 15 cents; 2 copies, 25 cents; 14 copies, $1.50. This pamphlet will be sent postpaid on receipt of price. Send money order for all amounts above $1.50.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near Roano, in Miami county, Ind., Sept. 18th, 1875, MELVINA JOHN, aged 17 years, 6 months and 2 days. She deceased was a daughter of Joseph John, a member of the Squirrel Creek congregation, in Walsh county, Ind. Her death was caused by brain fever. Melvina seemed to be the friend of every one who knew her, and her parents are left to mourn the loss of one whose life seemed as short as the spring day and as sweet as the songs of the birds she loved so well. She was buried at the Keann graveyard. Her funeral services were performed by brother David Neff, to a very large and solemn congregation.

BENJAMIN NEFF.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

Jan. 24th, in the Manor congregation, Indiana county, Pa., sister MARGARET BUNKHART, aged 63 years, 8 months and 20 days. She has been a faithful member of the church for nearly 30 years. Was the mother of nine children, seven of whom survive, one a deacon in the church. Two died in infancy. She had been afflicted from the effects of palsy four and a half years. Some of the faculties of her mind were destroyed, but life seemed tenacious, and nature only yielded to the third stroke of paralysis. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, by making use of 2 Cor. i. 4, 10, and hymns 580, 610, 611 and 602, acted by different friends.

Jos. HOLDSOPPLE

In the Swan Creek church, Lucas county, Ohio, June 12th, 1874, MARGARET ZEIGLER, wife of brother John Zeigler, aged 71 years, 3 months and 29 days. She was the mother of 11 children, (5 of whom preceded her in death,) 39 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren. Funeral discourse by the writer.

Also, same church, Fulton county, Ohio,

June 14th, 1874, SARAH M. ROSS, wife of Isaac S. Ross; disease, dropsy of the heart. Funeral discourse by the writer.

Also, same church, Lucas county, Ohio, May, 1875, FLORA A. DECK, wife of friend David Deck, aged 20 years, 2 months and 29 days. Funeral discourse by the writer.

Also, same church, Fulton county, Ohio, Jan. 6th, 1876, sister MANY ANN MAUGLE, wife of brother Jacob Maugle, aged 60 years, 6 months and 21 days. This mother in Israel lived in holy matrimony 40 years, 4 months and 26 days; was the mother of 11 children, two of whom preceded her in death. She was born in Bedford county, Pa., and in the year of 1835 she and family emigrated to Lucas county, Ohio. She was a member of the church for 25 years. Funeral discourse by the writer, from Rev. xiv. 13, to an attentive congregation.

AARON BERKEYBILLE.

(Pilgrim please copy the latter.)

In the Newton church, Miami county, Ohio, on the 18th of Jan., 1876, sister ELIZABETH BASENONE, widow of brother George Baschore (formerly from Janita county, Pa.), aged 81 years, 1 month and 4 days.

Also, in the same church district, Jan. 24th, 1876, BESSIE, daughter of friend Daniel and sister Ward, aged one year, six months and 21 days. Funeral services of both the above by the Brethren.

SAMUEL MOULDER.

In the bounds of the Pony Creek church, Brown county, Kansas, Jan. 15th, 1876 JOHN HARVEY, infant son of brother Edward D. and sister Elizabeth Spangler, aged 2 years, 2 months and 8 days. Little Johnnie died very suddenly, and his disease is supposed to have been congestive chills. Funeral services by brother W. H. H. Sawyer and the writer.

J. J. LITCHY.

In the bounds of the Four-mile congregation, Franklin county, Ind., Sept. 13th, 1875, ANNA SHUMAN, daughter of brother Jacob and sister Lydia Shuman, aged 31 years, 2 months and 12 days. Disease, typhoid fever. She was not a member of the church, but when she saw death approaching her she called for the Brethren to come and receive her as an applicant for baptism, which she would attend to if the Lord would raise her to health again. When the Brethren arrived her mind was so far gone that she could not tell what she desired. The Brethren sang and prayed with her, and commended her to the Lord, who will do right under all circumstances. During her sickness, and when in her right mind, her whole conversation was that she might walk on the narrow road, and get to heaven, where there is no sickness, sorrow and death. Another solemn warning to all, and especially to the young. Funeral occasion improved by brother Alfred Moore, to a large concourse of people, from 1 Cor., xv. 22, 23.

JACON RIFE.

In memory of sister REBECCA ELKINS, wife of brother James Elkias. She was born Oct. 19th, 1830, and died Sept. 27th, 1875, aged 44 years, 11 months and 6 days. She leaves a kind husband and 8 children to mourn their loss, which is her eternal gain. She lived a consistent life for some time in the church, and left a living testimony that she was going to rest from all her labors. By request, the funeral discourse was preached by brother Samuel and Abraham Moisebe, on the first Sabbath of November, to a large concourse of friends and relatives, who deeply sympathize with the bereaved family.

S. MOISELEE.

In Shelby county, Ohio, Oct. 19th, 1875, sister SUSANNA STUMEL, wife of brother Peter Strubel, aged 44 years and 29 days. Funeral service by Eld. J. N. Kauffmann, from Rev. xiv. 13.

Dr. Pierce.

From the Toledo Blade.

"Success is never achieved without merit. A man may make a poor article and sell it once, and there being 40,000,000 people in the United States, the sale to each one would be enough to make a decent fortune. But an article that holds the field year after year, and the sales of which increase regularly and rapidly, must have absolute merit.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., occupies our entire eighth page to-day with his various articles. We admit it because we know the Doctor and know of his articles. We know him to be a regularly educated physician, whose diplomas hang on the walls of his office, and we know that he has associated with him several of the most eminent practitioners in the country. We know that parties consult him, by mail and in person, from all States in the Union every day, and that they are fairly and honestly dealt with.

This grand result has been accomplished by two agencies—good, reliable articles—articles which, once introduced, work easily their own way—and splendid business management. They have succeeded because they ought to have succeeded.

If you would patronize Medicines, scientifically prepared by a skilled Physician and Chemist, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Golden Medical Discovery is nutritious, tonic, alterative, and blood-cleansing; and an unequalled Cough Remedy; Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic; Favorite Prescription, a remedy for debilitated females; Extract of Smartweed, a magical remedy for Pain, Bowel Complaints, and an unequalled Liniment for both human and horse flesh; while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. They are sold by Druggists.

20 Years a Sufferer—Cured by the Golden Medical Discovery.

DR. R. V. PIERCE:
Dear Sir:—Twenty years ago I was shipwrecked on the Atlantic Ocean, and the cold and exposure caused a large abscess to form on each leg, which kept continually discharging. I was attended by doctors in Liverpool, Havre, New Orleans, New York, and at the hospital on Staten Island (where the doctors wanted to take one leg off). Finally, after spending hundreds of dollars, I was persuaded to try your "Golden Medical Discovery," and now, in less than three months after taking the first bottle, I am thankful to say I am completely cured, and for the first time in ten years can put my left heel to the ground. I am at home nearly every evening and shall be glad to satisfy any person of the truth of this information. I am, sir, yours respectfully,
WILLIAM RYDER,
87 Jefferson Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

AURORA, Ills., Feb. 4th, 1876.
Dr. P. Fahrney, Chicago, Ill.:

I have been a customer for some years to your Blood Cleanser. I have been complaining at the price for some time, but still I was disposed to use it, for my wife and I think her very life is due to the use of your medicine. Now, since I see that you offer to sell to farmers at wholesale prices, I send for your price and instructions. You will please give me your very best terms, as I am quite a consumer, as well as a faithful advocate.

Last week you had a call from Naperville for one bottle. This was ordered through my recommendation. I was surprised that you had no agency at Naperville. I do not know how much I may sell, but I want to use much for my family, if I get it at a rate so I can afford it.

I am a Pennsylvanian, latterly from Maryland, near Hagerstown, the place or vicinity where old Dr. Fahrney first held forth. My wife's mother used his medicine, which at that time bore a high reputation. I will look for your instructions in a few days.

JACOB CROMER.
P. S.—My wife tells me that her father, Sebastian Bear, of the vicinity of Greencastle, Pa., went to old Dr. Fahrney, below Funkstown, Md., for medicine for herself for spitting blood, and she was cured. I only note these things out of good feeling.

A BOATMAN'S SONG.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

Out upon the stormy ocean,
Where the surging billows roar,
In my little boat I paddle,
Longing for the other shore.

When sometimes the howling tempest
Chafes around my trembling bark;
When the sea rucs high and fearful,
And the clouds are thick and dark;

When I reach a sunny islet,
Weather-beaten, there I stand;
And I look, with grateful longie,
Over toward the other land.

But sometimes a mist arises,
And I cannot see to row;
When again the fog disperses,
In my boat I ooward go.

Here so lonesomely I wander
O'er this wide and dangerous deep;
But a chait n I have o'er yonder,
If my course I rightly keep.

When sometimes the winds are boisterous,
And the atmosphere is cold,
I would love a warmer climate,
And a land of pearls and gold.

Such a land is over yonder,
On the paradisiac shore,
Where the climate is delightful,
And the tempests all are o'er,

Where the sunshine never ceases,
And no cloud obscures the day.
There the shore is always verdant,
And the season always May.

Partiality.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

Partiality is "favoring one party in a cause, or one side of a question, more than the other." After reading the article on "Consistency and Inconsistency," in No. 1, of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, I felt somewhat impressed with a sense of duty to present some thoughts on the above subject. We should all strive to become wise unto salvation, which we can only do by seeking the wisdom that is from above, which is declared to be "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." In writing of this wisdom Paul writes, that "God ordained it before the world unto our glory." From this we learn that those who are partial are not in possession of true wisdom: They are not in possession of the pure and undefiled religion of Jesus, which he bought with his precious blood, and infuses by his Holy Spirit. The Lord requires of us "to do justly." Christ declares judgment to be one of the weightier matters of the law; and in the sense in which he uses the term, there can be no judgment where there is no justice; and there can certainly be no justice where there is partiality. One of the most notable charges recorded in the Bible was given before God, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the holy angels, and reads as follows: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality." I take the privilege of italicizing what specially bears on the subject under consideration: Those who have respect to persons are partial in themselves, and "are become judges of evil thoughts," committing sin, and are convicted of the law as transgressors. If "one little sin, in its train, will bring a great many larger ones," who can know the final consequences of the abominable sin of partiality? It has brought indescribable misery upon all the institutions that God has set up on earth. The church felt its effects, as well as the family and state.

First, permit a few citations to where the peace and prosperity of families have been greatly marred by this sin. After God had instituted the family, he said to Adam and Eve, "Be faithful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." Soon after, there were born unto them two sons (twins, as I am inclined to believe, and as some contend). The first born they named Cain, which means acquisition; the second, Abel, which signifies vanity. Now when we know that anciently parents gave names to their children, the meaning which would point out the circumstances attending their birth, or the hope that they entertained of their future lives, we must conclude that they cherished great hopes of Cain, but not so of Abel. "By one man sin came into the world;" and if Adam and Eve sowed partiality, — the seed of sin, — they necessarily had to reap the bitter fruit thereof.

Petted children are generally spoiled favorites, who are allowed their own way, and thus the passions remain unbridled; which, when they are disappointed, end in heinous sins.

Partiality will gender envy and strife in one or the other party. It is true that God can and often does, bring good out of evil; but this in no wise, justifies the crime nor the sinful cause that gendered the crime.

Another remarkable cause of partiality was found in the Patriarch Jacob's family. It is written, "Israel loved Joseph more than all his children, because he was the son of his old age; and he made him a coat of many colors." This partiality on the part of Israel toward his children gendered hatred and envy in the family, and was the sowing of wickedness, the fruit of which the old Patriarch would reap with bitter tears. I often wonder whether Israel did not learn that he was, in a qualified sense, the architect of the sorrow which he endured when he exclaimed, "I will go down into the grave unto my son morning." I am inclined to believe that he did, when he learned all the facts of Joseph and his brethren, unless he was then like we are now, and looked more at the troubles themselves than at the cause of them. But enough of the family. Permit a few remarks on the church.

How important that those who have the charge of the church should know how to behave in the household of God! For the instruction of such, Paul gave the charge already referred to, that they should "do nothing by partiality." It is an evident fact that God knew that there would be danger of doing things in a partial manner, or he would not have inspired Paul to give such a notable charge against it. Let all who have the welfare of the church at heart, seek to do justly, doing nothing by partiality: if otherwise, you will scatter firebrands wherever you go. Partiality has gendered hatred and divisions in families that have not been wiped out or buried for ages; and it has done, and will do, the same in the household of God. As I have given instances of partiality in families, so I might of the church, but charity forbids that I should do so here; a hint to the wise is sufficient.

What is true of the family and church is equally true of the state. The institutions of family, church and state, are the chief levers which God employs to carry on the great work of evangelizing and saving the world: the family to train the youth in the way of the Lord; the church, where they can walk in that way; the state, to protect those who walk therein, by punishing the wicked and protecting the righteous. The Patriarchal, ecclesiastical, and civil governments are all dependent on each other for their prosperity. The principles of those governments are found in the Bible; but if the proper officers do not have them impartially enforced, but become respecters of persons, then they fail of answering the purpose for which they—that is, the governments—are designed. May God save us from the dreadful sin of partiality.

Wonderful.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A certain "LOVER" has arraigned me on no less serious a charge than "disrespect" to, and bitter and unkind language" of, the Lord of Glory. Is not this next door to blasphemy? He says, "I should be taught that a felon is a criminal, and felony a crime punishable with death: so says Webster." Thank you "Lover," for your well meant instruction. There is no harm in repeating a lesson even if we are as familiar with it as the alphabet. I would, however, in all kindness, recommend to "Lover" a little less of Webster in matters of religion, and more of the Bible interpreted by the Bible. Webster was a famous lexicographer, but a heterodox theologian, according to Paul. Gal. 1: 8. For the literal signification of words, I refer to Webster; but when I apply to Christ the revolting appellation of felon, no intelligent reader of the Bible should make so gross a blunder as to apply the term to the Redeemer's personal character. "How readeest thou," "Lover?" Substitutionally He was all that the vile, debased, guilty world was for whom He died. "Being delivered into wicked hands by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," He was trampled under foot as the embodiment of all impurity and hatefulness. "He was numbered with the transgressors," not only by man as a matter of reproach, but by God as a matter of expiation. He was counted with the felons literally, and as a felon vicariously. This is the good old central doctrine of the Bible, and I have no doubt that "Lover" believes it and glories in it as firmly as any one else. Felony is "a crime punishable with death," and this is the culmination of the God-man's atoning ministry. "He was made a little lower than the angels for the sufferings of death." God dealt with Him, not on the ground of personal character, but of vicarious relation. He had assumed the felon's lot and responsibilities, and as a felon He was treated by the Power to which the guilty were amenable. He was made sin for us, although He "knew no sin." What language can bring out more forcibly the personal purity and the imputed iniquity of Jesus. The very thought of ascribing to the All holy inherently what He was by imputation, is blasphemy. The holiest by nature became the unholiest by proxy. God "laid on Him the iniquity of us all." To concentrate the pollutions of the whole world in a single person would certainly make a character to which "Lover" would not hesitate to apply the word felon. And if Jesus be made that person by substitution, He is, in relation to the Divine Government, all that is signified by the term which my critic misapprehends. Do I make myself sufficiently plain, or must we appeal to some super-evangelic authority? Come, "Lover," let us not wrangle about the social or civil definition of words, but allow them the scope which the Bible assigns, and then Jesus will be intrinsically the All-fair and the All-good, and for us, attributively, enough of a felon to cover all our sins and cancel all our guilt.

WONDERFUL IS JESUS: but without becoming a "CURSE" for us, and bearing all that was due to the aggregate felony of humanity, He would not be Jesus at all. And He could become so degraded by assumption only because He was so great by nature. He is Wonderful in both characters, and Eternity alone can unfold the awful Wonders of the Cross.

Fire of God's Love.

BY H. R. KING.

"Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench." 1 Kings 18: 38. My mind is forcibly struck, with this consuming "fire of the Lord." O sinner, if your eye should happen to fall on this page, remember that "our God is a consuming fire!" and he has said he will come again to "take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior." "Knowing the terror of Lord, we do persuade men." Let us view that fire a little farther. I look back to the day of Pentecost, and see that the same fire fell on the apostles. What was the effect? It melted their icy hearts; produced love to God and man; and opened the eyes of their understanding. Thanks be to God, sinner, that same fire is in the world yet, and will melt your icy heart, if you will come near enough to it. Brethren, let us stay close to this fire, that no particles of ice may cling around our hearts.

Things which the Lord Hates.

BY GEORGE W. ANNON.

"These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him." Proverbs 6: 16.

This is the language of King Solomon, one of the wisest of men; a man that was full of the knowledge of God; a man that asked not wealth nor length of days, but desired to be filled with the knowledge of God. "These six things doth the Lord hate; a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and him that soweth discord among brethren."

Dear reader, these are solemn truths. We are taught in the Bible from Genesis to the end of Revelations, that God hates those things, that here have been enumerated. We find that Malachi the prophet says in speaking of the proud, "For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Isaiah says, "Wo unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be given him." Isa. 3: 11.

We can see these six things manifesting themselves every day, more or less; for our land is filled with pride and wickedness. It behooves us as Christian men and women, to be on our guard; for Satan is "going about, as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." Let us be up and doing while it is yet called to day; for the night cometh when no man can work. Let us improve the time and talent that the Lord has given us, that we may be enabled to give an account unto God for our stewardship. See the woe that is pronounced unto the daughters of Zion—"Moreover the Lord saith, Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, making a tinkling with their feet; therefore the Lord will smite with a scab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will discover their secret parts. In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers, the bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the head-bands, and the tablets, and the earrings, the rings, and the nose jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils. And it shall come to pass, that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty." Isaiah 3: 16-24. We find that God is a jealous God. He desires his people to worship him in spirit and in truth.

We see that at one age of the world man had become so wicked that God destroyed all but eight souls. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Gen. 6: 5, 6. Dear reader, it is a horrible thing that man would become so wicked that it would grieve his Maker's heart till it repented God that he had made man. Their wickedness was so great that he destroyed the antediluvian world, except Noah and his family. The apostle Paul says that the law was our school master to bring us to Christ. It was foretold by the prophets that he should come into the world; and we find that prophecy after prophecy was fulfilled, and at last Christ was born in Bethlehem in the land of Judea, a babe in a manger. We find too, that he was persecuted from the cradle to the grave. He was crucified but is risen again. He left us his will and testament. The will is now in force and will remain till the end of time, and then he is going to come again, and the words that he has spoken will judge us in the last day. Let us not, then, have that proud look, nor lying tongue, nor hands that shed innocent blood, but let us be ever ready; for he says, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

Love of Money.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

If we ever expect to gain a home in heaven, we must learn to live above all earthly passions, pleasures, and temptations. When we make earthly pleasure our chief aim, we are constantly meeting with disappointments. The love of money leads many, very many souls to ruin. There is scarcely anything that has not been sacrificed to procure it. Every artifice that humanity could invent has been tried to obtain money. While many have failed, others have succeeded in amassing large amounts of it, but it neither made them better or happier. Now that they have gained it, they find it does not bring the happiness they were seeking for. If money-seekers could but realize that there is only one thing that can bring happiness on this earth, and that it is found in salvation through the blessed Redeemer! If we seek him, we will be sure to find him, and peace and happiness will enter our hearts, and we can go on our way rejoicing. When we can leave the earth and its treasures behind us, and reach forward to endless happiness beyond the grave, then it is that we care nothing for money more than sufficient to supply present necessities. If we would set our affections on things above, and aim to live a pure life, the temptations of worldly desires would have but little effect. We would then live beyond their reach. "The only use we could have for money beyond the present needs, would be to bestow it upon others in destitute circumstances that we meet along our journey. As long as we are in love with earthly things, the good seed sown in our hearts will be choked and become unfruitful. We must let go earth and earthly things, before we can receive the blessings of the Divine Spirit, or have him lead us in the way of righteousness. We do not pretend to say that God has not put many things here for us to enjoy; to brighten our pathway along the journey of life. He has given us the sense of sight, and has placed many beautiful things to gratify that faculty. And we might mention the hearing, and the enjoyment of beautiful sounds, and the loving, tender words of friends, that could not reach us if it were not for the organs of speech; and the many delicious fruits and delicacies to please the palate. All these blessings are from God, and are intended for our use; and we should be thankful for them, and use them without abusing them, for we are required to be temperate in all things. Now we understand all things to mean eating, drinking, wearing, use of money, and everything that he has blessed us with. If we would keep the command to be temperate in all things before us, and live up to it, we would be saved from almost every sinful practice. It was intended that we were to have enough of this world's goods to sustain our mortal bodies; but we are not to live for these things alone. We are placed here to prepare for a better and a purer life—a life beyond the grave; and he has not only given example and precept, but has promised to be with us, and to lead us through, if we trust him. Can we view all these blessings that our heavenly Father has bestowed upon us without feelings of the deepest and most heart-felt gratitude, and the thought coming over us, "Who is like our God, that is merciful, loving, and kind, and will save all that trust in him?"

Great Crossings, Ky.

Expectation in God.

The less we expect from this world the better for us. The less we expect from our fellow-men, whether of spiritual help or inspiring example, the smaller will be our disappointment. He that leans on his own strength, leans on a broken reed. We are always going to do something stronger, purer, and holier. Somewhere in the future there always hangs a golden ideal of higher life that we are going to reach; but as we move on, the dream of better things moves on before also. It is like the child's running over the hill to catch the rainbow which is as far off as ever. Thus does our day-dream of a higher life keep floating away from us, and we are left to realize what frail, unreliable creatures we are, when we rest on expectations of growth and victory over evil in ourselves. Christ alone can give victory.

"There never was a saint yet that grew proud of his fine feathers, but what the Lord plucked them out by and by; there never yet was an angel that had pride in his heart, but that he fell into Gehenna, as Satan and those fallen angels did; and there shall never be a saint who indulges self-deceit, and pride, and self-confidence, but the Lord will spoil his glories, and trample his honors in the mire, and make him cry out yet again 'Lord, have mercy on me, less than the least of all saints, and the very chief of sinners.'"—Spurgeon.

SUBMISSION.

BY CARL SPENCER.

God's right-hand angel, bright and calm—
 Christ's strengthener in the agony—
 Teach us the meaning of that psalm
 Of fullness, only known by thee:
 "Thy will be done!" We sit alone,
 And grief within our hearts grows strong
 With passionate meaning, till thou come,
 And turn it to a song.

Come when the days go heavily,
 Weighed down with burdens hard to bear;
 When joy and hope fall utterly,
 And leave us fronted by despair.
 Come, not with flattering earthly light—
 But with those grand, clear eyes that see
 Beyond the dark, beyond the bright,
 Straight toward eternity.

Teach us to work when work seems vain,
 This is half victory over fate—
 To match ourselves against our pain;
 The rest is done when we can wait.
 Unseal our eyes to see how life
 With bloom this thorny path may be;
 And how it leads to heights of life
 Which only thou canst see.

Content thee—so the angel saith—
 Thy minor makes the triumph strain
 Sound sweeter on celestial breath—
 And God has use for all thy pain.
 His joy thy struggling soul may reach;
 From the strong slain comes sweetness still,
 And God lets suffering only teach
 Some best revelations of His will.

Then strike within our hearts the key!
 Though only sorrow's note it give,
 Yet fit us for thy harmony,
 And teach us how to live!
 O patient Watcher over all!
 If broken lives may best complete
 Thy circle, let our fragments fall
 An offering at thy feet.

Thus Saith the Lord.

[Brother Quinten—Enclosed I send you this letter which I received from C. H. Balsbaugh, and request you to place it before the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN (by his permission). I will not attempt to make any remarks upon it, for I do not feel competent to add anything to the value of it, as it seems to me to be complete within itself, as, indeed, do all of his communications.—CARRIE HOLSINGER.]

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Carrie Holsinger of Carleton, Nebraska.

The Lord is Lord whether on the Throne of the Universe, or incarcerated in a virgin's womb. His silence in His vestal prison is as authoritative as His voice of thunder from the flaming, smoking, quaking peaks of Sinai. The "hiding of His power" reveals His Godhead no less than its manifestation. The most stupendous display of Omnipotence was when "He made Himself of no reputation, but took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men;" thus denuding Himself so completely of all personal evidences of Deity, as to invite not only familiar intercourse, but brutal indignities and an ignominious execution. He was "found in fashion as a man," but never in character and capacity. Every step He took declared His Divinity; for nothing but the restraining power of Divinity kept the world from shaking from pole to pole at His every footfall. But for the exercise of Omnipotence, this globe could not have sustained the weight of His infant form. The great miracle is not that He wrought so many miracles in the sphere of the senses, but that He could contract His Deity within such narrow limits, and walk the earth without encircling Himself with a constant visible blaze of Divine Majesty.

As God reveals Himself in a grain of sand as truly as in a world, so we write our deeper selves on our most unstudied acts. We are the most really in what is spontaneous, and show our proper selves in it, even if it be so insignificant and momentary as never to arrest our consciousness. This fact opens a most serious and instructive chapter in human life. Some time ago I received a letter from a distinguished family in an eastern city, whose attention had been drawn, like yours, by my energetic style of writing. They have all become noted as pulpit orators, authors, and missionaries. Their name is a household word on both sides of the Atlantic. They are opulent, refined, generous, and self-sacrificing for the dissemination of the truth as they conceive it. But that they have not yet learned the first principle of the Christian Religion is evident from the fact that they have a horror of being suspected as sustaining any relation to those of "low estate," save as patrons. I wrote to them on cream-colored wrapping paper, as I mostly do, and enclosed it in a second-hand, patched up envelope. The elite by whom they are surrounded had their attention arrested by the tokens of straitened circumstances indicated by the cobbled, party-colored envelope. They were terribly mortified. They rebuked me sharply, and imperatively demanded better stationery if our correspondence is to continue. Here is a revelation of supreme consequence through an act apparently insignificant.

To-day I write with the assured confidence that I am addressing one who has "not so learned Christ." To take offence from such a cause is to reveal something worse than poverty or obscurity. It shows that in the study of our religious geography, we have omitted Bethlehem, and all the localities with which it is connected in the history of Redemption. Palestine maps out a great moral landscape which the Canaan-bound pilgrim is to traverse. The exodus and journey of the Christian Host are outlined in the topography of the Holy Land. If we are led of God we will see Pi-hahiroth, the Red Sea, Sinai, and Pisgah, and all the Christ-anticipating localities, events, and scenes that line the way from Goshen to Shiloh.

You put high honor on the "Christian Family Companion," exalting it as the instrument employed by the Holy Ghost for your emancipation from the bondage of sin. If your conversion is more than mental; if it involves all the constituents of your moral nature—which I have no reason to doubt—you will never be ashamed to exhibit the sacred "swaddling clothes" as the insignia of your Divine lineage, "This shall be a sign unto you." Luke 2: 12. His Mystical Body is still wrapped in the habiliments of the manger. Christ will ever be the Babe born and the Lamb slain, not only as facts of history, but as ever repeating history. The life of Emmanuel is duplicated in all His followers. Instead of leaving Bethlehem behind Him, He took it up into Himself through every step of His pilgrimage. And by those whose eyes have been anointed with His eye-salve, the Manger is seen on the Cross. To those who are not ashamed to use the swaddling-bands of "the Holy Child Jesus" as their napkin, the poor are sought out, not only as objects of benevolent ministry, but as representatives of the true condition of humanity, and of the humiliation of Jesus for our recovery from moral bankruptcy. To be ashamed of the poor because of their poverty, is a wretched travesty of religion. To deny a member of the household of faith any of the rights and privileges of Christian fellowship on account of descent or color, is to put contempt on the Lord Jesus Christ. To decline the tokens of fraternity with one for whom the Son of God was not ashamed to shed His blood, is to offer insult to the Holy One. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." "THUS SAITH THE LORD." If we refuse fellowship to those whom God accepts, we had better examine our title-deed to the inheritance which is offered on equal terms to black and white. "God is no respecter of persons." "Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss." "The wisdom that is from above is without partiality." "Receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God." "The last shall be first, and the first last." "THUS SAITH THE LORD." To withhold the Divinely-enjoined reciprocities of Brotherhood from those from whom the Head of the Church did not withhold His life, is an egregious domination of the spirit which Christ came into the world to bind and east out. "The disciple is not above his Lord." To shrink from rags and ulcers and deformity and degradation because of disparity in social position, is to wag the head at the Crucified, and to mock the compassion and condescension of God. Even in the Brotherhood are found those who think it no derogation to the Christian character to avow that they would be ashamed to be seen walking the street in company with a servant-girl, or with one the hue of whose skin might awaken suspicion of African pedigree. Such members have surely studied the Divine Atlas amiss. They can point out the "high places" of Israel, where incense is offered to idols, and where a corrupt monotheistic worship is observed; but Bethlehem, Sychar, Gadara, Gethsemane, Golgotha, and the hallowed mountain recesses where the wrestling, pleading, self-forgetting, philanthropic Man of Sorrows was closeted with God, are to them practically erased. To esteem ourselves above conditions which were essential to Christ for our redemption, is to deceive ourselves, to make light of the great salvation, to corrupt the religion of Jesus, and to shake hands with Antichrist and kiss "the mother of harlots." God condescends, but He does not compromise. He is flexible within the limits of Righteousness, but contravenes not one iota of Essential Law. There is room in Him for the play of Mercy, but none for the infringement of Truth and Right. In Christ the utmost elasticity of His nature has been brought out. Whoever expects that God will yield still further is trusting to a lie. He has bent and bowed and humbled Himself to our woful lot till His Heart-strings snapped, and Divine-human blood stained His footstool. Will we ask still more? Having purchased us at such fearful cost, and now offers us His great Sacrifice as the one condition of reconciliation, have we the hardihood to taunt Him with petitions for pardon on other terms? Will we presume to approach Him as dictators, and not as guilty, wrathing suppliants? And yet just this is done times without number. Millions are hourly crowding to the Mercy-seat for audience, who scorn baptism, and feetwashing, and the holy kiss, and Christian simplicity in dress, as they would their appearance in the sanctuary in a state of nudity. They think of these Divine Institutions only with derision. To save them in their hostility to the ordinations of Grace, Christ would have to descend again from Heaven, not to the Cross but to perdition; not to redeem from sin, but to become "the minister of sin." When God the Almighty and All-merciful has reached His limits, and man is still dissatisfied, still clamors for a salvation which is no salvation, what is there left for such but the consequences of their self-originated religion—Sin, self-concentration, everlasting bondage, the wrath of God, and "the blackness of darkness forever." WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?

The Sure Foundation again.

BY E. K. BUECHLY.

In the Companion and Visitor Vol. 2, page 690, appears an essay from our worthy brother D. P. Saylor, headed, "The Sure Foundation." In said essay the brother made use of the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th verses of the third chapter of Paul's letter to the church at Corinth. I, as a reader of the Companion, requested the writer, through the Companion, to give an exposition of the 15th verse of the same chapter. The request was made in the Companion, No. 49, page 779 (1875), in the following words: "Not intending to criticize, or comment upon its merits or demerits, yet I am safe to say, that I am but expressing the feelings of numerous brethren and sisters, to ask our worthy brother D. P. Saylor to give us an exposition, on the 15th verse of the chapter by him designated. We think the brother's essay is incomplete until such exposition is made. We shall look for it." In PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN No. 1, page 13, we see brother Saylor's reply; and by the expressions used, and the stress put upon some of my expressions, by the brother, I am led to conclude, that he took my request rather as an affront. I am sorry if such is the case. I can say of a truth that I had not intended to hurt or wound the feelings of any one. Should there be any cause for injured feelings in said request, I would ask the brother to pardon me, and to attribute it to the weakness of my head, and not to my heart, as I had meant no harm by it.

The brother says, "Who the We are I am not informed, but am much inclined to think the We are only I, as I am in receipt of several letters from brethren, who are fully competent to judge, who have very highly commended that essay." My dear brethren and sisters, you that are familiar with my simple style of writing and talking, very well know that I am not in the habit of applying the personal pronoun We when speaking of myself only. Let this then be understood, once for all. I thought I should have been understood when I said "We" that I had reference to the "numerous brethren and sisters" referred to above. But to make it still plainer, I meant to say that myself and others were thinking that the brother's essay was incomplete without the exposition asked for; and I now say that we still feel so notwithstanding the laudatory letters received from those, "who are fully competent to judge." That the brother may excuse my audacity. I cite him to brother J. Holsopple's criticism on his essay, in C. F. C. & G. V. No. 47, page 737 (1875).

Again the brother says, "I will, however, tell Bro. Beuchly and We, the reason I did not drag the verse referred to into the essay; which was simply because it was not pertinent to the subject." I shall leave this with the brother why the verse was not pertinent to his subject. Had the apostle Paul thought as brother Saylor thinks, I presume the 15th verse, would never have appeared in the Epistle. But thus it is, we do not all think alike. I, in my weakness, think that the verse alluded to is the very key to the five preceding verses; yet I may not be one of those "who are fully competent to judge."

In conclusion, dear brother Daniel, I will undertake to ask you another question: Would it not be more consistent with our Christian profession to manifest a little more Brotherly kindness and Christian forbearance towards each other? Such are my feelings, and with the assisting grace of God, I shall try and do so.

Intemperance.

BY CARRIE HOLSINGER.

INTEMPERANCE! Oh, the heart-rending groans, and heart-breaking sighs; the weeping and wailing of widows and orphans; the groans and cries, of thousands of murdered innocents; the blasphemy, the soul-revolting oaths, the numerous crimes, and outrageous sins, the memory of which are brought so vividly to our minds by that one dreadful word—INTEMPERANCE!

I do not intend to treat upon this subject in all its different details (for we may be intemperate in many different things), but I only mean to use my feeble pen, or throw in my "mite," against the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks. "Look not upon the wine when it is red, neither seek mixed wine." Ob that all mankind could but realize the full meaning of these words of holy writ! for, alas! I fear there are many who are led into the use of ardent spirits, by first just "looking upon the wine." For instance, if a moral young man gets into the habit of "dropping in" at some fashionable saloon to spend his leisure moments by "reading the news," perhaps, or by listening to the conversation of different individuals, not having the least idea that by so doing he would be led into a bad habit; ere he is aware of it his attention is attracted to those persons who are in the habit of daily assembling themselves there for the purpose of "drinking wine," "playing cards," &c. (For it appears that drinking intoxicating liquors and "card playing" are generally pretty closely connected.) These persons would, of course, invite him to join in their games, and also to drink with them. He perhaps will hesitate and refuse, at first, but he will go there again, and soon he will find himself arguing in his own mind, "If these men enjoy themselves so well it will certainly do no harm for me to drink a 'little,' a glass or so each day;" and so, by degrees, he allows himself to be finally drawn into the vortex of drunkenness. Alas, alas, for that young man who yields to the temptation of the first glass! for in most cases it leads to dram-drinking, and if not checked entirely, to habitual drunkenness, and often to a drunkard's grave at last. What a dismal end for a human being's life!

"What are his hopes beyond the grave?
How stands that dark account?"

For if in his life here he spent most of his time staggering around the streets, unable to stand erect or to keep out of the ditch, if there chance to be one near, (not having the use of half of his senses)—more fit such such a plight as this, for a brute, than that of an intelligent human being—I say, if he spends his life in this way, how then shall he be able to "stand" in that "great and notable day of the Lord?" How truly can we say, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." I will cite you to one case, that of elder J. V. Beekman, of the Christian church, who resigned his office of pastor. In his address at the time of his resignation he made some remarks which I think all who are in the habit of taking a glass of wine or beer occasionally, would do well to remember. He says, "Twelve years ago, when I reached forth my inexperienced hand and took the intoxicating cup, I thought I was strong; but I developed a habit that now holds me in chains, and in the most awful slavery that humanity was ever subjected to;" and again he says, "Profit, oh! profit by my example. See what it has done for me. There was a time when I stood as fair as any minister of the church in Illinois. There was a time when I had as bright prospects, and as cheering hopes for the future, as any of my classmates; but now they are all gone because of intemperance! Oh that I could bring the whole world to hear my warning voice!" Is he not one of the thousands of living witnesses to the last quotation of Scripture? for if he had been wise, and not trusted to his own strength, and had shunned entirely the intoxicating cup, he would not have been deceived thereby. What a sad confession is his! Surely, "at last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

How very sad to think that there are many professing Christians who will often say, "Oh, I think there is no harm in drinking a little wine or beer," and will even quote a certain passage of Scripture for proof. I would say, Shame upon you who profess Christianity, and quote the Holy Scriptures in defense of such a hell-deserving evil as that of intemperance. Brethren and sisters, I do not mean to speak of other professing Christians exclusively, for I must say (and with a sad heart), that I fear there are some among the Brethren who are not as strictly temperate as they should be, and who, I fear, will sometimes quote that certain passage of Scripture, which I have just alluded to, and which is so often quoted by regular dram-drinkers, namely, "Use a little wine," &c. O my sister or brother, or whoever you may be, methinks the very "enemy" of your soul rejoices to hear you quote Scripture in defense of his beloved cause—INTEMPERANCE! The reason that Paul recommended wine was no doubt because he knew it to be somewhat strengthening or stimulating, for a time, and for a greater reason, because in those days, they did not enjoy such great medical discoveries as we do nowadays, nor did they have such learned and experienced physicians as we have at this day and age of the world. It may be necessary, in extreme cases, to use a little wine, or alcohol, for medical purposes, but I think and pray that the time will soon come, when our scientific men will make the blessed discovery that there is virtue enough in the herbs and roots which the Almighty has supplied us with to heal all manner of diseases, so that intoxicating liquors might be banished from the face of the earth forever, so that not any kind need to be used, excepting wine at the holy Eucharist; for I must say, with sorrow, that I think there are some who sadly pervert the word of God by using water instead of wine, when we are so plainly told by Christ himself what we shall use. Luke 22: 18, Matth. 20: 29, Mark 14: 22. When I say that I fear that some of the brethren and sisters are not as temperate as they should be, I have reference to a custom that some have of treating their company with cider or wine, perhaps. I always have refused even cider on such occasions, and always expect to. They may call me unsocial or ridiculous or anything they please, for I act thus not to be odd but from principle; for we are told in Holy Writ, "to shun all appearance of evil," and I think that indulging in such useless drinks has an appearance of one of the greatest of evils. I think that it is on such occasions (visiting or social gatherings), that a great many of the young acquire a taste for drinking strong drinks; therefore I think it very wrong for any to keep such drinks in their houses, even if some of the higher do say that they are perfectly harmless. But as my article is growing too lengthy, I will abandon the subject, hoping to hear often from much abler pens than my own; for I think that the subject of intemperance cannot be written upon too often.

"Then shun, oh, shun, the enchanted cup,
Though now its draught like joy appears,
Ere long it will be fanned by sighs,
And sadly mixed with blood and tears."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

A Letter to the Rev. Mr. Simons,
Pastor of Ev. Lutheran (German),
Indiana, Pa.,

SIR:—I had the honor to be present last Sabbath at No. 2, and to hear your sermon on baptism; also your remarks after the sermon including your invitation to the audience, encouraging questions, if any presented themselves.

I for one felt like asking some questions, but time seemed to forbid, and so I think I would pass it by. But since others of the audience, as well as myself, seemed to think that you did not prove your points as well as the importance of the subject seems to demand, and as they referred to me, I hope you will pardon me for intruding on your time and patience.

The first point to which I will call your attention is the position you took in regard to the SUBJECT for baptism. You admit that faith is a prerequisite, and then assert that infants may believe. As proof you cite us to Matth. 18. Now, you must admit that the child referred to had the power of volition and execution. It is true Matthew says "little child." Well, so John (1st Epistle chap. 2), writes to little children. Your attempt did not make it clear that Matthew's "little child" was an infant. And even admitting it to have been an infant, that does not prove that it was baptized.

You say the object of the ordinance is "unto the remission of your sins;" and to the question: "Who shall be admitted to the ordinance?" You say the Scriptures answer very plainly; and for the command you refer us to the commission—"Teaching all nations," and call attention to Acts: 1. Teaching. 2. Baptizing. You say "Nations" includes children; but you admit that they should be taught in the first place. Then with wonderful inconsistency you say that baptizing is the most important part of discipling or teaching. Please bear this in mind that nations may be engaged in war and children (infants) not know it; or, if you please, how and to what extent do you obey? Do you baptize all nations? Do you baptize all your neighbors? or is there some limit to the command, and where is the limit recorded?

Your remarks on the word multitudes stand on the same authority as those on nations, and susceptible of the same criticisms—only there is no command in that case.

You admit that no case of infant baptism is clearly recorded in the Bible; but you say it is almost impossible to conceive of a household without infants—the household baptisms recorded are sufficient authority for infant baptism. Now in all conscience did not this assertion seem to you like begging the question? Do you not know that one half of the families on the direct road from No. 2 to Indiana are entirely composed of adult persons? and that more than half of the families from the same place to Greenville are of like character? So that indubitable testimony is against you on this question.

With much pomposity you lay down the challenge, "Prove that a child does not believe, and I will prove that it is damned," and for proof refer to Mark 16: 16. Now does not the substance of faith depend on a preached gospel? What is the gospel to infants? Is it not the hope of resurrection? or is it the command to receive church ordinances? If the latter, why not admit them to the communion since they cannot have life without. You admit that baptism is not positively necessary to salvation but that it is for the remission of sins. What sins? This you will undoubtedly make plain in your next sermon. Please give us one Bible instance in which a person is baptized without indubitable evidence of faith, predicated on testimony. But you invent the office of Sponsor. Now where is your Bible authority for that? Are you not afraid of the denunciations of the Revelator? Going into the kingdom by proxy is exceedingly uncertain.

You say church history testifies that in the second and third centuries infants were baptized; and that some even in those days had the audacity to condemn the act. As you did not refer us to the book, page, and section where this item of history is recorded, we labor under inconvenience. It might be interesting, and even profitable, to know who baptized the infants, and also who objected. As you make no attempt to trace infant baptism beyond the second century, and as you admit it cannot be positively proved by the Bible, you must labor under great inconvenience, and charity would seem to indicate that I should not press the case so closely; but the importance of the subject demands that you give us the first undoubted case of infant baptism with the character of the administrator, the avowed object or reason why it was done, as well as the character, name, and motive of objectors, with their reasons. It is fair that you should do so. Please do not leave the people in the dark.

You ask: "Does the validity of baptism depend upon the form?"—Mode you mean—you answer: "It does not;" "baptizo leaves the mode optional." "Baptizo" you say, "means application of water and Spirit—there can be no baptism without water." Please tell, was there water used in the Holy Ghost baptism on the day of Pentecost?

Again, you define the term baptizo, "Immerse, sprinkle, pour." You say it is a Greek term. Did it not occur to you that it might be interesting for the audience to know how the Greeks understood it—how they baptized? Here is a nation and I have no objections to have them consulted on the subject. Please tell us what mode the Greeks use in administering the ordinance in question.

You say there are cases of baptism upon record in which immersion is impossible, and give as an instance Holy Ghost and fire baptism. Now as you have not told us what fire baptism is, we are left for once to the light of revelation without your exposition; and when we read Matth. 3: 9—11, our minds are very forcibly impressed with the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, and that suggests immersion very strikingly; and when the subject is considered in the light of Acts 1: 5, it does not seem so very irreverent after all.

Again you say, "The Holy Spirit rested on the disciples." Read Acts 2: 2—4, then answer the questions; what "sat on" the disciples? What "filled the house?" Was there no immersion?

You say in the directions given to the children of Israel in Egypt concerning the use of the blood at the passover the word "Baptize" is used in the command to sprinkle. Please tell us what language did Moses use in writing the book of Exodus.

You now take us to the baptism of the Israelites "in the cloud and in the sea. You say, "They went through the sea dry," and yet you say "by the dew, which came from heaven, they were baptized; that is, by the drops of rain from the cloud above them." Please read the record. Where was the cloud? Was it not behind the Israelites hiding them from the view of the Egyptians, and vice versa, so that they should not anymore desire to go back into bondage as they had just shortly before expressed a desire to do, and thus effectually covered in by the clouds and the sea? So that Paul might well say baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.

As the benefits derived from baptism according to your promise will become more apparent when you deliver your promised sermon on "Original Sin," I shall not analyze that portion of your discourse till then; meanwhile let us all think.

Yours
JOSEPH HOLSOPEL.

WHAT a difficult thing it would be to sit down and try to enumerate the different influences by which our lives have been affected—influences of other lives, of art, of nature, of place and circumstances—of beautiful sights passing before our eyes, or painful ones; seasons following in their course—hills rising on our horizons—scenes of ruin and desolation—crowded thorough-fares—sounds in our ears, jarring or harmonious—the voices of friends, calling, warning, encouraging—of preachers preaching—of people in the street below, complaining and asking our pity!

The worth of a state, in the long run, is the worth of the individuals composing it.

For The Young.

The Lesson of the Brook.

"What are you babbling to yourself about?" said a youth to a brook, as he threw himself panting on its back, for he had just come away from the cricket-field.

"I am talking of all I have done to-day, and all I have yet to do," replied the brook.

"Done! you do nothing but run and play; what do you do?"

"I haven't time to talk with you here; the miller is waiting for me. But if you will meet me below your grandfather's mill at the stepping stones, I shall be able to tell you there; for then I shall not be in a hurry.

Saying which, the brook sped singing by, and the youth rose and walked lazily across the fields to the stepping-stones. Here, there was an old beach-tree and some willows, with a great swing under one of them. It was a charming spot; no wonder the brook liked to loiter there. The youth waited only a few minutes for the stream, which came racing down from the mill in considerable excitement, but soon composed itself.

"You think I am an idle do-nothing, like yourself?" began the brook. "I wonder if you cannot see that I do more work in a day than any man in the village. But idle people are never ready to acknowledge that any one is industrious."

"You turn the mill, I know; but that's quite as much fun as work; what more you do, I can't tell."

"Yes, I turn the mill, and so give you your bread and butter. As to the rest—listen: In the first place, I run for more than a mile in the valleys of Chestnut Hills."

"Why, do you come from away off there?"

"Yes. My course, in all, is six or seven miles; and, though back in the hills I am narrow and small, I water the roots of hundreds of trees, and give drink to flocks of birds and animals that would perish without me. All those green elms along those valleys send down their long roots to me to get nourishment, and I have never failed them since they were sapplings, which is, at least, a hundred years ago."

"A hundred years! are you so old?" interrupted the youth.

"Yes, and twice that, and I do not know how much older; and I have been making my life useful ever since I was a little rill. But do not interrupt me so often; I shall have to leave you soon. After I leave the hills, I flow into the Farmer Goff's meadow, and there I am useful to men and cattle all day long. The cows stand in my channel for hours in the shade, while I wash their feet and limbs, and I like very well to see their great, quiet brown eyes looking down at me. Once a year, I am obliged to wash the sheep, which is not so pleasant a task; for they care very little for me. I supply the farmer's table with trout, and every week do all his people's washing. Meanwhile, you know, I keep the meadow green, and in the spring I am able to spread out into broad fertilizing sheet, really imposing and beautiful. In old times, the children and I used to have great sport in that meadow, but that has passed long since; there have been no children there for forty years. For, though I am always at work, I enjoy every moment of my life. When am I not singing, or when do I refuse to smile on the children?"

"But I hasten from the meadow to do my duty at the cross roads. There I afford refreshment to travelers and their weary horses at all seasons, the year round. We streams do not hush ourselves into useless sleep eight hours out of every twenty-four, as you mortals do; night or day is equally time for work. After crossing the ford, I answer similar purposes to the next five or six farmers; and without me, I wonder what would become of them? Then I wind round the meeting house hill, and by the school house; whether I do any good there no one knows better than yourself. Let me assure you, my young friend, though you think me only a gay prattler, I am of that degree of importance that, had I stayed at ease up in my fountain in Chestnut Hills (which would have been the pleasantest place to stay in), this whole village would never have existed here."

"Indeed!" said the youth, who, by this time had become convinced that the brook was worthy of great respect, and had ceased to interrupt it.

"Next I enter the village and cross it in three different places: first, at the old bridge, where many a traveler has been cheered by my voice, and many a school-boy taken an accidental bath at the country road; and at Dibble's bridge where you love to go a-fishing when you play truant. Ah, I could make many a boy wince if I chose to tell tales! At length I enter your grandfather's farm, where Noisy Brook joins me to help me in my great work—the turning of the mill, I have first to fill my pond, and that is an affair of time. I could tell you stories about that pond all day, if I had leisure. I remember when your grandfather, and his father before him, used to skate on my frozen surface, on winter nights, with half the boys and men in the village; for while they counted me frozen to death, far beneath I was always wide awake and stirring, and through the clear ice could plainly see the gleaming of their fires and hear their shouts and merriment. The girls used to slide round after the boys, holding fast to their coats, though they knew they were sure to be overthrown in the middle of the pond. Of all merry scenes, this was the merriest. Nowadays the boys have no such fun.

"A hundred years I have turned this mill," continued the stream; "fed three generations of men and women; and I love its old red walls. Once well past the mill, I have a little time to enjoy myself here, and to join the children in their sport. Rare fun they have always had here. I remember when there were two great sweeping elms, and when painted British men built their wicker huts and held councils on this very spot, and children ran and frolicked about these banks. Everything changes around me, grows old, and passeth away."

"But you do not grow old or pass away; isn't this strange?"

"No not strange; there is my fountain back in the hills; that is a living fountain, fed by an ever-living God, whose will I gladly do. But I have lingered too long; the tide is waiting for me. Try and profit by me—you are idle, or, if you work, you complain; I work and am happy!" With which the brook ran by and paid no further heed to the youth, who called for it to stay and answer his questions, for he thought of many now; but the only answer was the constant, cheerful murmur, "Work, work; make your banks green; make your place flourish about you; be faithful, and never complain." —Sel.

Picking up the Minutes.

A Sabbath-school scholar earned a new suit of clothes, shoes and all, by digging dandelions and selling them to the dealers in herbs.

"When did you find time, Johnny?" I asked, for besides being a very punctual and constant scholar at the day school, he ran errands for Mrs. Davis. "When did you find time?"

"There is almost always time for what we are bent upon," said Johnny. "You see, pick up the minutes, and they are excellent picking."

GREAT minds are charitable to their bitterest enemies, and can sympathize with the feelings of their fellow-creatures. It is only the narrow-minded who makes no allowance for the faults of others.

"WHAT DOST THOU WORK?"

The question heading this article is recorded in the 6th chapter of John's Gospel, 30th verse. It was propounded to our Savior by interested, yet doubting persons. They had previously asked, "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" The answer was, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Of course they understood that he had reference to himself; and they manifested, at least, some degree of willingness to believe on him. But while they seemed to be willing to believe, they could not do so without satisfactory evidence, and the testimony they demanded was works—works that would confirm his claims. They had probably heard of his miracles; perhaps some of them had witnessed his feeding of about five thousand with "five barley loaves and two small fishes," which mira-acle had been wrought on the preceding day on the opposite side of the sea; yet they wanted more testimony. They were not willing to accept his claims unless they were supported by something more tangible—something that they could see; hence the question, "What sign showest thou then, that we may see and believe? what dost thou work?"

Did the Lord reprove them for asking this question? Did he intimate that it was wrong in them to demand that he should support his claims by his works? No; he who had said, "By their fruits ye shall know them," was willing to be tried by the same law. In fact it was for this very purpose that his mighty works were performed. When John, his fore-runner, sent two of his disciples to Jesus with the question, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" he said to them, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." He did not say to them, "Yes; go and tell John to console himself—that I am he that should come; that he need not look for another." He was willing and desirous that their faith and that of his harbingers should rest on his works and not on his claims.

On another occasion, when in Jerusalem, in his controversy with the Jews he said, "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though you believe not me, believe the works; that ye may know and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him." (John x. 37, 38.) And on the night of his betrayal he said to his disciples, in reference to those who rejected him, "If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin; but but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father." (John xv. 24.) From an examination of these sayings of our Lord, it is evident that he did neither ask nor expect that people should believe on him merely upon his word or claims, but if he gave them tangible evidence, if he performed the works which were foretold of the Messiah, they must believe or stand convicted and condemned.

It is not necessary for us here to enumerate the works which Jesus performed; for almost every little boy or girl is familiar with many of them; and our readers, we trust, neither doubt the works nor the truth of his claims and character attested by them. We will rather apply the question to ourselves and endeavor to make some practical improvement of it.

You profess to be a believer in and a follower of Christ. You claim to be a child of God, an heir of heaven, a joint-heir with the Lord Jesus Christ. You have espoused the name of Christian, and you want your friends and neighbors to regard you as such. This is a good profession; but did it ever occur to you that the world has a perfect right to meet you with the question, "What sign showest thou, then, that we may believe thee? what dost thou work?" Whether it has occurred to you or not, it is a legitimate question, and your neighbors and friends will make up their minds, not according to your profession, but according to the sign you show—according to your works.

Are you willing to be judged by your works? Do not try to evade this question by saying that we are not justified by works, that we are saved by grace. This can by no means justify you in living indifferently, carelessly, or in disobedience. Do you not know that while no one is justified by the deeds of the law, the simple reason is that no one fully keeps the law in all its requirements? If it is true that we are not justified by our good works, it is equally true that sinners are condemned because of their wicked works. Paul, in his letter to the churches in Galatia, enumerates the "works of the flesh" as follows: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." (Chap. v. 12-19.) Here is a long catalogue of works, either of which, if not repented of, will debar the fleshly worker from entering into the kingdom of God. What will your profession avail you, if you are governed by the lusts of the flesh? What will it avail you to claim to be a child of God, so long as you have any earthly idol? What will your claims to holiness amount to, so long as your life shows that your heart is full of envy, strife, hatred and murder? In short, what will any profession, however high and holy, benefit you, so long as your works deny your claims? Stop, then, and answer the question, "What dost thou work?"

Do you not remember that Christ said, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven?" Again he said, "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, shall be likened unto a wise man, * * * and he that doeth them not shall be likened unto a foolish man." Are you doing the will of God? If not, you have no promise of admission into the kingdom of heaven. You have heard what Christ has enjoined upon his disciples. Do you observe his injunctions? If not, his word pronounces you foolish, notwithstanding your claims to wisdom. The important question is, not merely what do you claim or profess, but "what dost thou work?" It is necessary to make a good profession; and when you make this profession, see to it that your good works correspond with it.

You must have faith; for without faith you cannot please God. "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" "For as the body without the spirit is dead so faith without works is dead also." "What dost thou work."

It is a good thing to hope in Christ.—Without this blessed hope you must be miserable. But John says, "He that hath this hope in Him (Christ), purifieth himself, even as He is pure." How reasonable this is! Could a man hope to be saved by him, and to live and reign with him, without being pure? But this purification is not wrought without effort—without work; and hence, if you profess to have hope in Christ, the question still meets you—"What dost thou work?"

You profess to love God. This is right. To love God with all your being is the first and great commandment; but Jesus taught, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Vain will be your persistent and loud declarations that you love God, that you love your Savior, that you love your brother, that you love your neighbor and fellow-man, if your conduct does not bear testimony to the validity of your claims. Whatever good thing you profess, the question everywhere comes forward, "What dost thou work?"

You think you have an interest in the immortal welfare of your fellow-beings; you think you want the gospel to be preached to every creature. This is all right, for you cannot be a Christian unless these feelings are deeply impressed on or imbedded in your heart. What are you doing to show to the world or to satisfy your own consciousness, that your feelings are sincere? How deep can you get your hands into your pockets, and your fingers into your purse, to help carry on the all-important work? There is a call to send missionaries to Denmark.—You rejoice in the movement. You have an abundance of the good things of this life, and claim to have a foretaste of the blissful over yonder. You contribute your "mite," as you say, to help to save souls in Denmark. "What dost thou work?" You work your liberality up to such a pitch that you give fifty cents or a dollar for this great purpose. Let your contribution speak for you, and what does it say? Simply this, "I feel such a deep interest in the spreading of the gospel and in the salvation of souls, that I freely give fifty cents or a dollar to accomplish so great a work." If that is your "widow's mite," it will be accepted with the Lord's commendation; but if you are abundantly able to give more, it will not speak so well for you.

Not only from Denmark, but from almost every quarter, nook, and corner of our own blessed land, the calls are coming up for the word of salvation; and we have hundreds of ministers who might and would respond to these calls, if only their hands were loosed. We have thousands of members and millions of money, and yet our ministers must hear these calls, while they are compelled to drive their oxen or shove their planes. This will never, never do. There must be an awakening—there must be greater effort made—there must be more work done, or there will be a fearful account and a dreadful condemnation. "WHAT DOST THOU WORK?"

Gleanings and Gittings.

BRO. Henry Troxel, of Oakley, Macon county, Ill., says:

Hearing so many calls from the far west for spiritual food, I much desire to respond to some of the calls; yet the first thing is, I must sell my property. I notice an article in No. 44, last volume, of brethren who have from seven to ten thousand dollars in bank. I wish to say to the brethren, Come and help us. Take some of the money you have in bank and buy my land. I offer it very low. It is in a healthy country and a prosperous church with six speakers. Any one wishing to know more about the farm will address Henry Troxel, Oakley, Macon county, Ills."

There are several points in the above that are worthy of notice. The first thought that will be suggested to a good many readers is that this is a good and cheap way of advertising a farm. This must be granted; but it is not to be presumed that our brother intended to take any advantage of the "printer" in sending in the above notice. We even suppose that if this notice should secure a purchaser, he would send us a mite for the service. But there is another point worthy of consideration, and we will briefly call attention to it. There are many calls for preaching, as we all know. And it seems, too, that we are all desirous that the call should be filled. We are all anxious that the good work should go on. But there is some difference of opinion as to the best way of doing the work. Some are in favor of sending out missionaries, bearing their expenses, and giving them whatever support they might need. Others think it best for our ministers to migrate into those sections where the calls are made, settle down, and work and preach as aforesaid. Both of these plans have their advantages, and no doubt either would be better than neither or none. If a church or a number of churches, or a member or several members should send out a missionary to preach the gospel and establish churches, we presume no one would object. So none will object to our brethren's moving into the frontiers and preaching the gospel, and building up and taking care of churches. Here, then, is a chance for those who favor this method, to help brother Troxel to carry out his wishes. And there are many others who would be willing to do the same. If this is the better way let the matter not be overlooked: our faith should be exhibited by our works. B.

BROTHER J. S. Flory in writing from Greeley, Colorado, under date of Feb. 6th, says:

"We had some few days days cool, blustery weather in the latter part of January. Since then the weather is delightful. Owing to scarcity of money, times are dull here. Produce is low in price, owing to the large crop raised here the past year. Large quantities of corn, flour and wheat are being shipped from here.—There is yet much of the corn crop to be husked. It looks as though the sower would overtake the reaper."

MARRIAGE AND DEATH NOTICES.—We have several times asked our correspondents to make obituary notices as short as possible; and with but few exceptions there is marked improvement. Let them be short; as the purpose is more particularly to give notice of the fact to friends, and not to publish biographies of the deceased.

One more request: Do not send notices of either marriages or deaths so long after they have taken place that probably all who have any special interest in them have already learned the facts. We must be a little restrictive. B.

SISTER C. Wolf says: "We have a little church here in South Keokuk, Iowa. We are very much cheered up. Elder John Thomas was here a week with us and had sixteen meetings. I believe that the Lord was with us and him. There were two added to the church by baptism, and I think there were some more that were almost persuaded to say, "I will arise and go to my father." The Brethren have started a prayer-meeting. I never was at a Brethren's prayer meeting till this winter. I think they will do some good here. There are a great many young people who come to our meetings. I hope we may all be built up in the good cause of Christ through our meetings here in this part of God's moral vineyard."

BRO. Daniel Wysong has changed his address from Milford, Ind., to Nappanee, Elkhart Co., Ind.

FRIEND G. H. Knopp, Painter's Mill, W. Va., Feb. 6th, says:

"I am sorry to note that I have not heard a sermon delivered by any of the Brethren since last spring. The last preaching I heard was by John Fitzgerald, at the Valley River church, in Barbour county. Why not organize a band of Brethren here? This is a good territory, and I think the Brethren could organize a church, as the people here seem to be in favor of building a church. I wish some of the ministering Brethren would come and preach for us. Will not some of the Brethren take the duty on themselves to come and preach. Ministers who want to get good farms cheap, on good terms, should come to Preston county, W. Va. We need them now if we ever did. Good land can be bought for from $3 to $5 per acre. Times are hard here now, but better times are looked for soon. Grain is scarce on account of the wet weather last summer, which spoiled the wheat and other small grain."

BROTHER Jacob Beeghly, of Markleysburgh, Pa., Feb. 8th, says :

"I will send you a little church news. Nov. 5th, 1875, brethren Jacob M. Thomas, Solomon Bucklew, and John L. Hook commenced a series of meetings in the Boyer school house, in Preston county, W. Va., which continued seven days.—They baptized two. Then they went to the Union meeting-house, same county, where they commenced on Saturday night, and continued until Thursday night.—During this meeting five were added to the church by baptism, and three reclaimed. Then near the Salem meeting-house, in the same county, three were baptized last winter and three this summer, and one reclaimed.

Also, at Markleysburgh, Fayette county, Pa., on the last Saturday of January we had a church meeting to settle some difficulties, which were, like a dark cloud, hanging over the church, which the Lord removed with his all-powerful word and Spirit, and by the help of his faithful servants, elders Jacob M. Thomas, Solomon Bucklew, and Michael J. Thomas, and the prayers of the church that the Sun of Righteousness might shine brighter here now than for many years. Brother Bucklew preached in the evening after church meeting, and on Sunday forenoon and night, and on Monday at half past ten o'clock. After this meeting ten were received by baptism. The meetings were continued day and night until Saturday. During the meeting at this place 22 were baptized, and 5 were reclaimed. Brother Bucklew was the principal speaker during the meeting. There was a large attendance, both of members and spectators; and may God bless them for their good order during the meeting."

MANUSCRIPT BOX.—We have looked at ours and wondered! Yes, we wondered what to do with all that pile of paper. No doubt, some of our contributors have wondered, too. They would like to know what has become of their manuscript.—In our next we will tell you what we aim to do. B.

On the 1st inst. brother Jesse Calvert arrived safely at his home, after an absence of five weeks, during which time he attended sixty-four meetings. He reports sixty-two additions by baptism.

We learn that sister Hope is convalescent. They expect, the Lord willing, to start for Europe on the 29th inst. May the blessings of Heaven attend them.

We have received contributions from a few who are not yet on the list; and also from a few others who gave directions for sending the papers for which they paid. We now call attention to the following proposition from a correspondent :

The fourth No. is on hand, and I see that there are many poor who desire to have the paper. We know that you cannot furnish all, and we feel like aiding you in this good work. We do not want it to consume your business, by any means. We have a proposition that I had written out some time ago, as follows: I give one dollar and a half for the poor; and if you could report two hundred as doing the same (which would be a small matter), I then would give three dollars more to start with three hundred. Will you try it? It seems that there might be that many found who would respond out of six thousand. It would surely be starting a good work. I am sure that some have remembered the poor; others, some of their friends. This I found out as I was soliciting subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. When I think of the labors of our brethren, and of our corresponding brethren, who seem to feel so much interest in the work of the Lord, and all for a future reward, I feel, as I wish we could all feel, like having the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN visit every family in our fraternity and outside. If this were the case, there would be many made to ponder, and think that probably they would better take heed to the good counsel given by many of our able corresponding brethren. We will still try to have your paper visit a few more families. The Danish fund is now pretty nearly three hundred dollars. Now, brethren, let us see what can be done in this direction. There are many poor who would read the paper with much interest; besides much good might be done by still smaller amounts, as already reported. The brethren in Annual Council desired that the publication of tracts might be encouraged. Would not this be a move in that direction?

Correspondent paid $1.50 as seen in the list above, and we have put him down as No. 1. Sister H. E. is numbered 2. We purpose to follow this plan, to keep an account of those who pay $1.50 into the Poor Fund. In order to give all an equal chance, when any one sends in $1.50, though it should be by sending part at different times, he will at once be counted among the number. As soon as 200 will be reached, Correspondent will, no doubt, come with his $3.00 to head the list of 300 names of the same amount.

OUR sister whom we styled brother a few weeks ago writes again as follows :

We felt so deeply in reading the contributions for the poor members in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, No. 4. How have we read our Bibles, wherein we can read very plainly our duty concerning the poor? "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Yes; rich we are, being joint-heirs with Jesus the Son of God. Oh, how can we, who possess the true riches of Christ, refuse a dollar to send the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to those hungering for it? It is written, "He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor; his righteousness remaineth forever.—There is a blessing attendant on the benevolent Christian. The Lord Jesus said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let us remember the poor.—We enclose fifty cents for the poor fund, knowing your sympathy for the poor; would love to help you in your benevolent work. Your fellow-traveler toward our heavenly home.

SARAH R. WELLS.

BRO. Samuel Murray, Huntington, Indiana, writes :

"We commenced a meeting on the 7th of January and closed on the 9th. We were made to feel that the Lord was with us. We had very large congregations and good attention. Brethren Davis Younce, and Stephen Bashor, assisted us in our meeting. The result was that we had the pleasure of leading 21 young persons into the stream to be immersed "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." May the Lord help them to be faithful until death, is my prayer."

FOR want of space in the proper department, we here announce that the District Meeting of Northern Kansas, Southern Nebraska, and Colorado is to be held on the 28th of May next, in the Falls City church, near Falls City, Richardson county, Nebraska.

BRETHREN'S ENCYCLOPEDIA.—We have still some calls for this work; and, as we lose money on every copy ordered through us, we wish our brethren who desire to have it would order it directly from brother Kurtz. You will see his advertisement in another column.

ALMANACS FOR 1876.—We have several times requested our patrons to order no more Almanacs for 1876, but still they continue to come. We cannot fill the orders. It would, however, be a favor if those who have sent money for almanacs and have not received them, would now tell us what to do with their money. We can return it, or send tracts, or place it to the poor fund. What do you say?

To C. H. Balsaugh.

In No. 3 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN I find an article signed by C. H. Balsaugh, in the which I find the following language: "Satan is a mighty Sampson, and has filled his fiery abyss with countless holocausts of immortal souls." That he is a "mighty Sampson," I admit, going about like "a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour;" but in regard to his having "filled his fiery abyss with countless holocausts of immortal souls," I would like to ask brother Balsaugh a few questions.

1. What part of the Bible do you get your information from?

2. If this be the case, who are those that John the Revelator saw (Rev. xx. 12)? "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which was the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works." This judgment, I understand, takes place about a thousand years after the first resurrection, or, at what is called the second resurrection; and those that Satan has already in his fiery abyss, must have been judged and condemned at some previous judgment day that I know nothing of.

3. Is it reasonable that those deceived by Satan should be cast into the fiery abyss, or lake of fire, before he himself is put there, which does not take place till after the thousand years of Christ's reign, according to Rev. xx. 10?

Please answer these questions through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

J. C. PECK.

VIRIDEN, Ill., Feb. 7, 1876.

Dear Brother:

Inasmuch as church news is read with interest I give a little from Otter Creek church, Macoupin county, Ills.

Brethren Martin Meyers and Samuel J. Peck from Carroll county, Ill., visited our church. They arrived here on Jan. 29th, and had their first meeting on the same day, Saturday, at 11 o'clock; and we continued day and night for one week, and two more night meetings, Saturday and Sunday nights. They had sixteen meetings in all, and all at the Pleasant Hill meeting house. Eleven persons got the consent of their minds to come out on the Lord's side, and were baptized in the pool near by the meeting-house, after taking the ice off the water. Two were baptized on Monday, four on Wednesday and after that some every meeting until Friday night. Four were baptized in the night, after night meetings, it being the request of the applicants; having moonlight and four inches of snow on the ground, made it quite light. When the meeting commenced it was not expected to continue so long as it did; but the interest manifested in the meeting, and also on Wednesday night after service had commenced old brother John Metzgar unexpectedly walked into the meeting-house and took his seat behind the table, and stayed with us until Friday evening. He then took the train for Bond county, Ill. Brethren Myers and Peck left the same day in the morning; but before the old brethren left they advised the brethren to continue the meeting a little longer yet, feeling satisfied that there were some more about ready to come, which proved to be so, and three were baptized after they left. Our own ministers filled the last three meetings, except that brother Abraham Leer assisted on Saturday night.—The meetings were well attended considering the rough roads and cold weather most of the time. I hope that the good counsel of the old brethren who visited us will be long remembered, and the church be benefited thereby.

JOHN NEHER.

From Sandy Church, Stark and Columbus Counties, Ohio.

Brother Quinter:—

As church news is desired, I will try to furnish you with some for your columns.

We had a series of meetings, commencing on New Year's day, at Freeburg, Stark county, Ohio. Brother Jesse Calvert, from Indiana, and P. J. Brown, from Wayne county, Ohio, had five meetings, and there were eight precious souls added to the church.

On the evening of the 3d, brother Calvert came to Reading, where he had meeting in the forenoon and evening until Monday, the 10th. Twenty-four were baptized at this place.

Brother Calvert then returned to Freeburg until Friday forenoon, and baptized thirteen more. Brother Brown had left on Sunday, the 9th.

Since the brethren left us six more have been added to the church. This made fifty-one in this year. Five were added last summer, and four at Bristolville, making an aggregate of sixty within a year. May the good Lord bless the brethren for their labor of love, and may they go on in the good cause, and preach to saints and sinners, and may the good Lord grant his blessing upon all those that started in the good cause, and enable us, the shepherds, to watch over those tender lambs, that Satan may not scatter them from the flock.

Dear brethren and sisters, may the good Lord guide us, that we may not deviate from the narrow path, which leads to life and glory, so that when death meets us we may be prepared to meet God in peace, and be with our Savior, and enjoy his presence forever. Let us deny ourselves a little more from the sinful pleasures of this world, so that we may not be wanting when death meets us.

Yours in the bonds of love and peace,
LEWIS GLASS.

The First American Bible.

Dear Editors:—Having in my possession the following scrap of history, which I think is too valuable to be lost to our brotherhood, I will therefore make a copy of it for each of our periodicals for publication, for reasons which I will give below.

"Dr. Joseph Murray, of Carlisle, Pa., recently read an essay on the First American Edition of the Bible, before the Philadelphia Antiquarian Society. He said: "Although it was in the year 1497 that our country had been discovered to England by Cabot, under Henry VII., yet the first permanent colony did not arrive until 1670 on the east coast of Virginia—the very year in which our version of the Bible was commenced in the mother country. In 1620 the sturdy and virtuous Pilgrim Fathers, having their English Bibles with them, reached their New England homes. And during almost the entire reign of eight sovereigns in succession the sacred volume had been uniformly imported. During all that time not a man or family possessed a Bible—not a copy had been read or heard read that had not been brought across the Atlantic. True, the printing press had been set up in our land as early as 1639, and though other books were printed, yet the early settlers could not print the English Bible without being subject to a prosecution from those in England and Scotland who published it by a patent from the crown cum privilegio, as did the University of Oxford and Cambridge. Nor did the mother country—guilty of such restrictions or monopoly—ever grant this permission to her colonized children, until at last it was wrested from her. So that the first Bible in English with an American imprint was not published till more than 160 years after the arrival of the Mayflower. In 1664 the Rev. John Eliot had printed at Cambridge, Massachusetts, the Bible in the language of the Native Indians. This was the first Bible printed, but not being in the English language, a patent, cum privilegio, was not required. In 1748 Christopher Sauer, or Sower, at Germantown, Pa., published the first German edition of the Bible, after having been three years in press.—But it was not until about 170 years after the first English colony had been planted in America (at Jamestown, Va., 1607), that the Bible in the English language was printed. During this long period, as stated, the colonists were dependent upon the press of the old country for their supply of the sacred Scriptures.—After Independence had been declared, however, such was the scarcity of Bibles that Dr. Allison, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, and others, memorialized Congress upon the subject, and that body, in 1777, appointed a committee to confer with printers, with the view of having published 30,000 copies at the expense of Congress, to be reimbursed by the sale of the books.—(Journal, September 11, 1777.) The difficulty of obtaining type and paper induced the committee to recommend to Congress to direct the Committee on Commerce to import, at the national expense, 20,000 English Bibles from Holland, Scotland, or elsewhere, and Congress ordered the importation. But afterward, when the unsettled state of the country and its commerce prevented the execution of this order, Congress resumed the subject of printing, which was referred to a committee of three, in which the Rev. George Duffield, of the Presbyterian church, and the Rev. William White, of the Episcopal, chaplains of Congress, assisted. And the first American edition of the Bible, in the English language was printed in 1771–2 in small duodecimo form and breviter type."

My object in having this scrap of history published in the brethren's periodicals is to preserve it from oblivion by circulating it throughout our beloved brotherhood. At this age of the church but few of her members, and, perhaps, none outside of her, know that this Christopher Sauer, or Sower, who by his private means and enterprise, published the first American edition of the Bible in the German language, was one of the early or first preachers in the German Baptist Brethren church when organized in America. And this he accomplished 24 years before the Bible was published in the English language by national aid.

The cost and labor to publish the Bible in the German language certainly is equal to that of publishing one in the English; yet to accomplish the latter, the nation must be solicited to aid; while one dear old brother, unnoticed, unappreciated by a scoffing world which gloried in calling him tanker, dipper, meekly lays his hand to his press and prints and publishes one himself. Brethren, what a scene there will be when eternity will reveal all things! The brethren who are crying for the order of the old brethren, and yet are doing all in their power to lock the wheels of the press among us, by opposing the publication of papers, books, tracts, &c., will please make a mark here and ponder well. Brother Sauer is and was one of the old brethren. He printed and published the first German Bible in America; he also published a paper, almanacs, and I don't know what all. How many Bibles have the Brethren published since then? Will the opposers of our press answer?

A Full Report of Proceedings of A. M.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I have just read the Proceedings of our last year's Annual Meeting. I found the subject of a "full report with the speakers' names," and the strong demand for the same, and also the opposition raised against it. I cannot understand who it is that a few brethren will take upon themselves the responsibility to oppose the wishes of many, in something that is not a point of doctrine: it is merely for the satisfaction of those that cannot go to the A. M.; and even many of those that do go are crowded out, that they cannot hear and understand what is said and done. If our publishers are willing to publish the proceedings and give us a full report in pamphlet form, and sell it to those that want it, why not let them do so? In this way our periodicals would not be taken up with it, and those that do not want a report need not have it, and still could read our papers, like at other times. In this way both parties could be gratified, and would manifest more brotherly love, and a spirit of kindness toward those of limited means who cannot afford to spend money and time to go hundreds of miles, and then run the risk of being ordered back so that they cannot hear and understand what a few are doing. If it were a doctrinal point I would say, let the Bible decide it. But as the Bible does not tell us how we shall let our absent members know what our brethren are doing at our A. M., I think any way that gives the most general satisfaction is the way we should take.

One brother says, "There is not one word on record to show that there were any reporters at Jerusalem, when the question was brought there about circumcision," and says further, "We are not on safe ground." With equal propriety I would say, that there is not a word on record to show that they had a Standing committee, and a moderator and clerk, much less a printing press. But these are all things that we make use of for our convenience, and are not opposed to the gospel, and we have nothing to say against them. I merely mention them to show that such reasoning will not hold out.

Moreover, that was a subject of great importance touching the keeping of the law of Moses, which was now superseded by the gospel and ready to vanish away. Ours is a request to have a full report of what our brethren are doing. We want them to give us either Scripture or reason for what they are doing. So they did at Jerusalem. To say that it ought not to be published to the world is not good logic, when the business is done with all the arguments openly and publicly before many thousands of people, both Jews and Gentiles, saints and sinners, and then withhold it from our absent members. To say the least, it does not look well, and it has the tendency to weaken the confidence and good feeling which we would like to have and could have, to our brethren if we could see that they are trying to give those that are absent all that they reasonably can. If this plan of having a full report was adopted once, so that we could depend on it, then a great many of those that never take a part in transacting the business would stay at home, and by so doing diminish the expense and lessen the crowd, so that those who do the business could do it more in decency and good order; and not as I once saw at one of our Annual Meetings, in the case of an old, gray-headed Elder, who had passed three score and ten years, and had borne the burden and the heat of the day. He was now pressed down with old age and his hearing was impaired. He wanted to get near to where the business was done. When he came in the seats that were within hearing distance were all filled to their utmost capacity. The old brother stood in between the seats, leaning against a post, and would fain have stood there as long as his legs would have been able to bear him, but he was ordered to sit down.—The old brother said he could not, as the seats were all full. He was ordered away the second time. The next day he tried it again, but fared no better, and had to go back where he could not hear or understand what was going on. The old brother's feeling can be better imagined than described. He did not attend the next Annual Meeting. He is in favor of a full report.

I was not at the last Annual Meeting, but read the proceedings as they are given; and I think those that wish to see a change ought not to be idle, but try to have the change brought about.

BELOVED EDITOR, and readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:—

My wife and I have read the C. F. C. & G. V., with its welcome messages and long and tedious title, during the last year, with much interest. Weakness and want of activity has prevented me from contributing to its reading matter, but I desire, with God's help, to contribute a mite to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Though we were formally members of the Amish Mennonite church, of which my wife is yet a member, I have for several years had some acquaintance with the principles and faith of the Brethren church, and at times a strong desire to unite with them. My acquaintance with the brotherhood is yet limited, though I feel intimately acquainted with many of the brethren by their communing with me through the columns of the paper.—While I cannot see them face to face, each sentence, as I read it, brings to my mind a portion of the image of the inward man of the contributor—some shining brightly with faith and hope, some beaming with love and kindness, some all aglow with godly zeal for the precious cause of Christ, and (shall I say?) some solitary ones interspersed between good, sound doctrine, that bear an image neither lovely nor desirable, and are neither edifying nor necessary, and cause me to think of the language of James, "Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be." Every evil thought harbored for a moment in the heart, leaves an impression that can only be removed by him who cleanseth us from all sin. One sentence of sound doctrine or good sentiment, one word of wholesome reproof or correction, given in love, may be the means of glorious accomplishments. Whenever the virtue of these is marred by unkind and unedifying expressions, it is a kindness on the part of the editor, and an honor to Christ, to remove the dross. We cannot overestimate the worth of brotherly kindness and love for every creature of humanity. If we strive for the truth without charity, we strive without God's blessing and without reward. It is an old theme and often repeated, but it is sustained in every chapter of the gospel, and is placed by the Son of God above all others, both by word and deed.

While it is a Christian duty to point out each others' errors, it is still better to "confess" our "faults one to another, and to pray one for another, that" we "may be healed." James v. 16.

We are pleased with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, and hope the correspondents and contributors will continue to have all the reading matter seasoned with kindness, to have no "death in the pot" to offend a single soul that might be won to the "one faith." The editor is doing his part well, and we bid him God speed.

C. F. DETWEILER.

HARLEYSVILLE, Pa., Feb. 8, 1876.

Dear Brother Quinter:

A few weeks ago we had a season of refreshing—a series of very good meetings. First came brother Christian Hope on his way to Denmark; but on account of the sickness of his wife, himself and family have been detained in Norris-town. They are among the brethren there. But before brother Hope was through with his appointments, brother Stein came also. They had preaching at Indian Creek, Hatfield, Norris-town, and Philadelphia. The meetings were all interesting; generally a large attendance and powerful preaching. The members have been revived, warmed up and edified. Sinners have had convictions, though they seem so drunken with the pleasure of sin; we nevertheless expect to see some fruit from their labors.

Yours in love,

JAS. Y. HECKLER.

A Solemn Thought.

It is almost one year since I, in company with one of our ministers, went to see a young woman who had taken very ill. She had sent for the minister to come to see her. When we got to the place she lay altogether helpless, and more than this, could not speak. It had been her request to be taken into the church. What could be done? There lay a precious soul just on the brink of eternity, and not at peace with God. We repeat again, what could we do? We prayed with her, and committed her into the hands of a just God to do as seemeth him good. She had been a bad character, and had spent her time, her youthful days, in gratifying the lusts of the flesh. Now the time comes when she thinks she will have to pass over the Jordan of death; and she is made to cry, "I am unprepared to meet my God in peace!"

Dear reader, how is it with you? If you were to be stricken down as was this young woman, are you prepared to meet your God in peace? If you are not, do not delay one hour. Death is in the land, and he is no respecter of persons. He is taking the young as well as the old. You have no lease of your lives. To day you may be in good health—in the vigor of life—to-morrow time may be with you no longer. These are solemn thoughts, and we entreat of you to not put off the salvation of the soul till a dying hour, when the stern, grim realities of the future world come looming up before you. God is inviting you through his ministers, and by his word, to come unto him and live. And "the Spirit and the bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that thirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

Beloved Brother Quinter:

As church news is always interesting to us, we will send a few lines from our arm. We have received two by baptism since our Lovefeast, and have hopes of more soon. We have had seasons of refreshing recently. During the holidays brethren Philip A. Moore and James R. Gish held a series of meetings in our new church, which we enjoyed more than on former occasions, as we now have a comfortable place for worship. The brethren earnestly labored in their calling, and we think good impressions were left with many. Brother D. Stoner also came to their assistance. Brethren Stoner and Moore and wife visited us at our own house, which we very much enjoyed. They left us good encouragement, for which we are thankful. During the time of their stay we had church meeting. We held an election for two deacons. The lot fell on brethren Samuel Stutzman and John N. Snavely, both worthy of the position they occupy.

On the 20th of January brethren Martin Myers and Samuel Peck paid us a like visit of love, and remained until the 24th. They preached five sermons, with much zeal and earnestness, to mostly small but attentive congregations. The attendance was small on account of bad roads and much rain. Again good impressions were left, and we hope good results will soon follow. These brethren also visited us at our home, which made us very happy. We so much appreciate such visits. They left us very instructive lessons, which we will never forget, but will try to profit thereby. These brethren do not represent true followers of Christ alone in their preaching, but in manners, in clothing, and in every action; all correspond so nicely. How very thankful we are to such brethren for their visits of love and their many good instructions. May our good Father's choicest blessings accompany our dear brethren for their recompense, is our sincere wish; and may we retain their good advice and many lessons and feed thereon, and grow in grace and love. And may we also try to imitate the good example they brought and left with us, instead of imitating worldly things; for we are safe in following men so far as they follow Christ; but we are in great danger when we follow any of the foolishness of the world.

Your unworthy sister,
REBECCA SNAVELY.

To Brother D. P. Snyler:

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have read "Be ye Holy" with much interest, and believe your remarks on the "corner" are well said, and in good place. I have determined, for my part, to discard papal decrees and to try and honor God in my body and spirit. To whatever extent the "Law" was abrogated in Christ, it appears to me that we have no right to render a semblance of obedience to the papal hierarchy; and why the Brethren are so tenacious in sticking to the papal decree of clipping and shaving I do not know, unless it is because they are not aware of its origin; so please show it up. Your application of the law of the priest will be strange to many, and is perhaps a little strong; it will undoubtedly meet opposition; but it has stirred up my mind in reference to a similar subject.

The children of Israel were expressly forbidden to marry persons who had no connection with the church, and this doctrine was carried to such an extent that when they did so they were peremptorily commanded to put them away—even after they had children by such marriage—or suffer the displeasure of God. Now, it appears to me that Paul wished this principle to apply to the Christian church, to some extent at least. See 1 Cor., vii. 12-15, 39. The difference appears to be that when one of the parties is converted to Christ after marriage, it (the conversion) shall be no cause for separation. But a man or woman being in Christ seems to have no right to form an alliance with an unbeliever. 11 Cor., vi. 14, 15, and 1 Cor., vii. 39. Let us have your views on this subject.

Fraternally, G. B. REPLOGLE.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Lost Creek church, Miami county, Ohio, JAMES WEATHERHEAD, on the 5th of February, 1876, aged 83 years. He was a faithful member of the Church of the Brethren 50 years. He leaves a widow and children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. Funeral services from Heb. x. 35, by the writer and Isaac Studebaker. H. D. DAVY.

In the Swan Creek church, O., Feb. 2d, 1876, brother HENRY SPIDER, aged 81 years, 10 months and 22 days. He enlisted under the banner of King Emanuel over fifty years ago, and continued to be a consistent and faithful soldier of the cross and a deacon in the church. He was confined to his bed for over two years, but at last, to his joy and our sorrow, he closed his eyes to this world with a smile upon his face, as much as to say, "Now, Lord, let thy servant depart in peace; for my eyes have seen and ears heard that my eight remaining children are all enrolled, and are faithful members on the way to Zion." He emigrated from Pennsylvania to Ohio many years ago. His companion and our sister left us a few years ago for regions above. He leaves 8 grown children, 64 grandchildren and 41 great-grandchildren. Funeral improved by the writer, assisted by brethren A. Stutzman and A. Berkeybile, from Heb. i. 8. May he long be remembered as a father, a brother and a pilgrim.

R. K. BERKEYBILE.

In the State Centre church, Iowa, Jan. 10th, 1876, MARY E. WOODBRIDGE, infant daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Woodbridge, aged 1 year and 3 months. Funeral occasion improved by D. E. Brubaker and others.

He was able to perform scarcely any labor for the last six months, and within the last ten days of his death he took the lung fever. Funeral occasion improved by Mr. Signer (a Lutheran pastor) and brother Jos. Arnold, from 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. Friend Arnold was a member and Secretary of the Lutheran church, in the village of Brandt. He leaves a sorrowing widow (a sister, and daughter of brother John and sister Isabel Detrick, of Logan county, Ohio), and one little son, 4 years old, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father, who was in the community a good neighbor. H. H. ARNOLD.

Dec. 25th, in the Ephraim church, Lancaster county, Pa., sister AMANDA SMICK, wife of brother Henry C. Shirk, and daughter of brother and sister R. Kunkle, aged 26 years and 24 days. ## AUNT POLLY'S ADVICE.

If things go wrong in the household,
(As they often will you know),
Or you're worried out with cares that vex,
And the children try you so;
Don't sit in the vale of shadows,
Or stoop to be a scold;
It will only make bad worse, you see,
While you grow gray and old.

I know how things will bother,
When work seems mountain high,
And the adding of a feather's weight
Makes you feel as if you'd die;
And then perhaps your husband
Says something quite unkind,
(He has his worries, too, poor man),
So pray, thou, never mind.

A sharp retort is best unsaid,
Though censure's hard to bear;
But John may think you're most to blame
If you his spirit share.
Then keep your temper, gentle Nell,
Just do the best you can;
And bye and-bye God will unfold
The secret of his plan.

I've had my troubles, too, dear Nell,
And many and many a day,
If the Lord had not been with me,
I'd have faltered by the way.
Then let Faith fold her brooding wing
O'er all your doubts and fears,
And God will give thee needed strength
For all the coming years.

More Anti-footwashing Ideas Examined.

BY M. M. ESHELMAN.

We have learned from the fruitful mind of the editor of the A. C. Review, that "Peter persisted, not against footwashing, but against the Lord's washing his feet." Peter persisted against the Lord's washing feet! Did he not therefore persist against footwashing? But happily Peter was more easily converted in this case than the editor of the Review.

The A. C. Review does not give all the testimony of Jesus on this important subject. Jesus said more than "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet." He also said: "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you."

John xiii. 13—15. "Special language, applied to a special case, and not to a general law," is it? Let us look at it right carefully.

To the same persons, in the same place and on the same night, King Jesus said: "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John xiv. 2, 3. King Jesus said this to and for the apostles only, did he? "Special language, applied to a special case, and not to a general law," is it? Preparing a place for the apostles only! Will come again, and receive unto himself the apostles only! According to the Review such is and will be the case.

To the same persons, in the same place, and on the same night, Jesus, the Lawgiver, said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." "Special language," is it? Christ the vine, and only the apostles the branches! Salvation for the apostles only! What universal salvation that is! If salvation was for the apostles only, why is the editor of the Review making efforts to reach eternal bliss? Can he tell?

"This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Luke xxiii. 19, 20. Said this to and for the apostles only, did he? Body broken for the apostles only! Redemption for the apostles only! What wonderful light the Review's logic sheds all around!

Just how the Review, and those of like faith, found out that "ye" and "you" in John xiii. 13—15 mean the apostles only, and elsewhere in "the word of truth" they mean all the followers of Christ, is more than they are able to tell. To the A. C. Review John xiii. 1—17 is "special language, applied to a special case," simply because it wants it so, not because it is so. The words and actions of King Jesus in the matter of footwashing are one thing, and the words and actions of the editor of the A. C. Review are another thing. King Jesus taught and practiced footwashing, while the editor of the Review does not teach and practice footwashing. There is no similarity at all between the two doctrines. Any man with the most limited education can see that there is not a particle of resemblance between the foot-washing of King Jesus, and the foot-washing (?) of the Review editor. But we will hear the Review again.

"Among the nobility the order 'was for the servants to wash the feet of the lords, kings, and nobles. The Lord took occasion, when the time came, and their feet needed washing, to teach them 'a lesson of humility.'"

How much easier it is for the learned editor of the Review to tell what "the order of the nobility was" than to tell us what the plain letter of God's word says. What has the order of the nobility in Christ's time got to do with the saints' washing "one another's feet"? Not anything. Who said that Christ washed his disciples' feet because they "needed washing"? Did Christ? Did an apostle? Not at all! The Review says "their feet needed washing," but the word of the Lord don't say so. It says, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit;" and again, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet." But hear the learned editor again.

"If washing the saint's feet had been a religious rite connected with the communion, how could Paul have omitted it when giving 'that which he received of the Lord?' See 1 Cor. xi. 20—34. He says: 'I received of the Lord that which I delivered you.' He then proceeded to tell us what it was. See 1 Cor. xi. 23—35. This was instituted on the same night in which the Lord was betrayed. The occasion of foot-washing (John xiii. 1—10) was not on the same night in which the Lord was betrayed; but before the feast of the passover. The feast of the passover was over before the communion was instituted."

We have carefully looked at 1 Cor. xi; looked at the whole of it, and remember quite well that Paul, in the second verse, says, "Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you." "Ordinances" he says he delivered to them, but not ordinance. It is not at all likely that Paul would say he delivered to them "the ordinances" if he had delivered an ordinance only. The fact of the matter is, the Corinthian brethren were in disorder in reference to the Lord's Supper, and in setting them right in this matter he took occasion to remind them of the emblems of redemption. Once right in the matter of the Lord's Supper, they would, no doubt, attend to the other ordinances in their proper order.

But there is one thing that Paul plainly reminds the Corinthians of, and that is, "Greet one another with an holy kiss," 2 Cor. xiii. 12. Does the editor of the Review attend to this injunction of Paul? Or is it not necessary because "there is no evidence in any early writing" of any such practice among the saints? Can the editor of the Review tell why he does not obey this command?

We agree that the communion was instituted "on the same night in which the Lord was betrayed." But we do not agree that "the feast of the passover was over before the communion was instituted." The record does not say that the passover was over when Christ instituted the communion. Since John gives a complete account of the supper, feet-washing, betrayal, the going out of Christ and the apostles, and King Jesus' apprehension, we will present his testimony.

John xiii. 1—15 teaches us of the supper and feet-washing. In these not a word is said about any one going out of the room. Verses 18, 19, 20 contain the words of Jesus: but not a word about going out. Verses 21—30 contain an account of the finding out of Judas. Nothing said about any one going out of the room in which they ate supper and washed feet. Verse 31 tells of Judas' going out, not Jesus and the faithful apostles. The remainder of the chapter contains the words of Jesus and Peter, yet not a word about going out.

Chapters xiv, xv, xvi, xvii, contain the comforting words of King Jesus to his disciples, which were delivered in the same place and on the same night in which he washed the disciples' feet. In all these chapters, not a word is said about Christ and his disciples going out. Nothing could be said about going out for they had not yet gone out.

Chapter xviii 1. "When Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples." "When Jesus had spoken these words,"—the sermon in the house where he washed the disciples' feet,—"he went forth." The record does not say that Jesus washed his disciples' feet at Bethany, then went to Jerusalem, delivered this comforting address to his disciples, and then "went forth with his disciples over the brook." Or did he speak "these words," remain in the room two days, and then go "forth with his disciples?" The record does not say so.

Verse 3. "Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons." This was on the same night in which Jesus washed his disciples' feet; and since it is agreed that he instituted the communion on "the same night in which he was betrayed," it follows that he instituted feet-washing at the same time and place.

"Judas then" does not mean that he was two days' hunting a band of men. The record of King Jesus plainly teaches that Christ instituted the supper, feet-washing, and communion at the same place and time. The record says nothing about the "two days" of the A. C. Review. They are of its own creation; originated in the heart of disobedience.

The apostle carefully notes the incidents of Christ's apprehension, arraignment before Pontius Pilate, and faithfully adds that the Jews "themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the passover." "If the feast of the passover, or passover, (which are one and the same thing,) was already eaten, why talk about remaining outside the judgment hall "that they might eat the passover?"

The Holy Spirit, no doubt, seeing that man would cavil about feet-washing, put in these words to strengthen the arms of the children of God. But the Review once more. "We have never witnessed anything "of the kind, but we have been "informed repeatedly that where "they practiced this ceremony now "they only wash one foot of each "person."

The editor of the Review has not been once informed that those who practice this ordinance "only wash one foot of each person," but he has been "repeatedly informed," and this "repeatedly informed" has made him believe it. It will thus be seen that he is trying to teach his readers something about a thing he knows nothing. His knowledge about the manner in which the disciples of Christ wash each other's feet in the nineteenth century is about as meager as his practical knowledge of feet-washing. We know no better way for him to become practically acquainted with this humility ordinance than to gird himself with a towel, pour water into a basin and wash his brethren's feet. When he will do this in the presence of his brethren and the world then we shall have some assurance that he knows something about the work of the Lord in this matter. It is just as easy for a sprinkler to know all about practical immersion as for the editor of the Review to know all about feet-washing when he does not practice it. For his and his readers' benefit, we will say that the disciples of Christ wash "one another's feet," not one another's "foot."

The editor says he has "no prejudice against feet-washing, or any thing else, if it can be shown that the Lord requires it." The best way to convince mankind that he has "no prejudice against feet-washing" is to believe the record of King Jesus. If the record does not show that the Lord requires it, and did require it, what can man do to show it? The record is enough, and more than enough is of no account to a Christian. Does the editor believe the record? Let him answer.

But it is not our province to prove that the record of King Jesus teaches feet-washing. We all know it does. Therefore it remains for those who do not believe the record to prove that the record does not teach feet washing. And this is just where the difficulty comes in. It is not questioned whether feet-washing is taught by King Jesus. We all know it is in the record. The difficulty arises from the theory that it is not necessary. This is where the whole difficulty comes in. For the consideration of the editor of the A. C. Review, and all other non-essential theorists, we present the following points to prove by the Bible:

1. Prove that Christ did not wash his disciples' feet.
2. Prove that the words "ye" and "you" in John xiii, 12—16 mean the apostles only, while in John xiv, 2, 3, 14, 15, and Luke xxii. 19, 20 they mean the apostles and all others who believe on Jesus.
3. Prove that it is necessary to have the writings of the successors of the apostles in order to believe Jesus.
4. Prove that there is not sufficient in John xiii to make us believers in Christ's ordinance—feet-washing.
5. Prove that Christ washed the disciples' feet because they "needed washing."

GREAT minds, like heaven, are pleased in doing good, though the ungrateful subjects of their favors are barren in return.

PACKAGE NO. 5.

When we first began to prepare seed for our seed-basket, we resolved that the first seed of each package should be for the benefit of the unconverted—a seed dropped into the heart of sinners, which, if God would bless, might bring forth fruit unto life eternal. We have no seed of that kind ready for package. No five, but we will send one infinitely better than any we could prepare—one directly from the lips of Jesus: "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Matth. 11: 28, 29. Please read, in connection with this, Luke 14 from the 15th to the 25th verse, which will give you an idea of what will befall those that refuse this gracious invitation.

We have wondered whether some of those persons that are counseling brother Balsbaugh to make a martyr of himself—"to write himself to death," have not some kind of a talent wrapped up in a napkin and laid away for safe keeping. They demand that he shall expend the wealth of his intellect, to the last degree, for their benefit and the cause they love, while they, perhaps, never thought that their services are needed in some other way, in which they can serve, equally as much as his. Wonder whether some of them have expended their talents of gold and silver in the cause of missions, and other good works, in and out of the church, as lavishly as he has his talent of composition, for the good of the church and the world. Are we so exceedingly disinterested as to desire that he alone shall bear the words of commendation: "thou good and faithful servant?" We hope he may hear them in all the fullness of their meaning, and we have written these lines in hope that we may be thereby moved to greater diligence ourselves. We shall be glad if God will impose no further "limitations" on brother Balsbaugh: for we enjoy his writings much, and believe that his silent ministry has done more good than he can ever know in this life.

It would be interesting to know what is the most pleasing idea each Christian entertains of heaven. They would, no doubt, be very different according to each one's temperament, trials, temptations and sufferings. How pleasing to some must be the thought that there all tears shall be wiped away, that in heaven there will be no sorrow nor pain. To one that is obliged to labor hard day by day the idea of rest is sweet, and such Scriptures as these are often in his mind: "There the weary are at rest." "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." The blind picture to themselves the light of the heavenly world. Perhaps their most pleasing thought is that there they shall see. Some that have a strong sense of the beautiful may imagine their greatest enjoyment will be in beholding the beauties of the upper world. And another who loves music thinks of the song of the angels and the music of the golden harps. But we suppose the happiest thought most Christians have of heaven is that there they shall meet their Saviour and be ever with him, and shall be able to praise him as they desire, without hindrance from the flesh, that:

"Then in a nobler, sweeter song They'll sing his power to save."

This seems to be the best sentiment, and perhaps it is the best Christians that have it. Whatever may be our mental image of heaven the fruition of each one will be complete. In heaven we shall be entirely freed from the power of sin. Our remaining corruptions shall no more wound our Saviour nor trouble our own souls. There O my soul thou shalt be delivered from "this body of death," and not only from the "old man of sin" shalt thou be delivered but also from this weak suffering tabernacle of clay, which so hinders thee in the service of God, for thou shalt have a spiritual body, if so be that God in mercy, and for His Son's sake, shall keep thee faithful unto death.

"O to be free, heart-free
From all that checks the right endeavor here!
To drop the weariness, the pain, the fear."

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

"One Day at the Discussion" at Pipe Creek Church, Miami Co., Ind.

Editors Primitive Christian:

The first day of the discussion between Eld. Walker, of the church commonly known as Disciples, and Eld. R. H. Miller, of the church of the Brethren, is over. The people convened at the appointed time (10. A. M.), arrangements were made to commence the discussion, by Eld. Walker selecting Rev. Robertson, of the church of the Disciples, from Kokomo, to act as his moderator, and Eld. Miller's selecting J. G. Royer, of the church of the Brethren, from Monticello, to act as moderator for him, and these two selected Mr. Miles, not a member of either of the above named churches, as president moderator.

The board of moderators having been chosen, and other preliminary arrangements completed, the meeting adjourned until 12: 30 P. M., when the people were called to order, by moderator Robertson, and opened by prayer by Rev. Martz, (Disciple), from Logansport, after which the following Proposition was read:—"The teaching and practice of the people commonly known as Disciples, upon the subject of baptism is strictly scriptural."

Eld. WALKER, Affirmant.
Eld. MILLER, Negative.

The disputants entered upon their work with the very best of feelings, and a commendable zeal; the affirmative endeavoring to sustain his position, by saying that "baptize," or baptizo meant the same as immersion, and represented a specific work—a singular action—"one baptism," (Eph. 4: 5), and that it was the teachings of the Scriptures, and therefore made the teaching and practice of his church scriptural. The negative met the position assumed by the affirmative, by saying that baptizo meant the same as dipping, and may represent one thing but properly represents a continuance—a repetition of the action, as, jumping, striking; but that Paul (Eph. 4: 5) was not discussing the number of actions in any baptism; neither did he have the different baptisms, such as sprinkling, single immersion and triple immersion, before his mind; for these different baptisms did not then exist; therefore he made use of the noun baptisma representing the ordinance itself, and not the action word. Therefore "one baptism," as used by Paul (Eph. 4: 5), does not prove one action, or immersion, but one ordinance, without reference to the number of actions. I do not have time now to comment further upon the day's work, but if desirable will let the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, hear more of it hereafter.

Fraternally yours,
J. G. R.

PAUL speaks of prayer. But let us not confuse ourselves. There is the church prayer, the lecture room prayer, the household prayer, the prayer of the closet. These are the accidents of prayer; of great value, the formal expression of a hungry and believing heart. The real prayer is that which lies behind all forms: the uplifting of the heart, the continually outstretched hand, the hourly confession and constant trust, the perpetual laying hold of God.

IT IS WELL WITH THE CHILD.

Yes, it is well, though fast the tears are falling,
And sobs of anguish rend the breast,
We know it was the Savior gently enling,
"Come to my bosom, little one, and rest."
So it is well.

God loved our little child, and took his infant spirit
Up to our own all glorious home,
To dwell with angels, and their bliss inherit,
For Jesus said, "Let little children come."
And all is well.

His love is stronger than our cold affection,
However well we think we love,
And better far than ours his sure protection;
Better than mansions here his house above.
Then all is well.

In that safe fold no pain or want molesting,
Secure from childhood's wild alarms,
Forever blest, our precious lamb is resting
Sweetly in the Good Shepherd's loving arms.
Yes, it is well.

Those little feet would here be often weary,
And led astray into the paths of sin,
Shadowed too oft by clouds and tempests dreary,
Might fail, at last the victor's crown to win.
Ah, it is well.

Now, early saved from life's stern care and duty,
From time's assaults and death's dark fear,
Our darling lives, to grow in angel beauty,
And taste fresh bliss with every added year.
Yes, yes, 't is well.

Father, be pitiful, grant resignation;
In this weak hour be thou our stay;
Forgive our human grief, bring consolation,
And give us strength and courage while we say,
Lord, it is well.

Let us not murmur, though our heart-strings quiver
With pangs of bitter pain,
But meekly wait till soon, "beyond the river,"
We fondly clasp our angel child again,
And know 't is well.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Eden and Paradise.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

The word Eden signifies "pleasure or delight." The word Paradise signifies "the best, the most beautiful land; a pleasure garden." From what is written in the Bible, we must certainly conclude that the term Eden is the name of a place. Without noticing the history of opinion that is in the world concerning Eden, I will attempt to present my own views which I gather from the reading of the Bible. Knowing that we are all fallible, I beg the reader to prove all things and hold fast that which is good, or Bible truth.

From the nature of God, as well as his word, I draw the inference that all the works of God were pleasing and delightful; not only to God who formed them, but also to man whom he created in his own image. In this sense the whole earth was Eden. From the language, "be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it," I draw the inference that God designed that man should finally be found in all parts of the newly created earth; but it could not be otherwise than that God should place man on some particular spot where this grand work might have its beginning. Moses, the inspired writer, accommodated his writings to these circumstances, and specially refers to that part of the earth where God deemed it best to place man when he created him.

From what I can gather from the Bible, I conclude that the term Eden primarily had reference to the land on both sides of Jordan which was afterwards possessed by the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. That this was anciently a very productive and beautiful land, I need not stop to prove. Before it was cursed,—and some other things that I will notice in their proper place,—it was truly Eden, or pleasing and delightful. In the best, or most beautiful part of this land,—which was in the eastern part, the pleasure garden which God had planted,—God put man whom he had formed. From what has been said above, the thoughtful reader will already conclude that I would place ancient Paradise, or the garden which God planted, where the Dead, or Salt Sea now is and its vicinity.

It is true that God drove man out of this garden and placed there the cherubim and a flaming sword to protect the tree of life; but it is more than probable that God removed the tree of life, and abolished the garden, if not before, at least at the time of the flood. The Psalmist in referring to Divine Providence says, "God turneth a fruitful land into barrenness,—or saltness, as the marginal reading has it,—for the wickedness of them that dwell therein." It is admitted that the Salt Sea marks the place where the wicked Sodomites once dwelt; and Moses more than intimates that it was once a fruitful land. He declares that "it was well watered everywhere, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord." Whether the Jordan is the river that went out of Eden, I do not pretend to say, but it looks reasonable. If that land is no more watered as it was before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, it is evident that a marvelous change must have taken place, and therefore, we need not expect to find the river still parting into four heads, but with the land they become bar-ren and sink into the doom of Sodom and Gomorrah. Peter informs us that, God, in "turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly." Paul refers to the winding up of this state of things in language as follows: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Peter in referring to the above says that "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The promise referred to is recorded by Isaiah in language as follows: "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." John the Revelator had a revelation of this new state of things. He says, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea." Christ says, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

From the above, as well as from many other passages of similar import, it does appear that the present earth will be cleansed from all moral and natural deformities, and after being renewed and refined, it will become the endless abode of all the immortal saints. Of the new earth it is said, "there was no more sea." The Salt Sea and the sterility of the adjacent land will all be destroyed; for, "for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." Paul carries the subject on still further, and says "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." The church of God is resembled to a garden "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." So God removed the garden of the Lord from Eden, lost before he destroyed the world by water; and he will remove his church before he will renew and refine it, that is the world,—by cleansing it of all moral and natural evil by fire. Christ will take his church unto the place which he has gone to prepare for her, which is heaven; for thus it is written of him; “whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.” The church, which is the Bride, the Lamb’s wife, will then be with the Lord in her triumphant state. John had a view of her on the Isle of Patmos. Says the angel, “Come hither I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb’s wife.” John adds, “And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem.” The law is our school-master to bring us unto Christ. The Scriptures testify of Christ. So we find that the church-triumphant, which is the holy Jerusalem, has twelve gates whereon are written the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel; and the wall of the city has twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. A pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeds out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. The tree of life is in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river. John in another place is informed by the Spirit that the tree of life is in the midst of the paradise of God.

From what has been said, we conclude that the terms church-triumphant, Bride, Lamb’s wife, holy city, new Jerusalem, and paradise of God, are synonymous. A city is a collection of houses and inhabitants. Holy city means the holy saints with their dwelling-places which the Lord prepared for them, which is in God. It is the best, and most beautiful place; it is the pleasure garden of the Lord; or if you please, the paradise of God. After sin has been destroyed, and all things are restored, then will Eden once more appear to the pleasure and delight of God and all his creatures; then will the new earth be crowned with the paradise of God coming down from God out of heaven. From the promises which God gave to Abraham,—which have never all been fulfilled, and never will, until he and all his seed shall inherit the land,—I conclude that the paradise of God, or the garden of the Lord, will appear eastward in Eden, or the new earth. Then will Eden have been restored, and Paradise found. Then “shall the righteous inherit the land, and dwell therein forever.” Read Psalm 36: 9, 11, 22, 29. How truly could Christ say, “blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.” In order that we might form a part of the church-triumphant, we must do the will of God. If otherwise, we will not realize to our joy the following: “Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they might have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.” North Industry, Ohio.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
God in Christ.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother Noah Longanecker.

I feel no reluctance to measure swords with an alien, but to controvert a Brother is not pleasant. I “love the Brethren,” and none more warmly than the dear, hoary-headed patriarch who preached Deity out of Christ on the Cross.

Thanks for your expressions of sympathy in No. 4. Could you assume what I have felt within the last twenty-four hours, your sympathy would rise to white heat. It seems as if my very nerves were dissolving in the crucible of agony and oozing out at my pores. But God is good, and He is in Christ, with no necessity of divorce at the crisis we most need their conjunction, and this is the panacea for all our woes.

Begging your acceptance of my recitation of your “Christian affection,” I proceed to the consideration of a few points in your letter and critique. I will enter into no controversy, but simply make a few references which must be true, or the Bible a fiction. There is a God. He has a tri-personal constitution. In this constitution there is a relation which is designated by Father and Son. The constitution is Eternal, and so must the relation be. Every attribute ascribed to the First Person in relation to eternal being, is abundantly ascribed to the Second Person. The distinction between Lord and Son on which you insist, is not warranted by the Holy Scriptures. The word Lord, or Yahveh is used interchangeably, and is applied to God as God, as well as to the Central Person of the Trinity. Here I might dismiss the subject, and allow these propositions to challenge whatever refutation might be attempted. But your essay requires further notice.

The treatment of subjects is sometimes like a shingle or a board—long and thin. There is nothing but surface. No sooner do we puncture them than we are out on the other side. Writing with any other motive than the advancement of holiness, inevitably leads to expansion, dilution, and volatility. Suffering and debility have taught me something of the art of “boiling down.” The cubic style suits me best. As my powers decline, I am constrained to become more and more epigrammatic and seminal in my expression of thought. I perhaps overdo the condensation, and boil my subjects to a crisp. This may account in part for your exceptions to my views of “God in Christ.”

You remark that I “make some strong assertions, but they do not make my argument any the stronger.” That depends on the scope and grasp of the reader’s mind. No person ever spoke more in the form of assertion without even the semblance of argument, than Christ. No one ever needed more than an assertion for a necessary idea. No argument can add weight or force to the idea of right.

You say further that you “are surprised that I place Christ’s holy humanity and our fallen humanity on a level.” Verily, I am also surprised. Please, dear Brother, read again, and again, and you will find that such a construction is all in your own mind. Fill out the assertion with its essential details, and you will not fail to find the Holy One in a tabernacle frail as ours but without personal sin.

You refer to Adam as “the Son of God,” in illustration of the nature and office of Emmanuel. The allusion is irrelevant. The first representative of the race, was a son in a wholly different sense from the Second. Derivative from God, Adam is fitly termed a son; but Christ is God, was in the beginning with God, is the Creator of all things, has all the properties and prerogatives of Absolute Sovereignty. He is even denominated, under the limitations of humanity, as the Mighty God and the Everlasting Father. Is 9: 6. In the first instance the appellation of son denotes relation and character; in the other it signifies identity. Your difficulty mainly originates in a misconception of the constitution of the God man, and the offices pertaining to His complex personality. Your error is a grave one theoretically, and if it could take symbolic form, and corrupt the institutions of grace, I would tax what little strength I possess, and essay its demolition in a more exhaustive discussion. In your practical writings you ignore the view of the atonement which you here labor to establish. You are basing your expositions, appeals, and warnings on an element of the Cross that was not there, if so be that humanity had no essential, personal co-factor in God at the moment of the expiatory transaction. I submit this assertion for you to find yourself in it at leisure.

In your article, page 53, third column, you say, "there is no such thing as God withdrawing from His Son." You even assert that such a disjunction is an "utter impossibility." This is a pithy confirmation of my whole article which you reviewed, and squarely obliterates the distinction you had previously made between Lord and Son. Amen and Amen. Pilate vs Pilate. This should surely issue in the acquittal of Jesus. But perhaps not. You press the whole argument, or it presses you, into a single line, by referring the schism to an extra-Divine relationship—to God and a party to whom the appellation of Son is not applicable. For your emphatic declaration is that a dissolution between God and Son is "an utter impossibility;" and yet you attempt to demonstrate that the Bible restricts the name Son to the Inarnation. Son designates the humanity which Deity assumed, and between the Divine and human you assert there was a separation, while you advance the self evident impossibility of dissociation of God and Son. I am loth and sorry to be obliged to unveil these contradictions, and I beg you to believe that I do it in love, and with pained feelings that would gladly spare you this probe if it were consistent with my sense of duty.

In my article I said, if I recall the words correctly, "If Divinity had forsaken humanity on the Cross, Christ's death had been as inefficient for the atonement of sin and the redemption of sinners as yours or mine." To this you reply, "It is not true, if the Bible is true when it declares that He 'offered Himself without spot to God.'" Here you again unwittingly corroborate the position you seek to overthrow. You assume what you undertake to prove. Your ground is no ground without the evidence that it would be possible for humanity to offer itself without spot to God. Had such a separation taken place in the constitution of Emmanuel, there would have been nothing left but the nature drawn from His mother; and as she was "a woman under the law," and hence under the "curse," He could not have been made a curse for us, but would have been a curse unto Himself, equally with the nature whence He sprang. There is no escape from your dilemma, even as a matter of argument, but to fall back on the dogma of the "Immaculate Conception."

There is no necessity for such a disruption, even if it were possible. The Divine nature, the Divine government, and the wants of humanity, do not require it. But "God in Christ," in the Manger, on the Cross, and on the Throne, is the imperative requisition of Divine Law and human apostasy. The Incarnation was twofold in its object as related to sin: first to live such a life as God will accept, and thus become a Pattern for all His followers; second, to suffer the penalty of the law, and thus cancel man's guilt. But the entire Bible points to the latter as the supreme event in His history. Is it reasonable to suppose that if the minor purpose of the Incarnation absolutely demanded God in Christ, the greater can be accomplished by humanity without God?

You give a cordial assent to my assertion that "it was the God man who bled, and not the God-man." If there is a chasm between Deity and humanity on the Cross, there was no God-man there at all, but a mere man, a naked, empty, constitutionally God-forsaken man, and consequently nonatonement. The residuum of a Divine influence will not suffice. It is God manifest in the flesh that constitutes Emmanuel: it is Emmanuel that constitutes the Redeemer, and it is death that affects redemption. We will not attempt the philosophy of the mystery: that belongs to God. The fact is revealed, and let this be our anchor, our hope, and our "peace which passeth all understanding."

A Call to Prayer.

BY M. HADY.

In No. 2 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, we have an article from the pen of brother Noah Longanecker, under the above heading. If ever I read an article with interest, it was this. Although nothing new, yet our brother comes home so closely in such plain language, that we are forced to condemn our own actions. Reader of the CHRISTIAN, how many calls to prayer have we had! How often have we felt miserable under the preaching of some faithful servant of Christ; and yet how easy the solemn conviction, "I must now commence to pray," has been worked off, by thoughts like these: "There is old brother — who is a respectable brother, and looked upon as a very good Christian, and he never prayed; and if he is all right, of course I also may be without prayer." I, for my part, always have felt differently, and I hope the reader of the CHRISTIAN will pardon me in telling in what light I always have viewed this subject. When I was awakened to a sense of my duty, the first I did was this, I commenced to pray, not only in my closet, but with my family. Indeed, brethren and sisters, looking at the case of Paul, I did not think that I was a proper subject for baptism, unless I would first become a praying person; and my conviction to-day is, in regard to myself (I will judge none other), if I would not be willing to be a praying man in my family, and anywhere else where duty would call me, I would not want to be a member of Christ's church, for I solemnly do believe I would not be fit to be a member of a church of whose members it is said,—not by the world around us in the present day, but by historians,—that their houses are houses of prayer. Now brethren do not judge me in what I say in regard to myself. Others who have been trained in a different school may not view it as I do; but as far as I am concerned, I know I could not be a Christian without prayer; I would starve in a short time—perhaps not bodily, but, surely, spiritually.

Brother Longanecker finds fault with the ministers for not urging this important duty more upon the laity. A brother (a deacon) a few months ago in a letter to me said this: "Our brethren here are in favor of prayer-meeting, and they urge me to make appointments; but our ministers are opposed from the fact that in prayer-meetings every member, brother or sister, has the liberty to take part; and, you know, this does not suit our ministers: they like to do all the talking themselves." Now this is plain, yet only too true with some; not, however, with all, for our most intelligent, most zealous ministering brethren will not do it; but there is a class of them who think, "The church has put me here, and I am to do all the talking." Of course they do not see the necessity of the case. If they would follow the example of our good, old, zealous brethren, they would call on lay-members, not only once and then give it up, but repeat it until they are willing to commence. Don't be jealous, don't think that you only are required to be Christians. In talking to some deacons some time ago, asking them why they did not assist more in public worship when called upon, the answer was, "Well, this is something altogether new to us; our ministers never asked us to do anything before." This, then, all goes to prove that brother Long-anecker is correct in what he says.

But our calls to prayer, how many, and various they come! Our children, how often they look to us for prayer. I know a family in which, when the father neglects prayer at the table once, the little girl, not more than able to talk, will remind the parent with this, "Papa, you did not pray." Not a week ago, a little girl, not five years old, said to her mother, "Mamma, why don't you pray, when papa is not at home, like Mrs. ——— does when Mr. ——— is not at home?" Oh, how thankful should parents feel, when their innocent children remind them of their duty! and how they can refuse to obey, when God calls through the mouths of sucklings or babes, is a mystery. Will not these children accuse the parents, when too late to amend? Then how good we feel, by the grace of God, when we from the heart obey these calls.

God sometimes calls by those of whom we little expect it. Years ago I lived in a neighborhood where resided an old man, of whom it was said that he was not a very good Christian, but they said he had a wonderful gift of prayer. I heard a young man, about seventeen or eighteen years old, talking ridiculously of this old professor. Perhaps not a week later the young man took sick and died. About twelve hours before he died he sent for this very man, to pray with him. Hearing of it, I made my way to the house of mourning. When the father of the youth saw me, he said, "Oh come, let us all pray; if my Willie cannot get well to live with me, perhaps I may see him die happy." A father who perhaps had never prayed, here could call on all of us to pray for the salvation of Willie's soul. Here we had a call from the old, from the youth, from the healthy and from the dying. Surely these calls are loud. We may work those calls that come from the pulpit off; we may not listen to the calls of the innocent child; but we cannot forget the calls of the dying.

Brother Longanecker says that in some churches we find prayer meetings and in others we do not. To this I can bear testimony. A week ago, in talking with a brother on this subject, he says, "I do not believe we have a single member, brother or sister, who would refuse to offer up prayer in any of our meetings if called on." I talking with a young sister on this subject, and asking the question, "How many do you know in your neighborhood who are not praying people?" she commenced to count, and counted five families, as far as she knew, out of about thirty. (Of course, all members.) Then go to other places, and I am afraid the result would not be as favorable. Still we all are Christians, and claim to have been learners at the feet of Jesus. But why this Jesus teaches one to be a praying person and another that he and she can go to heaven on flowery beds of ease, is certainly marvelous, and cannot be true. I for my part, would expect to be saved without baptism sooner than without prayer.

But the question may arise, How can it be bettered? Simply by taking brother Longanecker's plan: encourage prayer more from the sacred stand and in your private conversation. Wherever you hear of a family destitute of daily bread, you certainly know what to do. Why must you be careless in this? Is the body of greater value than the soul? As long as you ministers give the laity to understand that we can go to heaven without prayer, you may rest assured that the cold state of religion will, if not be at a premium, at least pass at par. Give us to understand that you believe in it; for God may hold you responsible for it. Have your mind on it. Get up something to have this changed for the better, and every praying brother and sister will bid you God-speed. I know a brother who used to be a very warm Christian; who had his family altar erected; and all who lived with him called him a good Christian. He would hardly ever miss a prayer-meeting. Although he had no privilege to attend Brethren's prayer meetings, he would attend those of other denominations. To-day the brother is a backslider in religion; no prayer. Just think one moment of such a case. The brother himself told me his trouble. I will give his own words, "When I was a praying man, the brethren sent their deacons to caution me not to attend or take part in prayer-meetings of other denominations, but now, when I actually would need a visit from them, when I am entirely too cold, they don't come; and if they come, they do not urge me to resume my prayerful life, and I now pass along smoothly without any charges against me." Now this is a case, which should alarm us all. Our brethren know it; they know the brother, but seem to be satisfied. Is it possible? We bring charges, find fault with a brother when he leads a praying life, and after he quits the good work, then we call him all right. Another case, when I became a member of the church, very young in experience, a brother, looking rather rough in appearance, staid all night with us. Judging by appearance, I did not ask him to lead in prayer, thinking he would not, as he lived in the wilds of the country, ten miles away from the nearest meeting-house, isolated from the brethren. But you may think how I felt, when, a few weeks later, I happened to come to this very brother's house, and there, when about ready to retire for the night, our brother, with a large family of children, and the sister, his wife, met around the family altar. I say, you may know how I felt, for I could not explain it. Here was a family, who lived, not as some of us do, surrounded by brethren and sisters. They might have led a careless life, and no brother or sister would have known it. But not so. You may rest assured after that, when the brother came to our house, I called on him to lead in prayer; and ever since I have been careful in my conduct to brethren of rough appearance.

Brother Longanecker says, the most effectual prayer he ever heard was offered up by a sister. I can say the same. While I write it seems that the very sound of the voice of the sister is greeting my ears, and yet the sister has been dead for over four years. The brother who preached her funeral sermon took delight in saying, "I certainly believe our sister is in heaven, for she was a praying sister; she often took part in our prayer-meeting." Now, then, brethren, if you have much faith in prayer, why do you not encourage it more than you do? Are you afraid your reward will be the less? I am forced to believe your (ministers') fault it is that we have so many who never have prayed in public. When you discourage deacons and laity, as it is plain you often do, do you think that God will not hold you responsible for it? May the good Lord open our understanding, and give us boldness to come to a throne of grace, and there show, that we are not ashamed of our best friend.

Is It Right?

For souls to go bowed down with sin, and grief and fear? Why no, so long as it is written: "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins." Jesus has a wonderful name. He is called Wonderful. And He has marvelous power. He can break every chain. His high vocation is to procure deliverance to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. Why then be in spiritual thrall? Why not be free—entirely free? Let Jesus make thorough work.

For The Young.

"Then You Have A Father."

The Rev. Dr. Jonas King once went to visit the children in an orphan asylum. The children were seated in a school-room, and Dr. King stood on a platform before them.

"So this is an orphan asylum," said he. "I suppose that many of you children would tell that you have no father or mother, were I to ask you?"

"Yes, sir; yes, sir," said some little voices.

"How many of you say you have no father? Hold up your hands.

A forest of hands were put up.

"So you say you have no father?"

"Yes, sir; yes, sir."

"Now," said Dr. King, "do you ever say the Lord's Prayer? Let me hear you."

The children began, "Our Father, who art in heaven—"

"Stop, children," said Dr. King, "did you begin right?"

The children began again, "Our Father, who art in heaven—"

"Stop again, children," said Dr. King. "What did you say? Our Father? Then you have a Father, a good rich Father. I want to tell you about him. He owns all the gold in California; he owns all the world; he can give you as much of anything as he sees is best for you. Now, children, never forget you have a Father. Go to him for all you want, as if you could see him. He is able and willing to do all that is for your good."—Evangelical Messenger.

He Leadeth Me.

The patter of little feet on my office floor and a glad voice exclaiming:

"Papa, I've come to 'scort you home!" made known to me the presence of my little six-year old darling, who often came at that hour to "take me home," as she said. Soon we were going hand in hand on our homeward way.

"Now, papa, let's play I was a poor little blind girl, and you must let me hold your hand tight, and you lead me along and tell me where to step and how to go."

So the merry blue eyes were shut tight and we began: Now step up, now step down, here we go round the corner, and so on till we were safely arrived at home, and the darling was nestling in my arms saying, "Wasn't it nice, papa? I never peeped once!"

"But," said mamma, "didn't you feel afraid you would fall, dear?"

With a look of trusting love came the answer:

"Oh, no mamma! I had a tight hold of papa's hand and I knew he would take me safely over the hard places."

Dear, trusting childhood! What a lesson to our doubting, troubled hearts! Oh, that we might with just this loving trust clasp the heavenly Father's hand!—up and down the steep paths, round the sharp corners, and over all the rough places of this troublous, changeful life, never letting go and never opening our eyes to wonder or doubt as to his way—knowing that it will at last bring us, when the weary walk is done, to rest in his loving arms forevermore.—National S. S. Teacher.

Our Ten Good Friends.

"I wish that I had some good friends to help me on in life," cried idle Dennis with a yawn.

"Good friends! Why you have ten!" replied his master.

"I'm sure I haven't half so many, and those that I have are too poor to help me."

"Canst your fingers, my boy," said his master.

Dennis looked at his large, strong hand.

"Count thumbs and all," added the master.

"I have; there are ten," said the lad.

"Then never say that you have not got ten good friends able to help you on in life. Try what those true friends can do before you begin grumbling and fretting because you do not get help from others."—Sel.

Peter Putoff.

I know a little boy whose real name we will say is Peter Parsons; but the boys call him Peter Putoff, because he has such a way of putting off both business and pleasure.

He can learn his lessons well, but he is almost always at the bottom of his class, because he has put off learning his task from one hour to another until it is too late. He can walk or run as fast as any boy in town; but if he is sent on an errand, the errand never gets done in season, because he puts off starting from one minute to another; and for the same reason he is almost always late at school, because he never can be made to see that it is drawing near to nine o'clock.

If letters are given to him to post they never get in time for the mail; and if he is to go away by the boat or train, the whole family has to exert itself to hurry Peter out of the house, lest he should defer starting until the hour be past.

He procrastinates in his play as in his work. He puts off reading the library book till it is time to send it back: he waits to join the game till it is too late, and generally comes up a little behindhand for everything, from Monday morning till Saturday night, and then begins the new week by being too late for church and Sunday-school. Peter is quite conscious of his own fault, and means to reform some time; but he puts off the date of the reformation so constantly that I fear manhood and old age, which do not know how to put off their seasons, will overtake this boy and find him still only too worthy of the name of Peter Putoff.—Child's World.

Laughing Children.

Give me the boy or girl who smiles as soon as the first rays of the morning sun glance in through the window, gay, happy, and kind. Such a boy will be fit to "make up" into a man—at least when contrasted with the sullen, morose, crabbed fellow, who snaps and snarls like a surly cur, or growls and grunts like a hyena from the moment he opens his angry eyes till he is "confronted" by his breakfast. Such a girl, other things being favorable, will be good material to aid in gladdening some comfortable home, or to refine, civilize, tame, and humanize a rude brother, making him gentle, affectionate and lovable. It is a feast to even look at such a joy-inspiring girl, and see the smiles flowing, so to speak, from the parted lips, displaying a set of clean, well-brushed teeth, looking almost the personification of beauty and goodness, singing, and as merry as the birds that commenced their morning concert long before the lazy boys dreamed that the sun was approaching and about to pour a whole flood of light and warmth upon the earth.—Sel.

How is it little folks? Do you keep a sharp lookout for chances to help people who need help? Finding grandma's spectacles, and mama's thimble, and doing many, many things which willing hearts and ready hands will find to do, will help along wonderfully, and make you happy into the bargain. An old man was pushing his heavy truck up the hill one day. Some boys saw him and one said: "Poor old fellow; he can hardly get along. Let's lend him a hand." So they pushed, too, and soon the truck was at the top of the hill. Then were not their hearts warm and happy, because they had been kind to the old man!

OUR VISIT TO MIDDLE PENNSYLVANIA.

In our letter from Mifflin, Pa., in No. 7 of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, we gave some sketch of our journey from the time we left home till the date of our letter, which was the 4th inst. Our meeting continued with increasing interest in the Lost Creek congregation and in the Free Spring meeting-house until Monday night, the 7th inst., at which time it closed.— We attended nine meetings with the brethren here, and although the weather a part of the time was stormy, and the roads bad, the attendance upon the whole was good, and the congregations at some of the meetings were large. The solemnity and interest manifested, indicated the presence of the Lord in his sanctuary among his people. We felt it good to be together in the exercises of Christian devotion, and in the service of the Lord.—

The members of the church seemed to be much revived and refreshed by the meeting, and we think they felt like the apostle Paul, when he said, "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." It had been over thirty years since we visited the Lost Creek church, and it afforded us pleasure to renew our acquaintance with dear Christian friends, formed in the early part of our ministry, and to form new acquaintances among the members of the household of faith. We were pleased with our visit here, and enjoyed ourself with the brethren, and were glad to find the zeal, the union, and the evidences of faithfulness among the brethren that we did.

Brother John Zook of this congregation has written and sent to our office for publication in our paper, a long communication, giving a very favorable account of the meetings. But as his article is long, and as he has submitted it to our disposal, we have concluded to give a few of his points, in our notice of our journey, hoping that these with our own notice of the meetings will satisfy the church. We should be pleased to give his article entire, containing, as it does, an account of the Scripture lessons read, the hymns sung, &c., if our space would permit.— But as we receive a good many such articles, we frequently find it necessary to condense them. In referring to one of the morning services, he says: "Brother James read the 6th chapter of Hebrews, and his remarks were based on the 12th verse, and his subject was the following after those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. He was followed by brother Gluck, with many good and wholesome instructions, and our prayer is that we may put them to practice. Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, I appeal to you with myself; do not forget this sermon. Let us pattern after the old patriarchs, so that our children may have some knowledge of the old landmarks, for I fear that we are fast losing sight of them. But thanks be to God that we still have brethren that will contend so faithfully for the cause of Christ, and stir up our minds, and put us in remembrance of duty as we have been taught by our brethren: O brethren and sisters, let us not forget it, that our children may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven."

In referring to our last meeting brother Zook says: "Brother Quinter took for his subject the 11th verse of the 3rd chapter of Revelations, 'Behold I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.' This being the last sermon, and the close of our series of meetings, brother James labored hard and made strong appeals to both saints and sinners, that we should be ever watchful and hold fast whatever we have that is good. And we believe that there have been many good impressions made, and wholesome instructions given by our old brethren while they were with us here, and we hope by the mercies of God, and the prayers of the saints, that ere long there may be a great ingathering of souls into the church, of such that are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, that they may partake of the water of life freely. Elder Solomon Seiber followed brother Quinter with some solemn remarks and appropriate appeals to the church to stand fast and not forget those things which they had heard, but to ever have regard to their holy profession."— Brother Zook closes his article with a warm exhortation to his brethren and sisters to be faithful to their holy profession.

Our last meeting with the brethren of the lost Creek church was on the night of the 7th inst. After meeting we were taken by brother Solomon Seiber a distance of five miles his home, in which we enjoyed a comfortable night's rest, and a pleasant interview with the family. As the train did not leave until nearly noon, we had some time for rest in the morning. A part of this time was spent in writing letters, and a part of it in devotional exercises. At the proper time we took our leave of this kind family, and were taken by brother Seiber to the Thompsonstown station where we took the train for Harrisburg. The train on the Cumberland Valley R. R. making close connection with the train which brought us to Harrisburg, we arrived at Mechanicsburg about 2 o'clock p. m.

At Mechanicsburg was our first appointment in the Lower Cumberland church. At the depot we were met by brother Moses Miller, who took us to brother David Neiswanger's, and we were kindly received by brother and sister Neiswanger into their hospitable mansion. They are very kind and seem to entertain many friends. The family is given to hospitality, as the Apostle directs Christians to be.

Our first meeting was on the evening of the 8th. The house was pretty well filled and the congregation attentive and serious. There was meeting next morning at 10 o'clock in the same house; the congregation was large and the occasion a pleasant one. According to the arrangements previously made, after two meetings in Mechanicsburg, there were to be some meetings held in Shepherdstown, a place three miles from Mechanicsburg. After the morning meeting in M., we were taken by brother Moses Miller to his home for dinner. Here we spent the afternoon very pleasantly. In the evening went to Shepherdstown to meet the first appointment in that place. And although the roads were extremely bad, and the evening somewhat wet, the house was pretty well filled with an attentive congregation. There were four meetings in this place, the last being on Friday morning. The interest increased as the meetings advanced, and when they were removed to the Mohler meeting-house, there was considerable regret expressed, not only by the members living in the vicinity of Shepherdstown, but also by others who were not members of any religious denomination. The state of religious feeling produced by the meeting seemed to be quite good.

The Mohler meeting house, to which we went after we left Shepherdstown, is about three miles from Mechanicsburg.—It is a large house, and in it the brethren hold their communion meetings. It is on the farm formerly owned by brother Daniel Mohler, deceased, and now in possession of his son, Solomon Mohler. On this farm the A. M. was held in 1824 and in 1835. When we walked over the ground where stood and preached brethren John Price, Henry Kurtz, J. H. Houston and others who have gone from their labors to their reward, and when thinking about them and our familiarity with them, our mind was tenderly and solemnly impressed.

“Our fathers, where are they,
With all they called their own—
Their joys and griefs, and hopes and cares,
And wealth and honor gone?”

Of all the pious dead,
May we the footsteps trace,
Till with them, in the land of light,
We dwell before thy face.”

The arrangements had been made for four meetings at this place, and for our labors to close with the last of those meetings. But as the roads were so bad, and as there was a request for another meeting in Mechanicsburg, there were but three meetings here. At our first meeting on Friday night the congregation was small, but the meetings on Saturday night and Sunday morning were well attended and considerable interest was manifested. Brother E. Stoner of the Pipe Creek church, Md., on his way to Lancaster county, Pa., stopped with us and preached twice, once at Shepherdstown and once at Mohler's meeting-house. We were pleased to meet him and to enjoy his company and help. On Sunday night the meeting was in Mechanicsburg. And though the night was dark, and the roads extremely bad, a considerable number of the brethren and sisters came in from the country. The congregation was large and some persons who came could not get into the house. Although the house was much crowded, the attention was good, and the feeling manifested, excellent.

Here ended our labors with the brethren in Cumberland county, having attended ten meetings. The occasion was a very pleasant one to us, and apparently none the less so to the brethren and sisters. They seemed to enjoy themselves very well, and our meetings were seasons of spiritual refreshing to us while waiting upon the Lord. While the members seemed to be encouraged and built up in their “most holy faith,” quite an interest was manifested by a number of friendly aliens who, we hope, will become “buided together” in that glorious building, the church, designed “for an habitation of God through the Spirit,” and enjoy that peace which is “as a river,” and that perfect righteousness of Christ, which is compared by the spirit of prophecy, to “the waves of the sea.”

Cumberland and some of the adjacent counties were the scene of considerable revival interest within the past winter.—Mr. Hammond, the well-known revivalist, was here accompanied by his workers, as they are called. He was at Mechanicsburg, but the impression he made was not favorable, and he made but a short stay. His manner of proceeding in his work as represented to us by those who saw and heard him, was singular, and not at all commendable in our judgment. He had with him a man by the name of Tous, formerly an actor, but he had become converted under the labors of Mr. Hammond. Mr. Hammond called a number of the people together on the side-walk of one of the streets in Mechanicsburg, and after laying his hand on Tous, and praying for him, the latter addressed those assembled. His speech consisted principally in the relation of his experience. This same Tous, according to the papers, forged a note on a Carlisle merchant, and was arrested some days ago and committed to the Dauphin county jail. Alas! what dishonor is done to the holy cause of Christ by such as assume the Christian name and profession without its spirit and life.

Our visit to the churches embraced within the field of our recent labors in Middle Pennsylvania, was to us a very pleasant one. And although our labors were somewhat arduous, having preached some twenty-five times in about two weeks, besides the traveling we did, yet as we enjoyed very good health, and some assistance from divine grace, we felt but little exhaustion from our labors, and much peace of mind. We shall remember with pleasure the precious seasons of Christian fellowship we enjoyed with the brethren and sisters with whom we met. We were pleased to find the brotherly love and the union among the brethren in the churches we visited, that apparently prevailed. And being deeply impressed, as we are, with the necessity of a higher state of Christian culture in our fraternity, whenever the nature of the subject we dwelt upon, and the state of our own mind, offered an opportunity for us to do so, we introduced the subject and were much gratified to find considerable sympathy with us in regard to it.

On Sunday night after our last meeting at Mechanicsburg, we stopped again with brother Neiswanger. A number of the brethren and sisters also called and spent a little time before they left for home. On Monday morning we took the train on the Cumberland Valley R. R., for Martinsburg, W. Va., and reached home on Tuesday morning, about 4 o'clock, pleased and grateful to reach home again, and to find as we did, our little family quite well.

THE DISCUSSION IN INDIANA.

We give our readers this week some account of the first day's discussion between brother R. H. Miller, and Elder Walker of the “Disciples.” It will no doubt be read with interest by our numerous readers. We hope our kind correspondent will continue to give at least a synopsis of each day's labor. He possesses the ability to make it interesting and satisfactory, and we think our readers will find it to be so.

It will be seen from a notice of the discussion from our correspondent, D. A. Baily, in our present number, that it may be published in book form.

Gleanings and Gittings.

OUR MANUSCRIPT BOX.—We promised to tell you what we intend to do so as to diminish the pile of paper in this box. We have enlarged our paper, and every week we cram it full of good reading.—This, of course, takes away a good deal of manuscript; but this box seems to be like the widow's barrel of meal or cruse of oil. It sometimes reminds us of that other widow's “pot of oil,” from which she filled, not only her empty vessels, but also all that she could borrow from her neighbors. (2 Kings iv. 1-7.) We believe that with all our taking out this box will be kept full; and with this conviction we shall take out all that we can.

“But what will you do with it?” Yes, this is the question that has exercised our mind for some time. We have come to the conclusion that we must “boil it down,” or, to change the figure, we must sift it, or better still, winnow it. By this we mean that we will give the essays which are in this box an examination, and will either publish them, or select and publish the most important parts, or put them into that other box called “waste basket.”

When articles are consigned to the "waste basket" (box), it shall be done either with or without ceremony as the case seems to demand.

The articles will be numbered and either the name, initials of the name, or the nom de plume of every writer will be given. In this way we aim to make some disposition of this pile of paper and hope that we may find many good crumbs in this box.

No. 1. "The Right Christian Faith."—D. K. This article embodies an ancient creed in reference to the Trinity. The summary is, "One only God in three persons, and three persons in one Godhead; and not to mix the persons together nor to divide the Godhead." We think two pages of closely-written foolscap make the subject no plainer than the simple sentence, "These three are one," and hence, with this notice, we pass the paper into that other box.

No. 2. "The Destiny of Man."—This is a pretty fair article, bearing marks of originality and thought; but as it has no signature, we save the pins by which the several sheets are joined to each other, and allow No. 2 to follow No. 1.

Having now told you what we intend to do, and given a few examples to indicate how we intend to do it, we will leave it for the present. B.

OUR correspondence department being full, we give room for the following from the brethren at Philadelphia.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.—

Whereas, The necessity of having a publishing house under the sole control of the Brethren has long been felt by our churches, for the purpose of supplying our churches and Sunday-schools with a sound and unobjectionable literature—Bibles, Testaments, hymn books, Sunday-school books and papers, pamphlets, tracts, &c.—and, if agreeable, to unite one or more of our periodicals with the institution, and for the maintenance of our holy religion, the extension of Christianity, the promotion of peace and union in all our churches, and for the building up of all our members in the faith once delivered to the saints, and for the dissemination of the highest standard of morality, purity of life, and meekness of disposition as taught in our churches, in accordance with the revealed will of the Savior, and for the diffusion of the truths of the gospel generally, Therefore, it is hereby Resolved,

1. That a meeting for the furtherance of these objects be held at the Brethren's meeting-house, in the city of Philadelphia, on Thursday, March 16th, 1876, for the purpose of organization.
2. That all brethren feeling an interest in this work, and desiring to assist in making it a success, be invited to unite with us and to meet with us at the above-named time and place.
3. That these resolutions be inserted in our church periodicals.

INVITATION.

In accordance with the above resolutions, the brethren desiring to assist in the good work set forth therein are hereby cordially invited to meet with us in Philadelphia, March 16th, 1876. Any communication addressed to either member of the committee will receive prompt attention, and we solicit those who are interested and cannot be with us, to communicate by letter. Address, BROTHER Samuel C. Bashor, Whitesville, Mo., Feb. 16th, 1876, writes:

The brethren here have struggled to build a meeting house for some years past, but so far have found themselves unable to do so. Our number being small, and generally not very wealthy, we thought to adopt some plan whereby we might secure to ourselves a comfortable place in which to worship God. To this end we have secured the services of our beloved brother Stephen Bashor, now in Ind., for the purpose of asking those who are able and willing to devote something for the comfort of our Father's children in this part of the west. We think we can build with the help of about one thousand dollars. We intend to build a plain, cheap, substantial house—one that will correspond with our profession and the spirit of the gospel. So, dear brethren and sisters, those of you who are asked by brother Stephen to the help of the Lord, need not think that he is a fraud.

BROTHER N. C. Workman of Sciola, Montgomery county, Iowa, Feb. 16th, says: "Health is very good all over this part of Iowa. So say the doctors. Up to this time our winter has been very mild. All the snow this winter, were it on the ground now, would not exceed one inch. Our coldest day was in Nov. last; mercury 10° below zero. It has been below but very few mornings since. Roads are very good—dry and dusty—and have been nearly all winter. I was plowing on Thursday before Christmas. Some farmers were plowing and harrowing two weeks ago. The doctrine of the Brethren seems to be growing in favor with the people. The Brethren have larger congregations in the county than any other denomination, and a very deep interest is manifested. We need more help in the ministry. Who will come?"

BROTHER D. A. Baily, Feb. 19th, says: "The debate between Elder Walker and brother R. H. Miller, in the Pipe Creek church, Miami Co., Ind., is going on, this being the 5th day. A deep interest is manifested by all present, and I think that the Christians or Disciples, are hearing more than they expected from brother R. H. Miller. There is a reporter present taking the full speeches on both sides. The Brethren desired to have it printed in a book, but our opponents object. It is to be published in one of our church periodicals only, with the same privilege to them. If it is published in a book, Elder Walker is to get 50 copies of the same, and vice versa if published by them. This is a law of their own peculiar notion. There are yet 3 days of the debate, which will make, in all, 8 days."

BROTHER I. H. Crist, Girard, Ills., Feb. 15th, says:

"The ark of the Lord is still moving forward in the Otter Creek church, Macoupin county, Ill. Last Sunday there were nine more received by baptism, making twenty in all since Jan. 31st. These were all single people. The youngest is a brother of the writer, aged nearly fourteen; the oldest is aged about twenty-five years. He has been bereft of his companion. She also wanted to be united to the church, but like many others put it off until too late. May others take warning and not do likewise."

THE Plumcreek Normal School near Elderton, Armstrong county, Pa., will reopen April 10th, 1876, for a twelve week's term. The school, as heretofore will be under the supervision of Prof. Lewis Kimmel, in mathematics, and Prof. Howard Miller in languages. This institution is now in its seventh term, and offers good inducements to those desiring a thorough education. The school is managed by professional teachers, who have chosen teaching as the business of their lives.—For further particulars address brother Lewis Kimmel, Elderton, Armstrong county, Pa. B.

BROTHER S. M. Loos, Green Springs, Ohio, writes by order of the church:

"We, the brethren of the Green Spring district, in council on Feb. 5th, agreed to appoint the time to hold the district meeting of the north-western district of Ohio on May the 16th, at the Sugar Grove meeting-house. Brethren coming on the railroad will stop at Watson station, on the C. S. C. R. R. The meeting-house is one mile and a half from the station. The brethren will be met at the station."

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brethrenhood.

RURAL VALLEY, Penn'a., }
Feb. 3, 1876. }

Dear Brethren Editors:

Having come home last evening, Feb. 2nd, from a meeting held by the brethren in the Fyock meeting-house, in the Manor district, Indiana county, Pa., I send you a brief report as follows:

The meeting commenced on the evening of Jan. 20th, and closed on the 31st. This was the first meeting of the kind that was ever held in the above-named district. It was well attended and a good interest manifested. The ministering brethren present during the meeting were Elder David Over and brethren Joseph Holsopple and Caleb Secrist, of the Manor district; also brethren Peter Beer and Mark Minser, from the Montgomery district. We tried to labor together in word and doctrine for our own mutual good, and also for the good of our dear brethren and sisters who attended this series of meetings so faithfully, and manifested such a deep interest in the salvation of precious souls. We trust we all unitedly labored and prayed for the unregenerate, and, while thus engaged, the Lord heard and answered. Two precious souls enlisted in the cause of Christ, and were buried with him in baptism into death." Many others were made to feel the need of salvation, and some said they would soon unite with the people of God. May the Spirit of God continue to operate upon their hearts until they become willing, as a Lydia of old, to attend to those things that pertain to their present good and their eternal happiness. Many hearts were made to weep because of sin. We saw unbidden tears silently flowing down the rosy cheeks of those who are yet in their youthful days. But as the rose of summer blooms only for a short time, and is soon withered by the frosts of autumn, so, oftentimes, those in the bloom and vigor of life, in their youthful days are seized by the cold and icy hand of death, and while the spirit departs the body is left a lifeless fragment of clay. This being the condition of fallen humanity, how important it is for us to be prepared for death, and a judgment to come. May God help those that vowed to leave sin—help them to perform their vows speedily—is my prayer.

We feel to thank God for his mercies and blessings which we enjoyed while together in his service. We also feel grateful to our brethren, sisters, and friends for the interest they manifested in our welfare while amongst them. May the God of all grace reward them for their kindness.

Letter from Ontario.

Dear Brother Quinter and Readers of the Primitive Christian:

I feel it is with gratitude to my heavenly Father that I enjoy another privilege at the commencement of another year to write a short article for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, hoping it may prove edifying to those that may read it. I wrote an article in No. 33, Vol. XI, of the Companion and Visitor, in which I spoke of a love-feast which we intended to have on the 16th and 17th of July last. I would say that it was a feast to our souls. Brother John Baker and wife were present with us from Nodaway, brother Christian Heise and wife, from Markham, and many dear brethren and sisters from Waterloo, and Wilmot, and Puschich, among whom were the following: Brother Peter Holm, Bishop of the Waterloo church, brethren W. Haldeman and B. Shupe. We had a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord, and one was added to our number by baptism (sister Moyer). It was also thought necessary to make choice for a minister on account of the advanced age of some of the ministering brethren, who felt themselves unable to attend these meetings at some seasons of the year, on account of the distance being between 40 and 50 miles; and on account of our little number being composed of both German and English it was thought necessary to choose one to speak English and one to speak German, and the lot happened to fall upon brother John Richard to speak in the German, and the writer to exercise in the English. The cross-seemed to fall heavily on both of us. As there was no older minister among us to take the lead, we had to take up the cross and give ourselves into the hands of the Lord, trusting in him for strength and wisdom to perform the work which has been assigned to us, feeling that it is the will of the Lord that we have been placed in this position and called to this important work. It is sweet to work for Jesus, to try to win souls for the Master; but weighty are the responsibilities resting on those called to this great work. Oh that God may enable us to do our duty, and to be faithful in giving the warning voice to those who are unsaved, to flee from the wrath which is to come, and to lay hold of the only hope which is set before them in the gospel. Brother John and myself have enjoyed much of the presence of the Holy Spirit since we have commenced this work; on the other hand we have had to meet with great discouragements and severe temptations; but under all these trying scenes we have been made to feel that all things were working for our good, according to the promise. The poet very beautifully expresses my feelings:

Trials make the promise sweet;
Trials give new life to prayer;
Trials bring me to his feet,
Lay me low and keep me there.

Did I meet no trials here,
No temptations by the way,
Might I not with reason fear,
I might prove a castaway?

Bastards may escape the rod,
Sunk in earthly, vain delight;
But the true-born child of God
Must not, would not if he might.

We also had some ministering brethren to encourage us last fall—Brethren Christian Hoover and Samuel Baker, both of the county of York, and brother John Gottwals from Montgomery county, Pa. We were greatly encouraged. We had four meetings and the presence of the Lord was felt. May the good Master reward them for their labors of love with life eternal, and a glorious rest beyond the grave. How pleasant it is to meet with brethren and sisters and hear them tell of the Lord's kind dealings with them! The Psalmist said, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" How hard to take the parting hand, and shed the farewell tear! but what a glorious thought that we shall meet again on that shining shore, where we shall meet all God's children, "who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

I would further say that I have derived much benefit from reading the Companion and Visitor during the past year.—My faith has been strengthened in the truths of the Gospel, and I have been encouraged to be more bold to contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. I am confident that the Brethren or "Tunkards," as some call them, have the true faith, which we are in duty bound to contend for. I know that many churches try to think they have the true faith, but how can they have the true faith without keeping all the commandments? We cannot say that we do not know what he has commanded, for we have his word in our houses, and if we want to know what the faith is we can read it there.—No excuse can be given for not observing everything he has commanded. But how many are ready to reason thus: "It does not matter about these little things, whether we do them or not." Did Christ say so when he gave the commission to the Apostles—"Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name [not in the names, but in the name] of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world?" but he says, "He that loveth me, keepeth my commandments," and, "hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."—1 John, ii. 3, 4. What solemn words!—How important that we truly keep his sayings; for if any profess to be his and do not obey him, he calls them liars, and also says there is no truth in them; consequently they are strangers to the covenant of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. Oh that God may enable those that are endeavoring to live close to the bleeding side of Jesus, to strive after holiness of heart, that we may at last gain that long sought rest, and hear that welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." May God grant this to all his children, is my humble prayer.

Meeting and Parting.

Truly, it gives us much joy to meet with many friends with whom we have not met for many years. We meet with glad hearts and spend a few moments of pleasant conversation; but alas! all our joys on earth are mingled with sorrow. Yes, we sorrow because we so soon must part again. Since we have left our home in the west, to visit our friends in the east, we have met and parted with many dear friends, with whom we cannot expect to meet again in this world; and were it not for the glorious hope of meeting again in yonder world, where parting shall never join the joys of meeting, how could we endure the thought of parting with those with whom we spent so many happy hours before we left the home of our childhood, who have gone to their long home? We can visit their graves, but their smiling faces we see no more.

Dear brethren and sisters, if meeting here gives us so much pleasure, after long years of absence, what will that great meeting be in yonder world, when we shall meet, through God's help, never to part? Oh, let us be more earnestly engaged in the service of our dear Lord and Master. Let us not forget to pray for one another, that we may abound in peace and love, and in the unity of the Spirit, and work together for good.

"That we may meet on Canaan's shore,
Where parting tears are shed no more."

And you, my loving friends, what shall I say to you who have not yet started on the narrow way to heaven? Have you ever stopped to think of that great parting day that awaits you, if you do not turn back to the Father's house. This we are assured of, that unless you repent and seek the Lord, you will be banished from his presence. Then, oh think of that great parting day, when you may have to part from dear friends forever, and dwell outside of that beautiful, peaceful home. I entreat you to return to the Lord. Seek him while he may be found, before he will rise and close the door, and you stand outside and knock in vain.—Some of you, as well as myself, have been lately made to feel what it is to part with an affectionate father. How we long to meet him where death shall never part us. How would some of you feel to meet for a few moments and then part forever?—The thought is too much to endure—what must the reality be! With prayers I beg of you to come to Jesus. He will receive you. He has died for you. Will you not love and serve him, so that we can again all meet as one happy family? When you, my dear friends in the East, come to Illinois to visit us, you will no more find our dear father there to welcome you. In the Shannon church yard you can see his grave. We can go with you there to weep over the mound of sod, but our father is not there; his spirit dwells with God.

Let us prepare our dear father to meet,

For under the sod we must lie;

Then with our father we over shall dwell,

Above yonder starry sky.

My dear friends in the East, farewell. I shall ever remember your love and kindness. May we meet in heaven, is the prayer of your sister in the Lord.

Brother Quinter:

Not being well enough to go to church to-day, and feeling lonesome, I thought I would write a few thoughts for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I will take for my subject meeting and parting.

My mind wanders back to last fall, when our dear brother and sister, Daniel and Mary Waters, from Iowa, were here visiting their friends in Pennsylvania.—Our aged father and mother (Christian and Barbara Snyder) had prepared a dinner on purpose to have their children and children-in-law all home to eat dinner together, perhaps for the last time on earth, as our brother and sister were going to start back home in a few days. Many were the thoughts that passed through my mind when seated at the table. Six children with their husbands and wives, and a granddaughter with her husband (in place of her mother, who sleeps in the graveyard in Iowa). There we all were, fourteen in number, seated at the table, for our dear old father and mother to look at and wonder if they would ever see us all together again. I thought it did not seem long to them since their children were little. Now they were married and scattered, and their grandchildren number thirty-nine, and one great-grandson.—But so it is. Time flies away, and we, too, are passing away to our home beyond the river; and when we looked at the grey hairs of our aged parents, we had to think that they, too, were passing away, and in a few years they would not be here to prepare a dinner for their children.—They have been kind parents, indeed.—It made us feel glad when we met together to enjoy one another's company; but the next day when we had to take the parting hand, it went hard to bid goodbye to those we love, and see them go so far away. But thus it is. We must part here; but oh, if we are prepared for death, what a happy meeting beyond the grave! There we shall part no more. Let us take this to heart and prepare for death. It seems hard to part, and we have thought while standing over the graves of our little children, and seeing them buried from our sight, we could not give them up. Other dear friends we have seen for the last time, and we thought it could not be. Let us be prepared. God will soon call us all home.—Then our suffering and parting will be over and we shall rest in heaven. Let us one and all, be prepared to leave this world of trouble and rest on the shore of glory.

From Elder John Wise.

Dear Brother James:

I will give you a brief report of a visit to Armstrong county, Pa. I left home on the 15th of Dec., and arrived at S. D. Bowser's on the evening of the 16th, and commenced meeting the evening of the 17th. The weather being cold, and the brethren not receiving my letters, our first meetings were not large, but the people were attentive.

Our meetings increased in interest until the close. The enemy had made an advance upon the ranks of the Lord, and sowed discord among the brethren; but by the help of the Lord, and the counsel of the brethren, we got matters fixed up pleasantly before leaving them.

I remained at Glade Run until the morning of the 24th, when brother Wm. J. Bowser took me to the John settlement. Here I commenced a meeting on the evening of the 24th. Spoke to an attentive audience, and continued until the 28th. We had very interesting meetings all through. Three came out on the Lord's side. May they be faithful.

At this place the brethren have erected a very comfortable house to worship in.—May God bless their work by adding many souls to their number. Dear brethren, should any ministering brother pass along the Alleghany Valley R. R., inform brother John John, at Adrian P. O., Armstrong county, Pa., and stop at Templeton station. The brethren will meet you with pleasure, and have you preach for them in their new house. Let the brethren in Cowanshannock and Plum-reek congregations be sure to visit them. Brother James, cannot you find a week of leisure to preach for them? If so, write as above. My opinion is, that good may be done by good, sound preaching at that place.

The ark of the Lord is moving slowly here in the old Ten-mile congregation.—This was one immersed since our communion meeting in November. May the good Lord prosper his work here. I think if the brethren would come and preach more here, there would be more added to the church, and the members be more faithful. Come and help us.

Yours in hope,

JOHN WISE.

Scenery Hill, Pa.

Consolatory.

"I saw the leaves gliding down a brook—

Swift the brook ran, and bright the sun burned—

The serene and verdant, the same course they took;

And sped gaily and fast—but 'they never returned.

And I thought how the years of a man pass away—

Three-score and ten—and then where are they?"

Two months ago myself and family left home to visit our friends in Pennsylvania. In due time we arrived at the place of our destination, and found many with open hands and willing hearts to receive us.—And just here let me say, it is a satisfaction which I cannot find words to express, but must be felt before we can realize what it is to receive such a hearty welcome as we did. May God bless all our dear brothers, sisters and friends, in my prayer.

What a change a few years make!—Nine years since I left that part of the country, and when I returned, alas, what a change! Many, very many, of those who were then in the prime of life, have gone to their home; not only those, but old and young, all ages, have been removed by death and have gone to try the realities of a world to us untried. When I went into the graveyard and there read the names of those that are now moldering back to dust, I had to think, "Why is it that those who seem to be so much needed, when there are few, if any, to take their places, must be taken away?" But God does all things well. He in his mercy and goodness has removed those that were near and dear to us; but we have the hope that they have exchanged the troubles, trials, and labors of this world for a much better, where all is happiness and bliss, where everything is congenial to the wants of the redeemed and sanctified, where there is no more sickness, no more pain, neither death, and where there will be no more parting.—Where Christ and all the holy angels are, there shall they dwell forever.

Dear sister K——, we often think of the lonely hours you have had since the death of your dear husband, our brother in Christ; but we would say, Put your trust in God who is able to protect you, and he will never leave you so long as you live in accordance with his will. You are surrounded with kind friends. We knew they cannot fill the place of him who is gone, but yet you have many privileges that others do not have. Think of the blessings you still enjoy and try to be resigned; for God causes all things to work together for good to them that love him. Perhaps your dear son may soon take his father's place in the church as well as in this world. I pray God it may be so. We sympathize with you, and try to pray for you, that God may sustain you, and at last take you home to heaven.

What joy pervades our minds when we can lay hold of God's precious promises! We know that what God has promised he will do. So all depends on us. If we do our part, put our trust in Jesus and follow his commands, we have the promise that his grace will be sufficient for us; and at last, when we shall have stood the storms, temptations, troubles, trials, and perils of this world, we shall then be permitted to meet around our Father's throne, where we will sing songs of praises to the Lamb that has redeemed us with his precious blood.

A few words to you, my dear, dying friends, who are without that hope that is able to sustain us in the sad hour of death. You have been invited, time and again, to come to Jesus and accept of the pardon so freely offered. Think of your sad condition if death should call you off in your sins. You are accountable to God for your actions here; and know this, that as death leaves you, so the judgment will find you. It is an awful thing to fall into the hands of an offended God. May God help you to think of and see your sad state now ere it is forever too late.

I thank God for the many enjoyments I had during my visit east. I left my family there to visit their friends for a few weeks more. May God bless and protect us all.

S. H. SPROGLE.

Shannon, Ills., Feb. 1, 1876.

In Memoriam.

My mother, Elizabeth Paul, was born December 16th, 1821, and departed this life Nov. 10th, 1875, aged 53 years, 10 months and 24 days. Her disease was hemorrhage of the bowels and typhoid fever. Yes, yes, our mother has left us, but our loss is her great gain. She was an exemplary member of the fraternity of the Brethren for upwards of thirty-one years. She earnestly contended for the faith delivered to the saints anciently, and fought the battles of the Lord valiantly. About four weeks prior to her death she visited the writer, her oldest son, in Allen county, Indiana, and while with us she enjoyed herself very well, and attended one communion where we communed together for the last time on earth. While our mother was with us and for about two weeks after she returned to her home in Ohio, she was in unusual good health; but alas! the disease came, and although the family physician did all in his power, all medical aid failed till Jesus, the Great Physician, eased her of her suffering, which was very great for a few days before her death, but she bore all with Christian fortitude. She has left a husband and three children to mourn their loss, but all are members of the church, and the writer a minister of the gospel.

Mother was born in Rockingham Co., Va., and lived in the same county, until the fall of 1864, when the family moved to Ohio, where the writer preceded them about 15 months, the war spirit causing us to leave for peace. Her circle of friends was large, being well known by many who deeply feel her absence. We have lost an affectionate mother and the people in her vicinity one that was much loved. Her remains were taken to the Brethren's burying ground, in the Lower Twin Creek congregation, Preble county, Ohio. There she was laid in the narrow limits of the tomb, to sleep until the trump of God shall be sounded to wake the sleeping dead.

Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,—
He can all our sorrows heal.

Peaceful be thy silent slumber—
Peaceful in the grave so low;
Thou no more wilt join our number,
Thou no more our songs shalt know.

Yet again we hope to meet thee
When the day of life is fled;
Then in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

B. F. PAUL.

Brother James:

Since your visit with us (the Lower Cumberland church), I have thought much of our meetings. As I live in the outskirts of the church, I do not have the privilege of attending the meetings as regularly as desirable; but my desire is, that the cause of Christ may be promoted, that those who have espoused his name be faithful, and that sinners might be constrained to flee to him for refuge.

I can scarcely refrain from giving a few thoughts to those who feel themselves sinners—those who do not accept Jesus as their Lord by doing the things which he says. As we are inclined to love those with whom we are most intimately acquainted, and as we wish those whom we love to enjoy what we enjoy and to realize what we realize, I have a warm feeling for the people of Shepherdstown, and not for them only, but as I was present at the meetings at this place, my sympathy was drawn out in their behalf. How they listened with unabated attention to the word spoken concerning "the living God"—"the real God"—"God in whom we can trust;" and to "Christ which is the hope of glory," and to "warning every man, and teaching in all wisdom," &c. May we all meditate upon what we have heard, and not be hearers only but doers of the word. To those who are hearers and not doers of the word I would say, May the Lord influence you by his grace to flee from the wrath to come—to escape for refuge. Make haste to flee to the "city of refuge" (Jerusalem). "Look not behind you;" "remember Lot's wife." You may view the matter with indifference or thoughtlessly, but remember it is your great, your first duty. If it were your mortal life that was in danger, all your friends would warn you and you would heed the warning; you would apply all possible means to save it. But this life will not compare with that immortal life in the world to come. If you lose that soul, your loss will be incomprehensible; if the joys of heaven cannot be described, neither can be the misery of the lost soul. If we lose our soul our life has been a failure—better had we never been born. We may be industrious, hospitable, kind, lovely, and have many noble qualities, but they will not save us. There is no salvation out of Christ. No cross, no crown; no humility, no exaltation; no obedience, no reward.—Pleaseth think of these things. If you do not strive to enter in you will not be able. The way is narrow, but wide enough to save the soul. Do not delay; to-morrow your destiny may be sealed. "To-day, if you hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

There is no repentance in the grave;
Now is the time the soul to save.
You know your duty, yes you do,—
Why not, then, the way pursue?

Sister Annie was baptized on the 19th day of January, 1869; was married to Wesley Adams on the 13th of September 1874, with whom she lived happily till the Lord called her suddenly away, leaving her husband behind, but not to sorrow as those who have no hope.—Funeral services by the writer, assisted by David Earhart, of the Lutheran church.

VALENTINE BLOUGH.

Near South English, Keokuk county, Iowa, in the English River church district, Brother JOSEPH A. COPPMAN. Disease, typhoid fever. He was born in Rockingham county, Va., Jan. 1st, 1837, and died Feb. 8th, 1876, aged 39 years, 1 month and 8 days. He leaves a widow (a sister) six children, and a large number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. But they do not mourn as those who have no hope, for he left sweet evidence of his going in peace.

Although he was sick some time, (over four weeks,) he bore his sickness with Christian fortitude, never murmuring and seemingly without pain. He was fully resigned to the will of his heavenly Father, whether to live or to die.—Tranquilly and calmly did he pass over the stream of death. Oh that we all might so live that when death comes we might die in peace and go over and join those we here loved and never more be parted. The funeral occasion was improved by Eld. John Thomas, of Washington City, assisted by others, from 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8, to a large concourse of sympathizing kindred and friends. B. F. F.

Where Does it all Come From?

Pints and quarts of filthy catarrhal discharges. Where does it all come from? The mucous membrane which lines the chambers of the nose, and its little glands are diseased, so that they draw from the blood its liquid, and exposure to the air changes it into corruption. This life-liquid is needed to build up the system, but it is extracted, and the system is weakened by the loss. To cure, gain flesh and strength by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which also acts directly upon these glands, correcting them, and apply Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy with Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche, the only method of reaching the upper cavities, where the discharge accumulates and comes from. The instrument and both medicines sold by druggists and dealers in medicines.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO OUR READERS. SPECIAL CALL. Agents Wanted

To sell the New Patent Improved EYE CUPS. Guaranteed to be the best paying business offered to Agents by any House. An easy and pleasant employment.

The value of the celebrated new Patent Improved Eye-Cups for the restoration of sight breaks out and blazes in the evidences of over 6,000 genuine testimonials of cures, and recommended by more than one thousand of our best physicians in their practice.

The Patent Eye Cups are a scientific and philosophical discovery, and as ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., and Wm. BEATLEY, M. D. writes, they are certainly the greatest invention of the age.

Read the following certificate:

FERGUSON STATION, LOGAN CO., KY., June 6th, 1872. Dr. J. BALL & Co., Kentucky.

GENTLEMEN: Your Patent Eye Cups are, in my judgment, the most splendid triumph which optical science has ever achieved, but, like all great and important truths of this or in any other branch of science and philosophy have much to contend with from the ignorance and prejudice of a too sceptical public; but truth is mighty and will prevail, and it is the greatest blessing of this age regarding their potentiality and endorsement by all. I have in my hands certificates of persons testifying in unequivocal terms to their merit. The most prominent physicians of my State, of your Patent Eye-Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years.

I am, respectfully, J. A. L. BOYER.

WILLIAM BEATLEY, M. D., SALVISA, KY., writes: "Thanks to you for the greatest of all inventions. My sight has fully returned, and I thank your Patent Eye-Cups, after being almost entirely blind for twenty-six years."

ALEX. R. WYETH, M. D., ATCHISON, PA., writes: "After a blindness of my left eye for four years, by the paralysis of the optic nerve, to my utter astonishment your Patent Eye Cups restored my eyesight permanently in three minutes."

Dr. S. E. FALKENBERG, Minister of the M. E. Church, writes: "Your Patent Eye Cups have restored my sight, for which I am most thankful to the Father of Mercies. By your advertisement I saw at a glance that your remarkable Eye Cups were formed to their work perfectly in accordance with physiological law; that they literally did the eyes that were starving for nutrition. May God greatly bless you, and may your name be cherished in the affectionate memories of multiplied thousands as one of the benefactors of your kind."

LEONARD B. DURANT, M. D., says: "I sold, and effected future sales liberally. The Patent Eye-Cups, they will make money, and make it fast, too; no small catch-penny affair, but a superb, number one, top-notch business, promises, as far as I can see, to be his-ling."

MAYOR E. C. ELLIS wrote us, November 10th, 1869: "I have tested the Patent Ivory Eye Cups, and am satisfied they are good. I am pleased with them. They are certainly the greatest invention of the age." FRED W. WENGER, Editor of the New York Tribune, wrote: "Dr. J. BALL, of our city, is a conscientious and responsible man, who is incapable of intentional deception or imposition." FRED W. WENGER writes: "Truly I am grateful to your noble invention. My sight is restored by your Patent Eye-Cups. May heaven bless and preserve you. I have been using spectacles twenty years. I am seventy-one years old. I do not write without glasses, and I bless the inventor of the Patent Eye-Cups every time I take up my old steel pen."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D., physician to Emperor Napoleon, wrote, after having his sight restored by our Patent Eye-Cups: "With gratitude to God, and thankfulness to the inventors, Dr. J. BALL & Co, I hereby recommend the trial of the Eye-Cups (in full faith) to all and every one that has any impaired vision, believing, as I do, that since the experiment with this wonderful discovery has proved successful on me, in my advanced period of 116-90 years of age—I believe they will restore the vision to any individual if they are properly applied."

ADOLPH BIORNBERG, M. D. Commencement of Massachusetts, Essex, Mass., June 6th, '73, personally appeared Adolph Biornberg, made oath to the following certificate, and by him subscribed and sworn before me.

THE NINETY-AND-NINE.

There were ninety and nine that safely lay

In the shelter of the fold,
But one was out on the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold—
Away from the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

"Lord, thou hast here thy ninety and nine;
Are they not enough for thee?"

But the Shepherd made answer: "This of mine,
Has wandered away from me;
And although the road be rough and steep,
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed;
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through

Ere he found his sheep that was lost;
Out in the desert he heard its cry—
Sick and helpless and ready to die.

"Lord, whence are those blood drops all the way

That mark out the mountain's track?"
"They were shed for one who had gone astray Ere the Shepherd could call him back."

"Lord, whence are thy hands so rent and torn?"
"They are pierced to-night by many a thorn."

But all through the mountains, thunder-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gate of heaven,
"Rejoice! I have found my sheep!"
And the angels echoed around the throne,
"Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own!"

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Horatory.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To the Lambs in the Manor Church, Maryland.

The Seven Epistles of Christ to the Seven Churches, are paradigmatic. They signify for us what they signified for those to whom they were specifically addressed. This letter, although designed especially for you, is adapted to all who have consecrated their youth to the service of God. There are such sublime heights and unsearchable depths, such dread mysteries and more dread responsibilities, in "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father," that we cannot too frequently be reminded of the significance of the name we bear — CHRISTIAN. Nothing but declension and apostasy in so-called christendom give propriety to the appellation of Primitive Christian. It is the Ephesian lapse of love the Pergamite Balaamism and Nicolaitan heresy, the Thyatiran abominations, the Sardian corruptions and hypocrisy, and the Lodiicean assumptions, arrogance, and deadness—it is these secessions from "the truth as it is in Jesus," that give such uniqueness to the true Brotherhood of Saints as to call for an adjective that seems to imply a super-Christly christianity. If popular religion is the religion of the Cross, then the Brethren are considerably better than good. Christ was the Infinitely Good, but no better than He ought to have been; and therefore Christianity can never be anything else or less than it was in His Person. Here is the pivot of the whole matter. If our religion, in its nature, form, aims and efforts, is not what the manifestation of God in the flesh was, it is not Christianity. This is the test, and failure here is total and eternal. The "high calling of God" is nothing less than conformity to "the law of the Spirit of Life in Christ Jesus." "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Solemn declaration!— This includes the "babes and sucklings" of grace, no less than the "fathers in Christ" and "mothers in Israel." The nursing must breathe the same air, be sunned in the same light, and subsist on the same essential elements, as the Samsons, Goliaths, and Ishbi-benobs. 2 Sam. 21: 16. The babe's milk nourishes the same kind of structure and the same number of organs, as the "strong meat" in the brawny form of the giant. Babes in Christ are "partakers of the Divine nature" no less than after they have become hoary in laboring for Christ, and wrestling with the powers of darkness. You are as much under obligation to "let your light shine," and be a "salt of the earth," to "keep yourself unspotted from the world," and to "WALK WORTHY OF THE LORD UNTO ALL PLEASING," according to your capacity and the grace bestowed upon you, as your parents and pastors. Your candlestick is of gold, and your oil and flame Divine, as truly as that of the most aged and eminent saint in the Manor. Levity, vanity, envy, pride, wantonness, malice, gossip, backbiting, and officiousness, are as averse to your character as Christians, as to Gabriel and his compeers. There is but one Righteousness in Heaven and on earth, and without this neither man nor angel has acceptance with God. "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven," is the only prayer that will gain audience at the Mercy seat. Where this lacking, God is not hallowed, neither will His kingdom come. Consider well this Model Prayer. It is the liturgy of the Eternal. It includes all that a Christian has a right to pray for. It comprehends the entire scope of God's purpose in Christ. It scourges all unholy traffic out of the temple, anoints the eyes with Divine salve, burns the lips into Divine purity with a live coal from the altar of holiness, dips hands and feet, head and heart, into the blood of the Cross, and turns the whole life into a crystal river rolling its Heaven-reflecting tides into the eternal Fountain-head in "the Throne of God and of the Lamb." As God gave us a whole Christ, He wants a whole Christian. Sacred arithmetic has no fractions for character, neither vulgar nor decimal. To be born of God is to be an integer. God begets no monsters. His offspring are without wrinkle, spot, or blemish. Our defects come from the mother's blood. The generation of the Holy Ghost is absolutely pure. But the Bride modifies what Divinity imparts. In your will and purpose you may be sovereign, and wholly with the Father, above your spiritual mother, and above yourself. If at the point of choice you are not an integer, you are not of God. A flaw there is flaw all through. Allegiance to God must be perfect, however imperfect the exemplification. If the imperfection has the sanction of the will, or springs from indifference to the right, or permitted inclination to the wrong, we are rotten at the core, and unmeet for "the inheritance of the saints in light." In such a case there is no integrity, and consequently no genuine piety. "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt," is the one essential, all-comprehending condition of salvation. If your life is an exponent of the word integrity in its religious import, you cannot fail of peace here, and eternal glory hereafter. You must be at one with God in right intent. Young and inexperienced as you are in years and grace, you are required to be "perfect even as your Father in Heaven is perfect." Less than this is to miss Heaven. Defection here is damnation. "He that doubteth is damned if he eat." "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that which he alloweth." "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things." "Ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven of the wind and tossed. LET NOT THAT MAN THINK THAT HE SHALL RECEIVE ANYTHING OF THE LORD." James 1: 6, 7. "There is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus," because they walk in the prompting and guidance of the Holy Ghost. Your soul must rest in singleness of purpose, and a consciousness of right intention, supported by the revealed will of God, or you will be no more than a living corpse. Paradoxical as this may seem, we know that what has been, may be again. Rev 3: 1. The commendation or condemnation of the Almighty will hinge on what we are, and not on what we seem to be. The good traits in the Seven Churches could not atone for the existing evil. Ephesus had a long enumeration of commendable features, but had allowed her first love to chill, and this rendered the whole unsavory. "Repent, and do thy first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." So of all the rest, save Smyrna and Philadelphia. Fearfully solemn revelation of the Divine character, and the unbending righteousness of His judgment! "I THE LORD THY GOD, AM A JEALOUS GOD."

In revealing His will in life-form, God took not one unnecessary step, or uttered one unnecessary word, or drew one unnecessary breath in Christ Jesus. Every hair on the head of Emmanuel, every wink of his eyes, every tear, every sigh, every movement, even his sleep in the fisherman's boat, were needed to fill out the programme of the Eternal Mind. In perpetuating His revelation in word-form, God never put into type one superfluous iota. Every period, every comma, and the dot of every i, is in its deepest sense the blood of Jesus. The amanuenses of the Holy Ghost could have written no glad tidings unless God had first thrust the Sword of Divine Justice through the heart of His Son, in order to fill the pen of inspiration with the blood of the God-man to write the word PARDON. If "Christ is our life," and "our life is hid with Christ in God," we will no more think of erasing a single letter from the Alphabet of Redemption to give liberty to the will in relation to the flesh, than did Christ in Gethsemane to extract one drop of wormwood out of His cup of mediatorial suffering. That chalice contained all our sins, and yet He quaffed it to the dregs. It was the cup of damnation to Him that it might be the cup of salvation to us. To spill one drop for the sake of the flesh, is to call the Gethsemane ingredients all back again: is to spill the blood of atonement under our feet, and fill our cup to the brim with the wrath of God and the Lamb. A dreadful transaction was the negotiation of Jehovah with the world through His Son; and a matter of overwhelming solemnity is our dealing with God through the blood of His Only-begotten. Renounce sin as fully as your Saviour suffered its penalty. One sin unatoned, would leave both the Atoner and all whom He represented, in the bondage of corruption and in the woes of Hell. One sin cherished, one least taste of the forbidden tree, swings to its bolt Heaven's gate of pearl, and opens for the offender Hell's gate of flame. Atomic sins, fair-looking sins, respectable sins, church-sins, are the most dangerous of all sins. It is here where Satan lays his bait. Expedience and plausibility and latitudinarianism are the snares with which the infernal fowler drags his victims into the strongholds of iniquity. But your blessed Exemplar prefers to die of starvation in the wilderness, sooner than turn stones into bread at the instigation of the devil. O beloved, be on your guard; we may eat of the devil's bread before we are aware of it, unless we keep fast by the Son of God. "Avoid all appearance of evil." Strangle the viper in embryo: once born, it will bite and poison and kill. Crush the cockatrice in the egg. Is. 59: 5 Nothing hatches evil into life quicker than the incubation of lust and passion. Nip sin in the bud: allowed to go to seed it multiplies like the queen bee. Dip your tongue in the blood of the Crucified, and quench the passion-kindled word before it "set on fire the course of nature," and envelop you with the very glare of hell. A spark turned Chicago into ashes. Let not the Wicked One inoculate you with the least atom of his virus, lest you break out all over with the variola of perdition. "Build each other up in the most holy faith," and leave no room for the architect of Babel to build in his "wood, hay, and stubble." "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly," and your hearts be aflame with His love, and your faith and hope wait eagerly for His appearing, and you will be at no loss for profitable conversation when you meet. Think it beneath you, and a dishonor to your Redeemer, to spend the hours in frivolous gossip, discussing the characters and incidents of plays and novels, or dissecting the faults of dubious members, or mangling the misconceived efforts of the holy.

Pray, weep, rejoice, and wrestle together; bind your hearts in closer, sweeter unity around the altar of Calvary, carry the Cross in your bosoms and on your backs, and "be unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish."

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Baptism of Fire.

BY NOAH LONGANECKER.

Arthur, in referring to the great power of a cannon ball, when thrown from a cannon, by presenting a single spark of fire to the powder behind it, says, "So it is with our church machinery of this day; we have all the instruments for pulling down strongholds, and ho for the baptism of fire!" It is a common thing for some to pray for the baptism of fire. Believing, as I do, that such know not what they ask for, I have felt it my duty for some time to give the subject some notice. And now while the subject is before my mind, I am pleased to receive some remarks from the editor on the subject. Permit me to state that the editor made a miss-reference when he says that "Peter referred to John's prediction that our Lord would baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Acts 11: 16. Peter referred to the Lord's own words recorded in Acts 1: 5, and neither had more than the baptism of the Holy Ghost before his mind. It is no proof that we are not to receive the baptism of the Spirit, from the fact that water-baptism is sometimes referred to independent of that of the Spirit. But to my subject.

There are three different kinds of baptism referred to in the Bible: 1. Water baptism; 2. Of the Spirit; 3. Of fire. Christ, who is the Way, as well as our Exemplar, received all of them. Christ at one time says, "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" There can be no doubt but that Christ referred to the baptism of his sufferings. In another place he informed some of his disciples as follows: "Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with." If this is not the baptism of suffering, I have failed, as yet, to learn what it does mean. In Rom. 8: 16, 17, we read, "We are children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." It is written, "we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." "Beloved, think it not strange, concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings."

From all this we learn that we can only be joint-heirs with Christ on the ground if we suffer with him; and those sufferings Paul calls fiery trials. Now from the fact that Christ called his sufferings a baptism, and then declared that his disciples should be baptized with the same baptism that he was baptized with, and from the fact that Paul calls those sufferings fiery, I draw the inference that the baptism of sufferings is the baptism of fire. The prophet in referring to Christ says, "He is like a refiner's fire." Christ himself says, "I am come to send fire upon the earth." Fire is here an emblem of discord, contention, and persecution. This would be brought about through the perverseness and wickedness of men, by opposing Christ and his word. Christ came among this perverse people, and brought his word to them, and then sent his servants in their midst, and therefore he is said to have come to send fire on the earth. If any would embrace Christ, or his word, this contention and persecution would be arrayed against them; and like gold passing through fire to be separated from its dross, so the followers of Christ would come out more than conquerors, and would finally experience to their eternal joy that their light affliction which was but for a moment, worked for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

This world is a state of probation. God always did, and always will, try his people while in this life. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

Some are under the impression that the influences of the Holy Spirit are meant by "baptism of fire."

This cannot be, for they are to be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. I am well aware that there are those who contend that the two expressions to be born of water and of the Spirit, mean the same thing, but they are only those who wrest the Scriptures to support their own dogmas. In the expression, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire," the term you refers to the same characters that you does in the expression, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance;" and no array of words, or wisdom of man, can make the term you in the last expression refer to any characters but those whom John baptized with water. It is true that John—not the Lord—was addressing the multitude, or the people in general, but there was some cause for this. John had no knowledge beforehand who would accept of his baptism, and in order that he might include all that had already submitted to his baptism, as well as all of those who would yet submit to it, he necessarily had to make his remarks to all. If we were to address an audience on the subject of baptism, we would use similar language.

We would say to the people in general, we indeed baptize you with water, but the Lord will baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and at the same time we would only include those who would submit to water baptism, for it would be contrary to the teachings of the word to include the rest. But more than this; what is promised to one of the characters included in the term you, is promised to all. Common sense and the construction of language teach us this fact. It was customary for the prophets to represent nations and individuals, whose ruin they predicted, with the metaphor, "trees doomed to be cut down;" so John, in Matth. 3: 10, predicts the ruin of the Jewish nation, the Romans being represented by the axe, and the Jews by the term tree. John prepared the minds of his followers to receive Christ; and in verse 11th, he informs those who would receive his baptism of repentance, of the blessings they would receive of Christ in this life: and in verse 12th, he informs them that the Lord would thoroughly purge his floor, or this earth; but before this will be accomplished he will gather his wheat believers into the garner, that is, heaven; and then the chaff, or wicked, will be burned up with unquenchable fire. Christ will "purify unto himself a peculiar people." This people is to be "God's building, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Each member is to be a lively stone of this building; and ministers are to be master-builders, properly instructing all, and then to see that all are prepared to be received into this building; if they do not, those that they receive will be "wood, hay, stubble," and "when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word," they will fall away, and thus the builder's "work shall be burned" by the fire that Christ kindled. If members of the church are right, they are as "gold, silver, precious stones;" and will become the holier by passing through the baptism of suffering, or FIRE. Fellow readers, if you would pass through the baptism of fire safely, pray to God not to lead you into temptation, and he will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able to bear.

Look at the Preacher.

Yes, look at him while he is preaching.

1. Because he is speaking to you. He speaks to all that are present. You do not drop your head or avert your face when a friend or any man speaks to you in the house or on the street. Acknowledge by looking that you feel that you are spoken to.

2. Because looking at him is a proper return, so far as it goes, for his pains to interest you. He puts himself into communication with you, and your attentive gaze at him is obedience to his virtual solicitation that you be in communication with him. It is simple justice.

3. It is politeness, too. You would call one rude and ill-mannered who should avert his face when you attempted to speak to him. Politeness in the social circle should go with you into the sanctuary.

4. It is kindness, too. You can do the preacher service—perhaps a very great service. He is anxious to instruct or profit you in some way. It will gratify him to notice your fixed gaze. It will cheer him.

TIDES of grace, as of opportunity, are to be taken at the flood. The Pentecost sun went down on a church born in a day. Not here lies the wonder, but in this, rather, that we think it wonderful; that we see so few times of rapid ingathering and large God-ward movements of men which can at all compare with it. Some, thank God, have been seen. Would you have more? Then note those two things—that ten days of steadfast, expectant prayer, in which every believing soul took part, preceded Pentecost; and that it was when the church had first been filled with heavenly assurance, joy, and praise, that the testimony of her first preacher won the hearts of thousands.

THE WASTE OF WAR.

SELECTED BY LIDIA J. MILLER.

Give me the gold that war has cost.
 Before this peace-expanding day—
 The wasted skill, the labor lost,
 The metal treasure thrown away;
 And I will buy each rod of soil
 In every yet discovered land,
 Where hunters roam, where peasants toil,
 Where many-peopled cities stand.
 I'll cloth each shivering wretch on earth
 In needful, nay, in brave attire;
 Vesture befitting haquet mirth,
 Which kings might envy and admire.
 In every vale, on every plain,
 A school shall glad the gaze's sight,
 Where every poor man's child may gain
 Pure knowledge, free as air and light.
 In every crowded town shall rise
 Halls academic, amply graced,
 Where ignorance may soon be wise,
 And coarseness learn both art and taste.
 To every province shall belong
 Collegiate structures, and not few,
 Fill'd with a truth-exploring throng,
 And teachers of the good and true.
 In every free end peopled clime,
 A vast Valhalla hall shall stand,
 A marble edifice sublime,
 For the illustrious of the land;
 A Pantheon for the truly great,
 And wise, beneficent, and just;
 A place of wild and lofty state
 To honor or to hold their dust.
 A temple to attract and teach
 Shall lift its spire on every hill,
 Where pious men shall feel and preach
 Peace, mercy, tolerance, and good-will;
 Music of bells on Sabbath days,
 Round the whole earth shall gladly rise,
 And one great Christian song of praise
 Stream sweetly upward to the skies.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Entire Consecration.

BY CYRUS WALLICK.

All that we have and all that we are belong to the Lord; for he has made us what we are, and has given us what we possess. Unto him we are indebted for every morsel we eat, every garment we wear, and all that makes life pleasant, for the power to think a single thought, to speak a single word, or to do a single act, and for our very existence. It is our duty, therefore, to consecrate ourselves and all that we possess wholly to his service. All that we do, all that we say, and all that we think, should be to his honor and glory. Every year of our lives, every day of each year, and every moment of each day is his, and should be devoted to his service, with all that we possess, whether talents, education, wealth or influence. It is he that has given us these things, or the power of obtaining them, and the power of enjoying them; and we have no right to use them merely for selfish purposes. C. Wesley beautifully and comprehensively expresses what should be the prayer of every servant of God, in the following lines:

"All my actions sanctify,
 All my words and thoughts receive;
 Claim me for thy service, claim
 All I have and all I am.

"Take my soul and body's powers;
 Take my mem'ry, mind, and will,
 All my goods, and all my hours;
 All I know, and all I feel;
 All I think, or speak, or do;
 Take my heart, but make it new."

There is no danger of doing too much for the Lord: the danger is of not doing enough; for after we have done all that we are commanded, we are yet unprofitable servants, and have only done that which was our duty. See Luke 17: 10.

An unwillingness to submit ourselves wholly to the will of the Lord, shows a want of trust in him; for if we wholly trust in him, we will believe that all that he has commanded us is for our good. If we wholly trust in him, we will be ready to do all that we believe that he wishes us to do, without cavilling about the differences between the words "ought," "shall," and "must." If we are entirely consecrated to his service, we will be willing to deny ourselves of anything that might be a hindrance to our spiritual life. Our Master and exemplar before us denied himself, and we are not better than he. If we are unwilling to deny ourselves, we show that we do not properly appreciate the great gift of eternal life and happiness. If, in view of the great sacrifice which has been made for us by the Redeemer, and the great reward which he has promised to the faithful, we are yet unwilling to entirely submit ourselves to the will of the Lord, we are altogether unworthy of his favor, and he will be justified in casting us away from his mercy, and appointing our portion with the disobedient. How contemptible is a partial service of the Lord! It is an insult to his authority and wisdom. What better is partly serving the Lord than entirely serving the devil?

Reader, let me in conclusion ask you to follow the Lord wholly. Are you trying, as many professed Christians appear to be, to have the name of Christian and yet follow but a part of the commandments of the Lord? Then let me entreat you to consider well what I have written. Take warning from the example of Moses, who, although a good man, was on account of one sin denied admittance into the promised land. See Numbers 20: 12.

Brethren and sisters, let us not think that just because we have been properly baptized, or because we dress plainly, or because we do nobody any harm, that we can gain the favor of God and our eternal salvation, unless we serve him from the heart in all things. Let us heed the words of the apostle,—"VIAT-SOEVER ye do, do ALL to the glory of God." (1 Cor. 10: 31.)

"Not as Pleasing Men."

The singleness of purpose and motive which gave character and power to the Apostolic ministry of every age. To speak "not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth the hearts," should be no singular or exceptional thing among the ministers of God. Yet it is in reality among the difficult virtues. Men insist on being pleased, and it is only by pleasing them that they can be made to hear at all. The first, last, and constant requirement upon pastors, is either to draw or to hold and at any rate to satisfy, congregations. As to pleasing any higher authority, the minister is supposed to take care of that on his own private account, and nobody else need be concerned about it.

We hope not to deserve the reproach of the uncharitable for thinking that the number is very small of those who try sermons by any other test than the pleasure of listening to them. Something to startle by novelty, or to please by beauty, or to amuse by oddity, or to stimulate by emotional excitants, or to give the mind an intellectual treat—something to admire, on any terms, is the craving the pulpit must satisfy. Even among professed Christians there are too many who seem to go to church services only to "enjoy" them, and whose enjoyment is largely, if not extensively, critical. Everything is either "liked" or "disliked." Whether anything is remembered or worked into the life—whether they are in a way to be made better by what they hear—is neither here nor there.

Those whose profession is such that better things should be expected of them, it is often sadly true, try the services of the sanctuary by a worldly judgment. Singing is to them not praise to God, but a performance, to be admired or otherwise; and preaching is good, bad, or indifferent, for precisely the same reason that a lyceum lecture is. Their mental attitude is critical. They are connoisseurs of sermons. The preacher, like the actor, "lives to please," and he "must please to live." For, on "pleasing men" his salary too often depends. Worldliness with money may prove too much for humble piety.

So the minister who desires to serve the Master supremely, and to be to men their "servants for Jesus' sake," finds himself sometimes a strait betwixt two. He ought by all lawful means to commend himself to men, not for his own honor, not for their pleasure only, but that "by all means he may save some." How to do this without yielding to the temptation to let the means usurp the place of the end, is a question that may well exercise his most sanctified ingenuity and most prayerful diligence.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
"How Is This?"

BY M. M. ESHELMAN.

To S. S. Mohler.

My dear brother, your query, "How is This?" in No. 6, page 91, requires an answer; and in my weakness I shall try to give it some notice, keeping in view, however, that "brotherly kindness" which we have learned from Jesus.

Your query suggests two things in general, viz: that which is, and that which is not: 1. That which is—the Danish Mission; 2. The Western Mission, which is not.

The call from Scandinavia came to the church of the Brethren at Lanark, Ill.; and this church feeling alive to the welfare of the precious souls who asked for help, moved to supply the want. Feeling that it was an important call (similar to the one that came from the west for food a little more than a year ago), the church here sought the counsel and aid of neighboring churches, and the result was the brethren assembled in District Council at this place, Nov. 12th, 1875, to consider the matter. After one of the most solemn and impressive consultations ever held in this part of the State, it was agreed to send three brethren to Europe.

Had a similar call come direct to the church here from the west, south, or any other direction, I have no doubt it would have received the same attention. But unfortunately the calls from the west have all been directed to the Brotherhood at large; and since that does business through the A. M., and since the A. M. takes no hand in Missionary work, the calls, in a great measure, are unheeded. I know this ought not to be the case; but the trouble is, there are many things now-a-days that ought not to be. Apathy and indifference as to the more effectual spreading of the gospel are some of the ought-not-to-be's.

"Why not wait and ask the A. M. whether ministers should go to Europe to teach and baptize poor, precious souls?"

1. Because, in the words of an aged brother, "The commission of Jesus, 'Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature,' is the best commission ever given." The question of going or not going has been settled by the Lord himself. The only question then is, who should go? This is settled by the answer, any one who is well established and sound in the faith of the author of the commission.

2. Because the A. M. thus far has not been willing to undertake missionary work, but usually refers such matter back to the place where it originated.

3. Because the call was urgent, and seemed to demand immediate attention. But we will give that due regard to the A. M. that it deserves, and send our proceedings there for its approval or rejection. I do not believe there is a brother in Northern Illinois that wishes to rise above, or ignore, or treat disrespectfully the A. M. They think too much of their brethren to do anything disrespectfully of them. We acted in accordance with the best light we had.

"But why send so many?" 1. It was clear that one should go who could speak the Danish Language, since that is about the only language in the place from whence the call came, viz: North Denmark. 2. In South Denmark a majority of the people understand the German; hence it was thought good to send a German speaker. 3. It seemed good that an elder should go so that in case of church organizations the work could be attended to without delay. And then there is a field open in England for a brother to labor in. This country is within a few hours ride of Denmark; and if the brethren earnestly pray for those who have been chosen to go, much good may be done. But suppose only one soul is saved in the efforts, is not that alone a great and mighty work in the sight of God? If one soul is worth more than the whole world, is not one soul worth more than a few hundred dollars, which is a very small part of the world? But it is unwise to compare the value of a soul with dollars and cents.

Brother Hope will leave N. Y. for Bremen Feb. 29th. It is designed that he go on and find the best point for the brethren to locate; for they do not contemplate making a two or three weeks sojourn, but, as brother Eby remarked, remain a year or more if necessary. And I feel assured that those have been selected who will not be discouraged if they do not find success on every cross road and by-lane, but will, with patience and perseverance continue in the midst of every difficulty.

As soon as brother Hope arrives out, he will get $100. worth of tracts printed, and spread them among the people. If they do good, then more will be published; but if it becomes evident that no good will result, the balance of the Fund will be returned to be disposed of according to the wishes of the donors. One thing more:

The apostle says, "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." For my part I thought it "good to be zealously affected" in the "good thing" of sending the pure preached word to those who called for it from over the sea. I did not, do not, expect to gather any fame from the sending of the brethren. Neither do I believe any other brother expects anything of the kind. With earnest prayer, to God, with tears, and struggles without and within have we labored day and night, all because we loved our fellow-men and the cause of Christ. Fame and honor never entered our mind. If any one has any fame, thanks, honor, etc., to bestow, give them to God, our Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, to whom be praise forever. Could I have had my way, I would have said "Go not, For oh! how hard it was for me to part from my dear brother Hope with whom I have often wept and prayed. Yes, I would have much preferred that he remain here so that we might joy and weep together personally, but the Lord's will be done, not mine. And then, too there are the other dear brethren who have been deputed to go; we would all prefer their company to their absence, but the Lord's will be done not ours. I know that will be a trying hour when I must take the hand of my dear brother Enoch Eby, and say, Farewell! We have tried to love each other, and oh! the strings of parting will not be at all pleasant. But the Lord's will be done, not ours.

In conclusion permit me to say, dear brother, I hope that your concern and interest for the people of the west may never grow less; and that other Districts may be prompted to move in the matter of supplying the demand. Let each church become alive to the interests of those who have never heard the unmixed gospel of King Jesus. There are more reasons for preaching to those who never heard the pure words, than to preach every Sunday to those who will not obey. But in our zeal for the spread of the gospel, let us not forget to let it also spread in our hearts. Let not pride and folly creep into our own hearts while we are looking out at the unenlightened elsewhere. May God bless you and all saints.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Secretism.

BY JESSE STUTZMAN.

"We unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness."—Isa. v. 20.

While looking over the contents of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN No. 2, we rejoiced to find that brother S. Thomas dared to speak a word against the Hydra headed monster "Secretism;" that, too, right in one of his strongholds, Philadelphia, he "dared to beard the lion in his den." We hope since brother Thomas has brought the matter up for consideration, that we will have more upon the subject.

We have wondered very much for the last few months why we never see anything in our periodicals against this monstrous evil; and of all the many brethren that we have had the pleasure of hearing preach, there are but three who are endowed with commendable oratorical powers, (J. W. Stein, G. W. Studebaker, J. Quinter,) who have, so far as we know, raised their voices in public against the great evil; though many others we hope, are also discharging their duty in this direction. I have many times felt pressed to try to write something on this subject for publication, but always felt myself too small to cope with an enemy of such magnitude; and knowing myself to be unskillful in preparing matter for the press, do not now feel certain that our worthy editors will consider this article fit for publication; but we feel that the alarm should be sounded.

We were informed by a worthy brother a few days since, who, stated that he had a conversation with a neighbor who had taken about thirty degrees in Freemasonry; and said Mason told him, confidentially, that he thought he knew "at least a hundred Dunkards that belong to the order, and among them one of their leading men in conference;" but said he would "never tell who they are." I am not willing to believe that he is near the truth in the above statement, but am not prepared to say that it is all false; but even if it were, it might have its bearing on the minds of young men and boys, who might thus be led on until caught in the meshes of secretism, and kept in the lodge during life, and after death go to the grand lodge below. (Masons say above, but they are certainly in an error with regard to its locality.) I therefore feel that the matter needs exposition. That there is occasionally one "that is called a brother" that belongs to some secret order, we are compelled to admit; and if he is a Freemason he has taken an oath, when initiated, that the poor, deluded, heathen cannibal of the Sandwich Islands might even blush to repeat, and that, too, while in a kneeling posture, with the left hand under the Bible and the right hand on top. The following is a copy of the oath as given by Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, Chicago, Illinois. "I ——— of my own free will and accord, in the presence of Almighty God, and this worshipful lodge erected to him and dedicated to the Holy Saint John, do hereby and hereon most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear that I will always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal any of the secret arts, parts, or points of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry, which has been heretofore, may at this time, or shall at any future period be communicated to me as such, to any person or persons whomsoever, except it be to a true and lawful brother Mason, or within a regularly constituted lodge of Masons, and neither unto him or unto them, until by strict trial, due examination, or legal information I shall have found him or them as lawfully entitled to the same as I am myself. I furthermore solemnly promise and swear that I will not write, print, stamp, stain, cut, carve, mark or engrave them, or cause the same to be done upon anything movable or immovable, capable of receiving the least impression of a word, syllable, letter, or character, whereby the same may become legible or intelligible to myself or to any person under the whole canopy of heaven, and the secrets of Freemasonry be thereby unlawfully obtained through my unworthiness. To all of this I most solemnly promise and swear, with a firm and steadfast resolution to keep and perform the same without any equivocation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind whatever, binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by its roots, and buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, should I ever knowingly or willingly violate this my solemn oath or obligation as an entered apprentice Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same." And then the Worshipful Master says to the candidate, "In token of your sincerity, and to make this obligation more binding, you will disengage your hands and kiss the Holy Bible, which is now open before you."

Dear reader, if you have identified yourself with a conclave of darkness by taking upon yourself such a heathenish, heaven-daring, God-forbidden, imprecating obligation as the above, what can be your motive in also identifying yourself with the body of Christ? Christ positively said, "Swear not at all." Matth. 5: 34. Paul said, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Eph. 5: 11. Hear Christ again, "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other," &c. Matth. 6: 24.

Now, dear reader, if you belong to a secret organization, in view of the above Scriptures, and many more that we might refer you to, we appeal to you, in behalf of the cause of our glorious Redeemer, to separate yourself from that body of sin; but if you will not do that, then do not ask to be any longer identified with the church, as you will only be a hindrance to the cause of Christ, and will bring upon yourself greater condemnation over which to weep, groan, and gnash your teeth in the dark chambers of the doomed. And to those who contemplate joining a secret body we say, Halt! never take a leap in the dark. You are free yet; remain free. If you are once caught in the cobweb of secretism it will be a rare chance if you ever get loose; and if you do not get loose you will certainly realize what Paul tells us will take place where he says that Christ will come "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Some say they would not join the Masons, but see no harm in joining the Grangers. To such we say that Masonry is the oldest offspring, and Grangerism the youngest of the family of secretism. All have the same common father. "Abstain from all appearance of evil." 1 Thess. 5: 22. "In secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Irresolution.

BY LANDON WEST.

By this we mean a want of that determined spirit which one feels when he has fixed in his mind the object he wishes to gain. That it is a prevailing weakness, there can be no doubt; and it is seen among all classes, at all ages, and in both sexes. If it were not that we are placed where we are compelled to put forth an effort to live, the race had died away long ago. Man in his sinless state was an active being, and might have remained so, but since his fall, he is compelled to put forth some exertion on his part; for food and raiment do not come of themselves. Sin has, to an alarming extent, produced a kind of lethargy, or sluggish, slothful disposition, which is the first cause of more failures than misfortune or bad luck. Men know that they must have something to eat, but they put off the time to secure it as long as possible. They also know that they must have fire and fuel to cook it, and that is delayed till they must work or starve. They are also certain that clothing is indispensable, yet that effort is delayed until there are but two sides to the picture—work or go naked.

How many can now say that they were at one time in a condition when they might have secured a good home, a very comfortable living for themselves and their children, but did not, from the plain fact that they did not try at the right time! When the day of opportunity is gone by, faith and works are useless; they can only be effectual while the object for which they labor is within reach. See, for example, the children of Jacob. They had had a most flattering report from the promised land; yet they feared the giants in that country, and so did not put forth the effort which was necessary to be made at that time, and in consequence did not obtain it. Had they shown the resolution seen in Caleb and Joshua, thousands of souls would have lived to enjoy a happy life in Canaan, who did not live to get even a view of it. It is so at this present time. There are many (and we have found some of them) who say they know they ought to live pious, Christian lives, and that they intend to do it, but that the time has not yet come, or that they cannot yet see their way clear, or that they are afraid they cannot hold out. In reply to all these we will say that the probabilities are that they never will; they have not the resolution to make an effort.

We, not long ago, heard a friend speak of an acquaintance, a young man,—at present engaged at a large salary in a very paying business—who says, that all that a man needs in order to succeed well in business is plenty of “snap,” and the reason why some men do not succeed is because they do not have it. You may call it “snap” or what you please, but it is needed everywhere. It is needed by the farmer, the tradesman, the agent, the editor, the statesman, and the minister; in any other calling that a man may have, he needs a resolute spirit to move him toward the end he has in view, and that spirit almost invariably gains the victory. The truth is, providence always helps those who make an effort to help themselves. “He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster.” “The slothful man saith there is a lion in the way, a lion is in the streets.” “Go to the ant, thou slug-gard; consider her ways, and be wise, which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest.” Proverbs 6: 6—8.

The Divine Presence.

And he said, my presence shall go with thee (Exodus xxxiii. 14).

The children of Israel had grievously sinned. The cloudy pillar had disappeared; the anger of the Lord was kindled, and the courage of Moses failed. Earnestly he pleaded in behalf of the erring people, and at length he prevailed. The Lord answered his servant, that his gracious presence should still accompany him in leading Israel to Canaan, the promised rest.

God's presence, reader! Reflect on this high honor. That he who reigns supreme amid the hosts of heaven—who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, should condescend to become the friend, the companion of sinful, erring men. Was ever pilgrim more honored? Ever traveler in better company? Yet God has ever been, and ever will be, the companion of them that fear him. Enoch walked with God. Abraham was addressed in these words, “Walk before me, and be thou perfect.” Christian! hast thou not also realized the fulfillment of the gracious promise? Yes. Methinks I hear you say, It has been the mainstay, the very life of my faith and trust. In the hour of trial it has enabled me to lift up my head on high, and to exclaim even from the deep waters, yet will I rejoice in the Lord. I will joy in the God of my salvation.

To the true believer there is no promise so precious and encouraging. It nerves him for conflict. It fills him with hope. With God by his side, what enemy need he fear? What path refuse to enter? Is he stript of worldly prosperity, he has one who can a thousand fold make up for the loss. Is he called to resign the loved and cherished, and to pass through the troubled waters of affliction? “I am still with thee,” calms the anguish of his soul and is as balm to the wounded spirit. Whatever else may be taken from him he knows that if he keeps near to God, God will keep near to him; that amid flame and flood, amid storm and calm, in pain and health, in peril and safety, the eternal God will be his refuge, and underneath the everlasting arms.

Reader, do you sometimes feel that God is not near you; that your confidence, your faith, your strength have failed you? Ah! may not this be the reason: you have wandered from God. His presence is near, but you perceive it not. The world, its joys, and pleasures, and cares have come between, and darkness is spreading all around and within you. Oh! haste thee to thy Father and thy God! Away from these passing vanities, and once more he will take thee by the hand, and lift up upon thee the light of his countenance. Let your past experience of the joy of his presence constrain you to count all things else but lost, that you may have the fulfillment, the realization of this sweet promise. For if ever you have truly known what it is to have God by your side, then you know how precious, how delightful is the companionship. It can make the cottage bright and warm; it can sweeten the hard crust, and make even a cup of water blessed. It can inspire the soul with peace and triumph in the dark night-season of sorrow, and breathe sweet music the scene of sadness and of gloom.

Christian! be it yours to walk with God. Strive to behold him by faith amid your joys and sorrows, in the family and in the world, in the secrecy of the closet and in the daily walks of life. See him as he fills your cup and makes it run over. See him as he dashes it from your lips, not in anger, but to draw you to himself. See him in the smiles and love of the unbroken family circle, and in the sorrow and sadness which you must feel as you gaze on the empty chair, or the picture on the wall. See him leading thee onward, step by step, never failing nor forsaking thee, but faithful unto all his promises.—Selected.

HAVE we been hungry? We shall know how to feed others. Have we been thirsty? We know how refreshing a cup of cold water will be to those who are fainting and weary. Have we wanted sympathy and one kind word? We shall know how to comfort others, with the comfort Jesus gave us. Has a sword entered our soul? The thoughts of others are to be revealed. We must take affliction if we would have internal revelation.

It is much easier to find a score of men wise enough to discover the truth than to find one intrepid enough, in the face of opposition, to stand up for it.

For The Young.

How Do You Pray Now.

"How do you pray now, grandpa?" said a little four-year-old boy in Forestville, Ct., as he stood looking up into the face of his grandpa, who stood with his overcoat on, just ready to start for the cars and return home some forty miles away in Westfield, Massachusetts. He had come down the night before to see his son, arriving wet and weary, and failing to find him at home, he had waited till morning, and was now preparing to depart without seeing him; and having over-slept, and being in some haste to reach the cars in season, family worship had been omitted.

The little boy had been at grandpa's house the previous Summer, and had often listened while the good man prayed, and now, missing the accustomed devotion, he inquired, "How do you pray now grandpa?"

The man's heart was touched by the child's question.

"I'll let you see how I pray," he replied, and falling on his knees he poured out his heart to God imploring blessings upon the grandson, and upon his father and mother,—praying that the whole household might be blessed and saved; and then hastening to the railway station he returned to his home.

By and by the little boy's father came home, and the child ran to him and said, "Grandpa was here, and he prayed for you, and me, and mamma:—and papa, can't you pray?"

The Father was not a praying man, though a child of many prayers, and the question of his boy pierced him to his very heart. Very soon he was found among those who were seeking the knowledge of the Lord, and the salvation of their souls.

In a few days the grandfather received a letter from his son who wrote, "I am the happiest man alive," and proceeded to tell how he had sought and found the Saviour. And with it came another letter from another son, who had been away from home, and from whom nothing had been heard for years, and who reported his whereabouts and closed his letter as never before, with "God bless you."

The old pilgrim's heart and eyes were full. For twenty-five years he had prayed every day for his boy that he might come to the knowledge of the truth, and sometimes had almost feared that his prayers had been in vain, but now the answer had come, and so wonderfully, by the ministry of a little child, and with no human skill or power; and when they had devoutly given thanks to God, the old man's little daughter of thirteen, spoke and said, "And a little child shall lead them."

Let the children of the Most High be encouraged to pray in faith, to pray without ceasing; to pray and never faint. The day of blessing will come ere you are aware, and a faithful Creator will not forget his creatures' cries.—The Christian.

The Dying Girl's Penny.

A little girl attended a missionary meeting, and sat upon her father's knee. While listening with deep attention to the speech of the missionary who was describing the miseries and cruelties of the heathen, she was seen to weep.

On her return home, she said to her father, "Father, could I not do something to send the gospel to the heathen?"

He replied: "What can you do? You are but a little girl, and have nothing to give."

To which she answered, "Mother gives me a penny a week; I could give that?"

"So you shall," said the father; "and I will buy you a little box to put it in."

An earthenware box with a hole in it was purchased, and every week did the little one drop into it her penny.

Not many weeks had passed when she was taken ill and died. Some time after her burial, the father took the box to the minister, and putting it into his hand, said, "This box belonged to my little daughter." And then he told about the missionary meeting, and added, "I have had no heart to break it myself, but have brought it to you; if you break it, you will find seventeen pence."

The minister did so, but found there eighteen pence. The father was surprised, and could not account for the additional penny. He therefore inquired if it was not seventeen weeks since the meeting, and found it to be so. When he returned home, he told his wife of his difficulty, and asked her if she knew where the other penny could have come from.

"Oh, yes," she said, "I can tell you. The day before our dear child died, a neighbor, calling to see her, observed that she was suffering from thirst, and on leaving said, 'Here dear is a penny for you to buy an orange.' When she left us our little one called me to her bedside and said, 'Mother, true, I am very thirsty, and the orange would be very nice; but I would rather you would fetch me my missionary box, that I might drop the penny in there. I carried her to the box, and it was the last thing she did before she died. With a trembling hand and a faint smile on her pale cheek, she dropped the money in, and that penny made up the eighteen pence found in her box."—The Christian.

Penmanship.

Few of our boys and girls know the value of a good handwriting; if they knew it, they would spare no pains to acquire it. To many a young man, a good handwriting is worth five hundred dollars a year; yes, and to not a few, a thousand dollars a year, or more. A good hand or a bad hand will turn the scale of success or defeat in securing valuable posts of labor.

Then, if you write to one who does not know you, your letter gives him his first impression of you. If it is a badly expressed and badly written letter, he sets you down, perhaps far below your real worth. This is an injustice to yourself. Moreover, a badly written letter, or article, or report takes up the time of the reader needlessly; and this is a wrong to him. Acquire a clear, readable hand. This you can do. Then, if you can learn to write with ease, rapidity and beauty, so much the better. A Christian should try to do well everything that he does.—S. S. Visitor.

A Touching Incident.

Some time since a little boy came to one of our city missionaries, and holding out a dirty and well-worn bit of printed paper, said: "Please, sir, father sent me to get a clean paper like that."

Taking it from his hand, the missionary unfolded it, and found it was a page containing that beautiful hymn of which the first stanza is as follows:

"Just as I am, without one plea
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou biddest me come to Thee,
Oh, Lamb of God, I come!"

The missionary looked down with interest into the face earnestly upturned to him, and asked the little boy where he got it, and why he wanted a clean one.

"We found it, sir," he said, "in sister's pocket after she died; and she used to sing it all the time she was sick, and loved it so that father wanted to get a clean one to put in a frame to hang it up. Won't you give us a clean one, sir?"—Guardian.

THE RITE OF FEET-WASHING AMONG THE BAPTISTS.

Perhaps it is not generally known that the washing of feet as a Christian rite has been practised by our Baptist brethren in some of their congregations. Such, however, is the fact. Bishop Haven, of the Methodist church, gives, in the New York Independent, the following account of a communion meeting in a Baptist church of the colored people in the South: "The table was cleared of its fine linen and sacramental vessels, and revealed a plain white table, underneath which we had previously seen pails of water—or buckets, as they call them here. Pails is an unknown word in the Southern vocabulary. These were put on the table and a dozen tin basins were placed there. The preacher got up, and evidently felt that his hour had come. He commenced an earnest discourse on the coming ordinance. He is a bright man, in color and in brains. He said: 'If you can convince me that this is not according to Scripture, I will abandon it. But to my mind it is as clear as the sun in the firmament. I find in the 13th of John that it says: "And supper being ended he riseth from supper and laid aside his garments and took a towel and girded himself. After that he poureth water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet.'" Now, if you can prove to me that this is not a duty, then you must prove that the Scriptures are not true. I want to go to heaven. I must go over this point,' putting the forefinger of his right hand on that of his left. 'I can't go round it so, nor so,' swinging the point of the right finger round the end of the other. 'I must go straight over it so! If I don't, I go to Hell. Now, if I must take that road to get to Heaven, I'd likes to know if I can get to Heaven any other way than by obeying the commands of Christ. "Do this as ye have seen me," he says. We must do it just as he says. I can't read; but I's got a good head on my shoulders and I can see as well as any man. Show me how I can get over that point and go round it,' and he hammered his finger-nail with the other finger most fiercely. 'I have preached the gospel twenty-five years, and I can't see it any other way. The brother that ordained me has read the Bible through twelve times, and he says he can't see any other way.' As all the the Bible authority and order for this service is in one chapter, without analogies or types, it did not seem necessary to read it through twelve times in order to master the 13th. of John.—But logic is logic."

After completing his account of the scene, the Bishop adds: "This ceremony is not confined to the colored people. They learn it from the whites, of whom there are or were many churches in the South. They are called 'Primitive Baptists.' The largest society, it is said, in Atlanta before the war, was of this sect. It was broken up by the war; but it is reorganizing. They are devout in this duty as they understand it, and seem to get shouting happy in discharging it."

As Bishop Haven is a man of reading and knowledge, and stands high in the Methodist church, we are much surprised that he should say as he did, in the language already quoted, "all the Bible authority and order for this service, (meaning feet-washing) is in one chapter," since there are various allusions to it in the Scriptures. He evidently has not read the Scriptures with care, or if he has, he had forgotten some things contained in them when he used the language above quoted.

As a further testimony that the Washing of Feet as a Christian rite has been practiced by some Baptists, we give the remarks of Dr. Benedict upon the subject as we find them in his work called, Fifty Years among the Baptists, pp. 162, 163. He says: "From time immemorial this oriental custom, so often referred to in the history of the early Christians, has been observed by some groups of Baptists, in a religious manner in some parts of the country. In early life, I was acquainted with such a company, who, being Bible Christians to the letter, felt themselves bound to comply with the following direction of Christ, namely: 'If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done unto you.'

"The general exposition of this passage, or the sense in which most of our divines understand it, namely, that the Savior here meant to teach his disciples humility and hospitality, did not satisfy the old-fashioned Baptists to whom I have alluded, and many others of their class. In their opinion, it was in some sense a divine institution."

From the foregoing testimonies from Bishop Haven and Dr. Benedict it would seem that the rite of Washing Feet has been observed by some Baptist churches, and we regret that it is not universally observed by our Baptist brethren, and by all others who acknowledge Christ to be their Lord and Master. For he said: 'Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well: for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.'

We also regret that the colored Baptist brethren that Bishop Haven witnessed observing the rite of washing feet, had not been more correctly instructed in regard to the manner in which it should be observed. According to the Bishop, only one foot of each person was washed.—And as he seems to have had good opportunities for seeing the performance, what he says we presume was correct. Our own Fraternity has been represented as observing it as the bishop saw it performed. And as others we know have done it in that way, from that circumstance, perhaps, we are presumed to do it in the same way by those who have never seen us perform it. We however wash one another's feet and not one another's foot, for our Lord said, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet." And Peter said to him, "Dost thou wash my feet?" These expressions clearly indicate that the feet of each member are to be washed.

AN IMPORTANT CORRECTION.

The following from the pen of our faithful agent and worthy correspondent, J. R. Denlinger, of Dayton, Ohio, contains some important information, and we hope it will lead to further light on this subject:

"We have long been looking for some of our dear brethren to say something in reference to an article that went out in the Vindicator,—in the November number, 1875,—concerning a report or a reporter. It is generally understood that this was by consent of the churches, which is certainly a mistake. I know this from the fact that the churches here were not consulted—there was nothing said about a report or a reporter. Even the church in which the editor resides was not consulted. This being the case, we wish to ask our brother through your columns, why he published an article calculated to make the impression that it really was the desire of the brethren of Southern Ohio not to have a reporter at our next Annual Meeting. No wonder that the editor of the Pilgrim, in No. 45, expressed himself as being much surprised that a district professing so much loyalty to the Annual Meeting as Southern Ohio, should do so. It has much surprised many; but we do hope the matter may still be better explained and the surprise of many be removed. We do not think, in order to do justice to the question of a report or no report, which will come up at our next Annual Meeting, that this matter should be allowed to go out through the brotherhood without an explanation; and I think it would be well for the churches to be consulted concerning this matter, particularly southern Ohio. If this were done, our dear brother could speak for the churches, and not before."

In connection with the foregoing we wish to say that our brethren everywhere would do well to be prepared to meet this question at our next annual conference. It will be remembered that the subject was only deferred until next A. M. (Minutes 1875, Query 8), and it was not determined how the question should be decided. It was proposed that all the churches should be consulted, but when the question was deferred there was no mode of procedure laid down. This being the case it is possible that the next Annual Meeting may not be any better prepared to decide the question than was the conference of 1875. No doubt we would all feel very sorry should this be the case; but if there be no more done at home than has yet been done, so far as our knowledge extends, we can expect nothing better. Let us call attention to a few steps that should be taken in order to be prepared to meet and decide this question.

1. Let every church vote for or against a full report in pamphlet form, and send the result by its delegates, or by letter, to its District Council. Where District Councils have already been held, and this step has not been taken, the churches should yet cast their votes, and make authentic returns to the delegates chosen to represent them in the next A. M. If this first step be not taken, we may expect a great deal of controversy, and possibly, to little purpose in the end.

2. The delegates to the district meetings should record the number of churches voting for and also the number voting against the report. If a majority of churches in any district is in favor of a report, this will be the sentiment of that district, and the delegates to A. M. must so report it, and vice versa. It is however important that the delegates to the A. M. keep a correct record of the number of churches voting each way. If these first two steps be carefully taken, when the delegates meet in Annual Conference they will be prepared for any emergency; but if these be neglected, we fear there will be trouble.

When this question shall come up at the next Annual Meeting, the first question will be, How shall we proceed to decide it? We imagine we can see brother A. rising up and saying, "We represent the Middle District of — and we hope there will be no discussion. Let us present the sentiments of the several districts here represented, and then let the majority have it. Or, if it be preferred, let us present the votes of the churches pro and con and give it to the majority. We are prepared for either of these, but arguments have been exhausted and we want no more discussion."

Next brother X. says: "We represent the Eastern District of — and are not prepared to dispose of this question in either of the ways suggested by brother A. We are not favorable to any farther discussion; but as the last Annual Meeting merely deferred the subject and did not determine the course to be pursued, nor instruct us to take a vote of the churches or the sentiments of the districts, we have done nothing in the case. We are here to assist in deciding this question, but are not prepared to make such reports as brother A. suggests."

In these two short speeches you have a fair sample of the opening out on this question, at our next Annual Meeting unless the preliminary steps already suggested be taken. And if the first two speeches will be similar to those of A. and X., as reported above, we will allow our readers to guess at the number and character of those that will follow, and at the probable results. B.

Now for the first time inside of two months are we up with our letters. How good we feel over it! We are sorry to find that there have been a good many misunderstandings, oversights and errors during this busy season. Our attention has been called to a number of failures, and so far as possible the required changes and corrections have been made. Most of our disappointed patrons have been very patient and have written to us with such kindness that shows that they appreciate our difficult task. We thank all such for their sympathy and forbearance. A very few, however, did not manifest quite so much long suffering. We do not blame them very much. It must be very trying when a person's name is flagrantly misspelt, or the paper is sent to the wrong office, or, perhaps, has been overlooked entirely and has not been sent at all. Now we are fully ready—waiting, willing, anxious—to make all corrections as soon as notified. Come right along, then, and tell us what you want, and we will serve you at once. You need not spend four or five cents to write a letter, providing you can state your business clearly on a POSTAL CARD. B.

OUR MANUSCRIPT BOX—CONTINUED.
No. 3. A reply to brother D. P. Saylor's article on Preaching and Prophesying, by sister M. J. S. Huntington Ind. From this article we glean the following:

"The text, reads, Every man praying or or prophesying having his head covered, dishonereh his head; but every woman that prayeth or prophesying with her head uncovered, dishonoreth her head. Now if it is the supreme duty for the sisters to wear a covering all the time, The brothers would be under the same obligation to go bareheaded all the time. Would they not, brother? Do not ministering brethren often accompany sinners to church and try to persuade them to forsake sin and seek after righteousness? Do not brethren often prophesy in the wheat field, corn field, wherever they meet with sinners? I ask, do the brethren take their hats off every time if the weather is too hot or too cold? I have heard sisters say they cannot endure to wear a cap on week days, when the weather is very warm. I have read a great many strong arguments on the cap question, in favor and against. I have nothing to say against any sister's wearing a cap for a covering, if she thinks a cap is the only true covering; but if she wears it to please some brothers or sisters, it will avail her no more than if she would wear a plain bonnet. Works without faith are dead. I am positive that the sisters have to wear something for a covering when they bow before the Lord to pray but I think anything that is plain and common will answer for a covering.

No. 4. The Sabbath Day. D. A. B.—This brother wants to know why brethren in writing or speaking so often say, "Keep the Sabbath holy," or "Rememher the Sabbath of the Lord," &c. He does not want to criticise, but he is surrounded by Sabbatarians, who are not slow to take advantage of such expressions. He inquires farther, "Why not say 'the first day of the week' or 'the Lord's day'?" These questions have some importance attached to them, especially as we have no precedent in the New Testament Scriptures of the first day of the week being called "the Sabbath," "the holy Sabbath," or "the Sabbath of the Lord." It is not to be assumed that it is wrong to designate "the Lord's day" in either of these ways; but we should know and should be able to tell why we do it. It may properly be called Sabbath because it is observed as a day of rest, and "the holy Sabbath," because it is devoted to holy uses, and "the Sabbath of the Lord," because it is "the Lord's day" and a day of rest—a Sabbath. We might publish this article in full, but it would be likely to provoke controversy on this subject to no advantage. There are books and pamphlets in which about everything is said that can be said on this Sabbath question; and we hope those who feel disposed to engage in the controversy will do it elsewhere. We have no objections to admitting practical articles on the duties of the Lord's day. B.

Brother A. Molsbee of Hawkins Co., Tenn., Feb. 6th, says:

"We have had a very open winter until the first of the month, when we had the deepest snow we have had for several years. The snow fell on Tuesday night. It was about 7 inches deep with us; but the south land is nearly bare again."

ELDER Isaac Price, of Schuylkill, Pa., in reference to a full report of the proceedings of our Annual Meetings says:

"Let the question be, a full report in pamphlet form, at the expense of those asking for the report. Let there be no debate—simply take the vote yea or nay. Argument has been exhausted."

ELDER John Knisley, Plymouth, Marshall county, Ind., says:

"We have very wet and warm weather this winter, as much as I ever saw in my life. But for as changeable as the weather is it is very healthy so far. May the Lord bless all our dear brethren and sisters to prove faithful until death, and let all be engaged to bring many souls into the fold of God, while we have the opportunity to do so, for the time will soon come when we can no more work."

BROTHER A. Molsbee sends us the following item on church news from the Cedar Creek church, Tenn:

"There is nothing that does the Christian more good than to hear how the cause of Primitive Christianity is progressing. It was a great desire of the apostles to hear how the churches were getting along. This same desire is still in the Christian mind. But when we read of the good work prospering at other places and at home we are upon a stand-still, and sometimes on a decline, it should do or it does us good, and makes us try to be more faithful so that the Lord would receive his word in our midst.

Elders H. Garst and J. Wine paid us a visit, and labored very zealously with us from the 25th of Dec. to the 30th, and preached the word with power, and a great interest was manifested. The meeting was continued by our home preachers until the second of Jan., 1876. On the 9th of January there were three precious souls buried with Christ by baptism, and one more applicant to be baptized at our next meeting the Lord willing. We believe there are others almost persuaded to take up their cross. Our prayers are for the prosperity of the church. Brethren, pray for us.

BROTHER Hylton, of Floyd Co., Va., in a late letter says:

"We have had a very open winter so far; but one snow to cover the ground, and that only lay a few days. There has been a good deal of sickness, and still is, in our country, owing to so much warm, wet weather. Our family is in common health. Thank the Lord for his abundant mercy toward us poor, unworthy beings.

BROTHER J. W. Moats, of Polk Co., Iowa, Feb. 10th, writes:

On the 11th of Dec., 1876, brethren J. H. Filmore, of Shelby county, Iowa, came here and preached for us about a week. His labors were crowned with much success. Ten were added to the church by baptism. They were all young persons, brethren's children, aged from sixteen to twenty five. Also, brethren Daniel Deardoff and Melcher Newcomer of Illinois, were here and labored for us a few days. May the seed sown, like bread cast upon the waters, be found after many days.

BROTHER J. M. Baily, of Salem, Jewell county, Kansas, sends the following item of news:

There have been several added to the church here in the past year. Ives, Porter, and myself held a meeting and seven came out on the Lord's side. There were many more almost persuaded to become Christians. Those seven were baptized on last Sunday in the White Rock River. They shouldered the cross and went down into the icy grave in obedience to their heavenly Master's will. Brethren, we have no more ministers here to help us labor for the Lord; and we cannot nigh fill all the calls for preaching in this country. If you can send us no ministers, send us reading matter that we can hand to the people. I have been asked for something to read; but I have given all that I have, and have not the means to pay for more. Please send some pamphlets.

From brother Cyrus Wallick, Ionia Co., Mich., Feb. 20th, we have this:

Brother M. T. Baer of St. Joseph Co., came among us, the brethren of the Thorn Apple District, the latter part of January. He was with us over two weeks, and preached. The key-note of his sermons was the Scriptures as they are, without reference to the isms of men.—Several were baptized, one was reclaimed, and the members were encouraged.

Will some one please send us the address of Nathan Littler? He wants us to drop a few lines of information to him, but he has failed to give us his post-office.

BROTHER Christian Hope our Danish Missionary has embarked for Europe.—We have a postal card from him dated at New York, Feb. 26th, bearing the following message:

Dear Brother:—We leave for Europe to-day on the steamer Salier. Wishing you, and all the beloved ones God's blessing, we must bid you all farewell. Remember us when it goes well with you. Yours in love, CHH. HOPE.

It is very pleasing and encouraging to see what an interest is being manifested in sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor. No doubt these contributions are cheerfully given, and with such gifts and such giving the Lord is well pleased. We have often expressed our confidence in our brethren, that, when they see any thing to be a duty, and have an opportunity offered, they will perform it. The prompt and liberal manner in which our brethren and sisters are contributing to the Poor Fund, confirms this conviction. We confess, however, that it is a little difficult to get some to see that it is their duty to give a part of their precious gold and or silver or greenbacks for such charitable uses. It is not our purpose to say that they are not willing to learn their duty in this and other things, but education and habits of thought and feeling are hard to overcome. We are progressing, if not as fast as might be desirable, at least as fast as we could reasonably expect. If we could all have our eyes opened sufficiently to see Jesus in the poor, what a wonderful effect it would have on us! How willingly and liberally would we offer our "gifts—gold, frankincense and myrrh!" B.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

Historical.

In the year 1811, there was, in the south-eastern part of Fayette county, Pa., in the neighborhood of Markleysburg, a small congregation of Mennonites, who had no regular minister to preach for them. About this time brother George Hinebaugh, a minister of the Brethren, of the Elk Lick church, would occasionally preach in the neighborhood of these Mennonites; and in this same year (1811) he baptized Magdalena Thomas, wife of Michael Thomas, and mother of Elder Jacob M. Thomas. She was the first person baptized in this church. Brother Hinebaugh continued his visits, and, in the course of three years, the number baptized had increased so that in the fall of 1814 they appointed a lovefeast at the house of brother Jacob Fike, one mile from Markleysburg. Elder Samuel Garber, of Rockingham county, Va., was present, and officiated at this meeting.—An election was held for one speaker and one deacon. The lot fell on Jacob Fike, speaker, and Alexander Thomas, deacon,—the former father-in-law and the latter uncle to Elder Jacob M. Thomas. Then and there was this church organized. It is now known as the Sandy Creek church, W. Va.

About this time brother Stuckman, a minister of the Jacob's Creek church, Pa., and brother Leatherman, of George's Creek, Pa., would occasionally come and preach for this newly organized church. In 1818 John Boger, a deacon of the Berlin church, moved into this church.—In 1824 an election was held for two speakers and two deacons. John Boger and Samuel Hazelett were chosen speakers, and Christian Musser and a brother Landman, deacons. Up to this time all the preaching was in German, Samuel Hazelett being the first English speaker elected. This same year, 1824, brother James Kelso, a minister of the Cumberland Valley church, Md., moved into the bounds of this church. Now, ten years after its organization, there were in this church, four speakers—two German and two English—three deacons, and, as near as we can learn, 30 members. From 1824 to 1834 the church had but few additions. In 1835 Jac. M. Thomas and Geo. Moyer were elected deacons. In 1836, or about that time, Jacob Fike (minister) moved into Ohio, and J. Kelso (minister) into another congregation, and a choice was made for two speakers and two deacons. Jacob M. Thomas and George Moyer were chosen speakers, and John M. Thomas and Samuel Boger deacons. In 1841 Andrew Umbel and Michael M. Thomas were elected speakers, and Joseph Zimmerman and Joseph M. Thomas, deacons, brethren Musser and Landman (deacons) being now dead. In 1845 George J. Thomas, Christian Fike and Christian Thomas were elected deacons. In 1850 this church built her first meeting house, known as the Salem church.—In the fall of this year, 1850, at the first lovefeast held in their new house, Jacob M. Thomas was promoted to the eldership. Samuel Hazelett now being dead, and George Moyer, from some cause, having left the church and attached himself to the fraternity known as the Shoemakers, both being ministers, at this same meeting P. J. Brown and Christian Harader were elected speakers—both English. In 1852 John Boger died, and the German now ceased to be spoken. In 1856 Christian Harader (minister) moved to Iowa. In 1857 Samuel Umbel, Larken Hall, and J. M. Bennet were chosen ministers, and John Seese, Solomon Workman, and Franklin Shirrer, deacons. In 1858 F. C. Barnes was elected deacon, and Jacob Beeghley, minister, moved here.

In the spring of 1861 several series of meetings were held by the labors of P. J. Brown, Jacob M. Thomas, and Jacob Beeghly, which resulted in the addition of 91 by baptism and 5 reclaimed. This same year George Moyer came back to the church again. In 1863 Joseph M. Thomas, deacon, moved to Ohio; Larken Hall, minister, to Iowa; and F. C. Barnes elected minister and M. J. Thomas deacon. In 1864 P. J. Brown, minister, and J. Zimmerman, deacon, moved to O., and Jas. A. Ridenour, minister, moved into this church. In 1864 George Moyer died. In 1866 M. J. Thomas was elected minister; and in 1867 Henry Griffith, Henry Turney, John Romesburgh, Jacob Beeghly, and Samuel Thomas were elected deacons. In 1869 Joseph Recknor was elected minister, and Joseph Guthrie deacon. In 1870 John Romesburgh died; in 1871 Samuel Boger, deacon, died; in 1872 Henry Turney, deacon, died, and John Schrock, deacon, moved into this church. In 1873 Jacob Rush was elected minister, and Ezra Thomas and P. Strauser, deacons. In 1874 John Wilhelm was elected deacon. In 1874 Harrison Glover, deacon, moved to Nebraska, and Elder Solomon Buckalew moved into this church. So at this date, 1875, 61 years after the organization, this church has 9 ministers—2 of whom are Elders—14 deacons, and a membership of about 400.

Eighteen ministers have been elected in this church and twenty-eight deacons.

Of the ministers, 4 have died, 1 is in Missouri, 1 in Ohio, 1 in Iowa, 1 in Westmoreland county, Pa., 1 in Garrett county, Md., and 9 are still at home.

Of the deacons, 7 have died, 2 are in Ohio, 1 in Nebraska, 5 are now speakers, and 13 are still at home.

PLATTSBURG, Mo., Feb. 16, 1876.

Brethren Editors:

Having been a reader of the Christian Family Companion from its infancy, and knowing that it bears words of truth and comfort to all parts of the brotherhood, as it surely does to us in the West, and since we never see any church news in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from the Smith Fork church, I have decided to write a few lines which I believe will be of interest to some. Although there is not much contributed from this church, the paper is always perused carefully, and we have reason to believe it is the means of doing much good. We always look to its coming with anxiety, and receive it with joy; and I know I can say of a truth that nowhere does it receive a more welcome reception, or is it wished greater success, than in the little church in Clinton Co., Mo.

To show that we have not been wholly idle in the work pertaining to the Master's house, I will say that brother Honberger, of the Hamilton congregation, came to us on the 6th instant, on a mission of love, and stayed and preached for us over a week. The result was that 10 precious souls have said by their actions, that they are tired of sin, and have enlisted under the banner of King Emmanuel, by being baptized into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, thus showing to the world that they are not ashamed of Christ and his commandments, that he may not be ashamed of them before his heavenly Father and the holy angels.

Truly it was a season of refreshment.—As we journey through this desert, it will indeed be an oasis to which we can look back and say, "It was good to stop and rest awhile, for we all partook anew of the water of which if we drink we shall not thirst any more."

Fathers wept over their sons, and mothers prayed for their daughters; brethren went in each other's arms. When we come to think of the "heart felt religion," that is the popular theme of the day, I think if it does not exist among the Brethren, it does not anywhere. We know the angels rejoiced to see the ranks of the adversary scatter before the powerful weapons of Jesus and his love.

Brother Honberger did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, and that, too, in such plain, unmistakable terms, that every earnest seeker after righteousness might see and understand. The Scripture which says, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine," has been verified with us, for some went away declaring that if such were the footsteps of Jesus, they would never walk therein. If we are to be rewarded even to the giving of a cup of cold water, how great will be his reward, since one soul is of more value than the whole world. May the prayers of God's people ascend in his behalf, that he may be the means of turning many from the error of their ways; and let our prayers ever go upward for those who have so lately put on Christ, that they may ever walk in him; and so much the more when we consider that they are all very young, save one. They will have to endure the heat and burden of the day. May God give them grace sufficient for every time of need. And may those also who are so dilatory about the Master's business, and so neglectful of their soul's salvation, become weary and find rest at the foot of the cross, before it is forever too late, is the earnest desire of one who feels an interest in their welfare.

That we may all anchor safely in the haven of rest, is the prayer of a youthful sister.

Visit to Gage County, Nebraska.

Brethren Editors:

Please insert in your columns a brief report of our visit to the brethren in Gage county, Nebraska. Brother Martin Spire and myself arrived at Beatrice on Jan. 7th. Object, to find suitable locations.—Our attention was drawn to this place by the article of brother Price in Companion and Visitor, No. 38, p. 621, of 1875. We met a Christian-like reception at brother Geo. Gil's, 1-2 miles northwest of Beatrice, at brother Wm. Price's, 7 miles north-east of Beatrice, at brother Henry Brubaker's and Isaac Fry's, 3 miles south-east of Beatrice, and at brother Peter Brubaker's in the town of Beatrice. We also met with other dear brethren and kind friends. All have our heart felt thanks for their unmerited kindness to us while enjoying their pleasant associations. We found the members in a live and healthy condition in this young and promising branch, and we formed a high estimation of their qualifications for future usefulness and prosperity. We met with the brethren and friends at but two meetings, which were well attended, good attention and good order being also manifested. We were quite favorably impressed with the society here. The morals seem to be better here than any I have found in the West. We soon formed a strong attachment for the brethren and friends and their beautiful country, and made selections of land near the Brethren. Mine was near that which our worthy brother and assistant editor had chosen, owned by friend Crothers, who has been so liberal to the Brethren in giving of his lands to ministering brethren, and selling on easy terms, and at reasonable rates to the Brethren in particular. So far as we saw his lands we can say they will recommend themselves to purchasers, being convenient to timber, water and rock, markets, &c.

We also found a healthy and agreeable climate. While there we saw some plowing. The roads were smooth and dry, with no indications that they had ever been muddy. The soil and seasons can be safely calculated by the productions, and we found an abundant storage of corn, wheat, potatoes, hay and all vegetables. Fruit is as yet very limited; but we have learned that peaches were raised last season. We also saw fine and thrifty young groves of maple, cottonwood, &c., on prairie farms; also some fine O-age fences, and we were assured that where due attention is given they will be a success. We also greatly admired the Big Blue River, its abundant and pure waters, with its numerous tributaries, all lined with good qualities of timber. Beatrice, the county seat, is on the Blue River, a well-built and beautiful country town. We were surprised to see the large stone buildings and the amount of business done here. So far as our observation goes, we find the statements in brother Price's article above mentioned, correct, to which we would call the attention of all that are interested. They can also address him at Beatrice. The latitude is that of Philadelphia, and on the central line of emigration westward. Suffice it to say we found advantages sufficient to remove all prejudices against living in Nebraska, and can recommend this part in particular to all who want cheap and pleasant homes. But we advise all who would permanently locate to see for themselves. The families will (the Lord willing) leave here for Gage county this spring. We now submit the foregoing in behalf of the little hopeful band of brethren in Gage county.

ISAAC DELL.

To Brother G. B. Replogle.

Dear Brother:

Your notice of approbation of "Be Ye Holy," PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, No. 8, page 126, has been read, and I feel glad that the essay referred to, in part at least, meets your approbation. It appears that holiness is a trait of Christian character that is loved and cherished by our brethren even in this age of Christian perdition and corruption. In my correspondence with the brethren several have spoken approvingly of the essay. Among these Elder Isaac Price says: "Dear Brother: I have with great satisfaction just read Be Ye Holy, by D. P. Saylor.—It did my heart good, &c." You will know that brother Saylor don't often hit a subject on which his views please all.—For instance, the article, "A Reason for our Hope," brought me a long letter from a brother, arguing against the reasons I therein gave why I do not cut, or shave off my beard, &c., in which the good brother (I love him) says, "Now, dear brother Daniel, as this is one of the things we practice for which we have no lawful reason, would not common decency demand of us to cut away as much of this (mark of Cain) as is disgusting to the brethren?" I claim to do this as far as my brethren have any right to be disgusted. I suppose this dear brother was sincere in his belief that we have no reason for letting our beards grow, and that the beard on man's face is the mark that God set on Cain. But notwithstanding his sincerity, he is in error on each point he makes. When we read the biographies and look at the pictures of the British Reformers, Jewel, Becon, Latimer, John Fox, Bradford, John Knox, Tyndal, Wickliff, Hooper, Ridley; with Calvin, Huss, Jerome, and all of the old fathers who protested against papal error, all are represented in their full beards. Luther, a Romish monk, is beardless, of course; this was not the only papal error he was not delivered from; (although he translated, er sol der Jurd net ob scharan).—And although it is and ought to have been known by all general readers that God's ancient people all had their full beards; so generally did the papal abomination of shaving prevail in the days of our boyhood, that but few holy fathers were found adhering to the ancient order of the beard, and forty years ago I knew of but one holy old father who had grace sufficient to endure the scoff of a full beard. I do not think we ought to censure our fathers too severely for their declension in this matter; they lived in an age in which they really knew no better, and the custom of shaving was general; they gave it no thought. Boys, among whom I was one, thought they must and did scrape over the face with a razor even before there was any fuzz to scrape off. But when men began to examine into the subject physiologically they learned that God had caused the beard to grow on man's face for some purpose, and this light shed light on some Bible precepts by which you and I now wonder "why the Brethren are so tenacious in sticking to the papal decree of clipping and shaving." There is another thing I wonder at—namely: In A. M. of 1804, but 4 in answer to the query whether a brother who shaves off his beard might be ordained a bishop, say that as God commanded his people in the law not to cut off the beard, and also Christ our Master and prensor, together with his disciples, has left us an example, &c. In consideration of these and other Scriptures and examples it could not be done in a saved faith, &c. In A. M. of 1822, 1835, 1846, &c., similar conclusions were reached. And now some brethren say a full beard is too much beard. Consistent, brethren.

That my application of the law of the priest will be strange to many, I have no doubt at all; it was strange to me before I studied it fully. And as for its being a little strong, I am sure it is no stronger than the law makes it. And as to its meeting with opposition, I have no doubt. Nothing is more natural for us than to oppose a divine precept we are living in disobedience of. If the moral precepts of God were abrogated in Christ, then we are left without law for fornication, adultery, or, indeed, any crime in the gospel of Jesus Christ; and all the law we have to punish crime in the epistolary writings are taken from the law. Paul was brought up in the perfect manner of the law, and from it he obtained all his ideas in regard to the different vices he treats of, including that of marriage. In his 7th chapter to the Corinthians he says some things of his own and not of commandment. And to the married he commanded yet not I but the Lord, but concerning virgins he had no commandment of the Lord suited to that peculiar case; yet in it he would give his judgment, &c. And where he says, "The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth, but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will: only in the Lord," is from the law, for he says, "the wife is bound by the law." The gospel gives no law on marriage; hence we have none but the civil and the Mosaic law on the subject, but as the civil says nothing in reference to marrying in the Lord, and the Mosaic does, it is manifest he had reference to the law God gave on the subject where he said, she is bound by the law. And as you have well said that "The children of Israel were expressly forbidden to marry persons who had no connection with the church," &c., is why he says a sister has no right to marry out of the Lord, i. e., to persons not belonging to the church. And I hold that a brother or sister marrying out of the church violates the law God given to man to institute and regulate marriage. And as a priest must marry a virgin of his own people to wife, how grievously, then, do elders, teachers, and deacons violate said law when they marry strangers. It is bad enough when a man becomes a brother and teacher, or bishop, after his marriage and his wife becomes not a sister; but to so marry after we are brethren and Elders is too bad.

In this as in the beard matter we have departed from the order of our dear old fathers who used to observe this apostolic order. Up to the beginning of the present century this order was observed in the churches in Maryland, and I presume in all the then organized churches. But in this, as in many other things, we became wiser than our fathers were, and we have annulled it. And I hesitate not to assert that it is the channel through which more departures from the simplicity which is in Christ have originated, than by any other; and if the church will ever be ruptured or overthrown this will be a leading cause of it. It was so with old Israel. When Balaam was not permitted to curse Israel, he advertised their enemies what to do to accomplish what he could not do, and that was, for these people to effect intermarriages with Israel, and they would gain their ends. And they did. To give all men their just dues, truth compels me to admit that in this matter the papacy is nearest right. "Brother Saylor, do you know that you are advocating an extremely unpopular doctrine?" O yes, I know it well, but I cannot help it: brother Replogle wants to know it. I hear with those who do not believe as much as I do.

Discussion--A Letter from Brother
R. H. Miller.

Brother Quinter :

As I have got through with the discussion near Peru, I will give your readers a short account of it and my feelings since its labors are over. As my health is rather poor, and I was pretty well worn down when it commenced, I, of course, am not feeling very well, physically, at present, but am not really sick.

When I received word from brother Beer that neither of you were coming, I felt considerable disappointment, knowing that Mr. Walker was to have the help of experienced debaters there. In addition to that, when I got to Peru and learned that neither brother Moore nor brother Brumbaugh were there, I felt as though I would have to stand alone. But when I arrived at the place of discussion I found brother Royer, from White county, who gave me great assistance, and with whom I was happy to form an acquaintance which I hope will never be forgotten.

The discussion seemed to me one of the strongest efforts they have ever made against the doctrine of the Brethren.—Mr. Walker, their champion, has probably had more debates than any other man in our State; has held two debates with the brethren before this; and in addition to that, was present when Mr. Jewel and I discussed these same subjects for five days. Besides, he had around him all the help he needed. When I knew he had all the advantage on his part, I felt confident that one of their greatest efforts was going to be made, and, according to my ability, I made the best effort I could to meet it.

The discussion commenced and continued throughout with more than ordinary zeal and energy on the part of the disputants, yet without any special indication of bad feeling. My opponent was evidently a shrewd, wily debater, but too much disposed to misrepresent the thing he was contending against and the position of his opponent. That, however, is the common course of those who contend against the truth. Since it is over, we feel, more than ever, confident that the faith and practice of the Brethren cannot be overturned by all the skill and ingenuity that may be brought against it; for we believe God is its defense. I may not be a proper judge of the result of the discussion, but I am confident in my feelings that our cause has lost nothing in the contest, and I really think that almost the entire audience outside of both churches were satisfied that our cause gained in the discussion; and we think our brethren were encouraged and strengthened in their faith, and gratified with the result of the discussion; and hope they will give God all the praise, for his truth has been our strong support in the contest.

We would here give our love and thanks to the brethren and sisters for their kindness during the discussion. Under such labors as we had, their kindness was fully appreciated, and will long be remembered. We made our home with brother Kingery; and truly it was a pleasant home to us and our assistants. We all owe our thanks to his son Benjamin and his wife. They are not members of our church, but if they were, they could not have been more kind. May the Lord reward them for their trouble. There are many dear friends that are not members of our church, whose kindness and approbation and care for our brethren from a distance, have well merited a life-long remembrance, and feelings of gratitude that may be cherished when after years have come. And we hope the impressions made on their minds as well as ours may help to lead us all in the pathway of God's holy men, through earth and up to heaven, where kindred spirits meet in the joys of an everlasting life.

When the discussion was over, I returned home. I arrived at noon, but left again next morning, about daylight, which went hard with me in my exhausted condition. As I have rather poor health, and have spent a good deal of time in discussing for the Brethren, and as it is the hardest labor we have to perform, I hope the brethren will call on some other ones when it becomes necessary to hold discussions, as I think I have done my share in that kind of work.

We are now at Indianapolis to finish the publication of my book, and we feel thankful to the brethren who have in advance sent us subscriptions for our work as it will be a great help to us in paying for the first edition. We hope the brethren will continue to send in their subscriptions, and we feel so confident that the work will please the brethren that we say to all the brethren who send in advance, that if they are not satisfied with it and desirous for its circulation among the brethren and the world, we will return their money if they are disappointed and will tell us. The discussion was extended so long that it will delay the work getting out a few days longer than was expected; but I expect now to attend to nothing else until it is out. Those who get the discussion with Walker, need not hesitate to send for the book on that account, for our book will contain much more than was in the discussion with Mr. Walker. * * * It is a good thing for our brethren to be well posted on these subjects, for almost the whole of Christendom is against us, and there is very much in the matter of being able to give a reason for the hope within us: it carries conviction to the hearts of others.

In the book we offer there are some new subjects, and, of course, some new matters brought up; and if any of the brethren can find anything not consistent with the word of God, we hope they will point it out, and we will gladly change it.

The Stein Proposition.

Doubtless the brethren are generally aware that brother Stein has renewed his request for 13,000 copies of "Trine Immersion to send one copy to each of the 13,000 Baptist ministers now in America. For this purpose we have agreed to furnish them post paid for the small sum of ten cents per copy. We made this proposition in the full faith that the desired amount would be easily raised, and by having such a large number printed at one time they could be furnished at such greatly reduced rates. There is now something over $200 00 raised, which will pay for over 2,000 copies, but we do not want to print any till all the money is raised that is going to be donated for this purpose, as we would have to lose considerable in the operation, but by printing them all at one time and sending them right out, we can save ourselves from any loss.

Now, then, whatever is going to be done in the work should be attended to at once; we want to get it off our hands, put the pamphlets to work, and be ready for something else. Every one who feels interested in this undertaking should respond to this call now, send in their donations, urge the matter upon the attention of their friends and make the enterprise a success.

We feel a delicacy about urging this matter. It being my own work that brother Stein wants circulated among the Baptist ministers, some might suspect me of improper motives should I be too free about urging the project forward. We however call the attention of the brethren to it hoping they will push the work through as rapidly as possible.

We further suggest that the money be sent to either the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN or Plym office and then the editors of those papers can report and hold the same till the full amount is raised. This will save the necessity and inconvenience of appointing a treasurer. Those who are writing to me can send money to my office if they think proper, but I prefer that all of it be sent to our editors. It would be a good idea, while brother Stein is traveling among the brethren to take up collections for this purpose where he preaches. Fraternally,

HENDERSON, Henderson Co., Ky., }
Jan. 18, 1876. }

Brother James :

We left our home in Woodford county, Ills., Dec. 24th, 1875, on a preaching and prospecting tour south. We stopped at Hudson, Ills., and attended several meetings. I left Hudson on the 29th, in company with brother E. D. Kindig and my companion. We set out for Henderson county, Ky. After some delays, by having to stop over, we arrived at Shawneetown on the 31st; took steambath a distance of 65 miles to Henderson, where we arrived on the morning of Jan. 1st, 1876. Henderson is a nice town of about 8,000 inhabitants. There we met with some old acquaintances and distant relatives from the country, and were taken by John P. Gish to his home. We commenced meeting at the Bellfield school-house on Sunday the 2nd of Jan. We also had several meetings at Crossplains, some distance from Bellfield. Up to this time there have been 16 baptized, and, I think, if the brethren of Southern Indiana or southern Illinois would come and preach for them they would soon have quite a congregation.

Now, brethren, don't forget this. Your best way is to come to Evansville, then by boat down to Henderson. The members live about 7 miles south east of Henderson. They will meet you if notified in time. You will write to John P. Gish, Henderson, Ky. We expect to go on south in a few days. We will stop in Muhlenburg Co., Ky. If blessed with health and luck we may go as far south as Florida. Your readers may hear from us again.

Fraternally,

"Know thy Opportunity."

The grim monster, Death, was stealthily approaching. I could almost feel his hot, fiery breath upon my forehead. My faithless goddess, Hygeia, had utterly deserted me. Only now and then would Morpheus befriend me, but on this auspicious day he had deigned to moisten my eyelids with heavenly ambrosia, and I slept. As I slept, behold I had a dream! I thought that I was roaming upon foreign soil whither my physician had sent me to recover my health. I was in a great metropolis—one of the grand martlets of the world. In one of my strolls I chanced to meet a man who had in his hand a handsomely-bound volume, entitled "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," and who said that he was an agent for the book. The title was such a novel one that I was impelled to give the work a casual notice. As I hastily glanced over its pages, I observed that it contained treatises not commonly found in medical works. But I had too many times been hoaxed by appearances, and I determined that I would have nothing to do with it. A voice within me, like a faithful mentor, whispered, "Know thy opportunity; in that book is thy salvation!" I began reasoning with myself.—Although doubtful and distrustful, yet I put forth my hand to take the book, and lo! the agent was gone! I was miserable. In my agony I awoke. Great drops of perspiration were upon my brow. By my bedside was a friend who had called during my slumber to see me. Said my friend, "I have brought with me a book, just published, which I thought might interest you. One glance at the work and I was assured that it was "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by Dr. R. W. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. Surely, this was the veritable book which I had seen in my dreams. My friend loaned me the work, and every day, as my strength permitted, I perused its pages. Although it contained very interesting treatises on Biology, Cerebral Physiology, Human Temperaments, Nursing of the Sick, etc., yet, being an invalid, I was most interested in Diseases and Remedies. I believed that I had a liver affection, and yet more than one medical attendant had pronounced my disease Consumption, and that I would fall with the autumn leaves.

In that book I found my symptoms perfectly portrayed. I was then confident that I had not deceived myself. I reasoned thus: "Any man who can so truthfully depict my feelings, and apparently understands my constitutional tendencies, must know just what my physical system demands. I will trust my case with Dr. Pierce. I will take his Golden Medical Discovery as recommended for my disease." The result is, that after having perseveringly followed his prescribed treatment, I once again enjoy the blessings of health. Therefore, I would say to the afflicted, "Know thy opportunity," and take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Qus.

NICODEMUS.

BY JAS. Y. BECKLER.

One of the great Sanhedrim came Before the unassuming Lamb,—
A ruler of the Jews was he,
A ceremonial Pharisee.
He came by night, not in the day,
To hear what Jesus had to say,
And spake to him: "Now, Rabbi, we Very well know that thou must be A Teacher come from God; because
No man by human power or laws,
Can do these miracles that thou
So wondrously hast done till now,
Excepting God be with him."

Then

The Savior answered him, as when
A man repeats, affirmingly,
A truth, by "Verily, verily,"
(A strong assertion it must be—
A solemn truth,) "I say to thee,
Except a man be born again,
(His worldly wisdom will be vain,
The kingdom of God he cannot see;
It is to him a mystery."

Surprised to hear: assertions strange (Truth in itself no man can change;
All truth, whatever truth it be,
That truth exists eternally),
Responsively the answer came Back to the meek and loving Lamb:
"How can it be as I am told?
How can a man, when he is old,
Be born again? How can it be?"
Quoth Nicodemus, earnestly.

Again the Mouth of Wisdom spake,
Not only for that Rabbi's sake,
But for the sake of all mankind,
Who think they see, but still are blind,—
Or being blind, that they might see:
"Verily, verily, I say to thee,
And every man and every daughter,
Except a man be born of water,
And of the blessed Holy Spirit,
He never can by his own merit,
Enter into the kingdom of God."

Although Christ's fame was spread abroad;
The ruler thought it strange and odd
To hear assertions of this kind;
Yet he had hopes in him to find Sublimest wisdom. But "Ye must Be born again," was more than he Could comprehend. "How can it be?"
Was all that Nicodemus, just,
Surprisedly could say or ween.
And as the lowly Nazarene,
Continued to expound his text,
The Rabbi seemed still more perplexed:
The truth whereof he could not see,
But still exclaimed, "How can it be?"

My Conviction. No. 3.

BY GEO. BUCHER.

Christ rose on "the first day of the week" "very early in the morning," and he "appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils. And she went and told them that had been with him, as they sorrowed and wept."
Next he appeared, "that same day," to two of his disciples as they went to the village of Emmaus. One of these was Cleophas. And as they talked about the things that had happened, "Jesus himself drew near, and went with them. * * * And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further. But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and gave it to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him;
and he vanished out of their sight.

* * * And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them.

Luke here tells us that the two went "the same hour," and John says, "the same day, at evening, being the first day of the week,
when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews." And as the two were speaking to the other disciples, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them. "Peace be unto you!" And presently he breathed on them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." So John says. Mark has it thus: "Go ye in all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.
He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." And Luke has it: "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:
and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." And Matthew has it: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

We learn, then, from the foregoing facts, that Christ commissioned his disciples in the evening of his resurrection day; and the commission was to "all nations" "beginning at Jerusalem." The limitation as to time was "alway, even unto the end of the world." If Christ had said
"you must do all this work in one year," they might well have been startled. But we find them first on duty at Jerusalem, as they were commanded, preaching "repentance and remission of sins;" and this they did to "every nation under heaven" —to the "devout Jews," of course, of "every nation." The preaching was not all at once to Jews and Gentiles, but "to the Jew first, and then to the Gentile." The work did not go, so to speak, as by "steam and electricity;" but (the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed" which works) slowly, gently, surely.

This preaching took place at Jerusalem in A. D. 33, and in 41, eight years later, were the words first spoken to the Gentiles whereby they should be saved. And if it took eight years to start the gospel among the Gentiles, what time will it take to consummate it? "To the end of the world."

The Christian religion is a practical religion, therefore to have it imprinted, practical preaching is required. One preacher that lives among his hearers, and lives his preaching out is worth a dozen
"comers and goers." The apostles' preaching was practical; but they could, nevertheless, not work faster than the Lord opened the door; and the brethren can't work faster either.
The work must go slowly, gently, but surely. As in every case, so in this, there are extremes. Some have too much of an evangelizing (?) spirit, whilst others have too little. We shall of course not "quench the Spirit," but then the "spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets."

Experience teaches us that the greatest evangelizers (?) are the poorest house-keepers. The Scripture, "Why beholdest thou the mote in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" is as applicable here as any other place. What good would quantity do, if quality were left wholly out of the question? But when "the door is open" and the work is as plain as the noon-day sun on a bright day, what is to be thought of a minister who then excuses himself with "his wife," with "five yoke of oxen," with "a piece of land," or with "the one talent" and "can't afford it?" "Let the dead bury the dead, go thou and preach the gospel." And again, when the work is on hand, as stated above what is to be thought of the church which refuses then to lay hold of the heavenly work; and which has not the courage then to say "we have called you to the ministry, go thou, do thy work, we will bear thy burden?"

The reader will have noticed that the words evangelizing and evangelizers are interrogated in this article. This was done to show that he who is an evangelizer (?) abroad, without being one at home is no evangelizer at all. He who is no evangelizer at home is none abroad. He may open the door wide, so that there is a great gain in quantity, but what is gained in quality is lost in quality.

Missionary Work.

BY LONDON WEST.

This great subject was treated in No. 4, by brother D. P. Saylor; and as we read it, our soul was filled with raptures to hear what we thought was a word spoken in a fit place. But before we completed the reading of it, our spirits were chilled by the reflections he put upon the labors of others, and especially upon what is said by Paul. Rom. x 14—18. The brother does not fully express his views, we think, but the impression is made by what he does say, that Missionary work is not necessary, and that the entire world has already heard the gospel preached. He quotes Adam Clarke as he presents Paul's question, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" and answers the Doctor by using Paul again, when he says, "But have they not heard? Yes, verily, their sound went out into all the earth and their words unto the end of the world." Rom. 10 : 18. He cites the speech of an Indian Chief, Red Cloud, before the President at Washington, to show that the gospel in the hands of a sectarian preacher will not improve this son of the forest, and this he gives as a second reason why the work is unnecessary. His third argument against it is that the efforts of the Roman priesthood in heathen countries is about as good or worse than no preacher at all.

As we have been free to condemn the closing remarks in the brother's article, we shall now give our reasons for thus treating it, and then leave it for him and the brethren to deal with as they think proper.

If the brother has given his full impression upon this subject, he has only a partial view of the theme which Paul was teaching. The reader will notice by a close reading, that Paul is giving his celebrated letter to the brethren at Rome treats at length of the condition and prospects of his own countrymen, the Jewish people, and occupies three whole chapters, beginning with the 9th, in presenting this interesting and (to Jesus) most important subject. In the 10th chapter above referred to occurs, and is applied by Paul, not to the Gentiles, nor to the whole world, but to his own people Israel.

The commission given by Jesus himself to his disciples, when he first sent them out, confined their work entirely to the Jews. He said, "Go not into the way of the of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying: The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matth. 10 : 5, 7. We think there were few Jews in the known world, who did not have an opportunity to know what took place in and around Jerusalem, during the three years of our Saviour's ministry. It is not probable that such things as occurred in Palestine during this time, should transpire there and not be known in all the world wherever the Jews had come; "for this thing was not done in a corner." This city has ever been the Pole star of the Jewish nation, and they have and always have had the warmest affection for it and its temple. Whatever occurred at Jerusalem was of more interest to that people and was more readily known among them than if it had occurred at any other place. Such events as the three hours darkness, the earthquake, which when a heathen man in Egypt, saw, he exclaimed, "The God of nature must suffer or sympathize with one who does suffer," with the rending of the veil of the Jewish temple, crucifixion, and the story of the resurrection, were told, and retold wherever was a son of Abraham. If the like things were to take place at our Washington, they would be known from Ocean to Ocean, and from the Lakes to the Gulf in less than a week. If in London, they would be known throughout the British Empire in less than three months. They occurring, as they did, at the Jewish capital, whither all the Jews who could, went once a year, and at the very time, too, when there were more Jews and strangers there than at any other time in the year, gave to these truths the very best opportunity for being spread.

The short statement of Cleopas to Jesus, the story of the gospel in a nut-shell, which has been told thousands and thousands of times, and will be told millions more, was known all over Jerusalem in less than three days, and the disciple wondered that Jesus had not heard it. This feast was a most remarkable one, for one author says there was not a lamb slain in all Judea, save only the spotless Lamb of God; and if so, this itself would be told, and the causes why it was so, among all the Jews.

But some do not allow the terms "earth" and "world," to apply in this connection universally; and if that be correct, the sense is much more limited than we have taken it. The point we wish to make is that the Bible does not claim that all of Adam's race have as yet heard the gospel; but that Christian people should all pray and work for so happy a result. We should not forget the words, "Go teach all nations," and "Go preach the gospel to every creature."

Discussion—Miller and Walker.

SATURDAY EVENING, Feb. 19th, 1876.

Dear Editors:—I will try to write you more with reference to the "discussion." Up to this time everything passed off pleasantly, and we do not feel discouraged with reference to the future. I will now give you the propositions as they were arranged for discussion.

1. The teaching and practice of the people commonly known as "Disciples," upon the subject of "Baptism" is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

2. The teaching and practice of the "German Baptists," upon the subject of Baptism is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

3. The teaching and practice of the "German Baptists," on the subject of "Feet Washing" is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

4. The teaching and practice of the Disciples on the subject of Feet

Washing is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

5. The teaching and practice of the Disciples, on the subject of the Lord's Supper, is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

6. The teaching and practice of the German Baptists, on the subject of the Lord's Supper, is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

7. The teaching and practice of the German Baptists, on the subject of the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

8. The teaching and practice of the Disciples, on the subject of the Salutation of the Holy Kiss is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

If you ask why two propositions are discussed upon each point of difference, I answer that it was the only way in which the points of difference could be brought to a fair and logical discussion. Brother Miller was willing to be in the affirmative his part of the time, but preferred not to be there all the time. They therefore agreed that each should affirm on each one of the points of difference. This made eight propositions. Each disputant shall make four thirty minute speeches and one fifteen minute speech on each proposition except the last two, upon which each will occupy only one half the time.

The discussion of the fourth proposition closed at noon, to-day; and I take pleasure in informing you that the earnestness and zeal which characterized their first day's work has continued until now; both, as they avow, doing their best, and while they are thus engaged in doing their best, they are exhibiting very prominently the points of difference in their temperaments, and their approach or non-approach to their Master in character and "abundance of the heart."

In my communication a few days ago, I said that elder Walker labored hard to sustain the teaching and practice of his church by endeavoring to prove that the action in baptism was one action, not repeated—a singular action. All his arguments brought forward to sustain his position were carefully examined, and some of them severely criticised by brother Miller. In this communication I can only give you a brief outline of the arguments introduced by brother Miller to sustain his teaching and practice, and prove it scriptural.

His first argument was based upon the plurality found in the commission, showing that there are three distinct powers in the Godhead.

To prove this distinction, he first called up the baptism of the Savior in Jordan. Here he found the Son coming up out of the water, the Spirit descending in the bodily shape like a dove, and the voice of the eternal Father breaking the silence of Judea's wilderness, by, "this is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." On turning to the commission, the same three, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—are found: and in the sense of the distinction, each one performs a work of his own. Illustration: The Son was sent into this world, by the Father, and not the Father by the Son. The Spirit advocates Christ's cause here upon earth. The point made prominent in this argument, is, that each one of the three has a distinct work to do in the redemption, and salvation of the sinner—are all found in the commission or baptismal formula—we baptize in each name in the sense in which they are distinct, by immersing in each distinct name, as used in the commission, and therefore have three immersions, the strictly scriptural mode of baptizing; the three distinct powers are one in a spiritual sense—when all engaged in the distinctive sense in bringing about one redemption, one salvation—are all found in one commission. We use that one commission, and therefore have three distinct actions in one strictly Scriptural baptism.

Second argument. The Greek Fathers—their testimonies. The Greek Fathers understood their own language as well or better than any one else. The Scriptures were brought over from their language—they understood the wording of the commission to require three actions, and practiced it. Single or one immersion into the three names is a departure from the ancient practice which cannot be traced beyond A. D. 633, while trine immersion can be traced to a much earlier date. Therefore, the teaching and testimonies of the Greek Fathers make trine immersion strictly Scriptural.

Another argument, was based on the analysis of the commission according to the rules of English syntax; and proved that the phraseology of the commission required three actions. A number of expressions were introduced and examined, and invariably proved repeated action. Other arguments which I cannot introduce here, were brought forward to prove the point at issue in this proposition, all of which were listened to by a large and attentive audience, in which many expressive countenances seemed to say, there really is trine immersion in the Bible. So far as I have been able to ascertain the prevailing sentiment seems to be that brother Miller met the point at issue in the first two propositions in a manner creditable to himself and to the cause he so earnestly and zealously advocated.

Tongues and Hearts.

A Russian Prince told his chief epicure to prepare him a dinner, the next day, from the best thing he could find in the market. The next day the table was spread, and the prince sat down to a dinner of tongues. The prince then demanded that he prepare a dinner on the following day of the worst thing he could find. On the second day the dinner was again made up of tongues. The chief servant explained that tongues were the best and worst things on earth, according as they were used.

Paul speaks emphatically against "whisperings" and ranks it with "envy, malice, deceit and murder." And the wise man said "A whisperer separateth chief friends."

This story and the facts which it illustrates, remind us further of the allegory of certain members of the human habitation.

It appears that Mr. Tongue was charged with being "an unruly evil, full of deadly poison," and in proof of the charge, the law-book was produced, and a passage cited from James 3: 8. The defendant replied that if it were not for Mr. Heart, who lived a little way below him, he should be as innocent as his neighbors Mr. Nose, and the Messrs Eyes, and in support of his position, he cited a passage from the same law-book, Matth. 15: 18. The court decided that the defence was a sound one, and that nothing really good could be expected from Mr. Tongue, until a radical change should take place in his neighbor Heart.

Wanted! A Church and neighborhood full of people with changed hearts. Changed so that to your ears will not keep coming a repetition of the statements of a neighbor, who is seeking to "create a public sentiment" against some one else in society. Oh, for a little charity! Oh, for a changed heart! Oh, for a piety that goes deeper than external show! A religion of the heart, that subdues the passions, destroys self-righteousness, self impotence, and recognizes the rights of all men in their proper lot and place.

"Oh, for a lowly, contrite heart,
Believing, true and clean!
Which neither life nor death can part,
From Him that dwells within.
A heart in every thought renewed,
And full of love divine;
Perfect and right and pure and good,
A copy Lord of thine."

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO?

What are we going to do, sweet friends,
 In the year that is to come,
 To battle that fearful fiend of death
 Whose messenger is rum?
 Shall we fold our hands and bid him pass,
 As he has passed before,
 Leaving his deadly-poisoned draught
 At every unbarred door?

What are we going to do, sweet friends,
 Still wait for crime and pain,
 Then bind the bruises, and heal the wound,
 And soothe the woe again?
 Let the fiend still torture the weary wife,
 Still poison the coming child,
 Still break the suffering mother's heart,
 Still drive the sister wild?

Still bring to the grave the gray-haired sire,
 Still martyr the brave young soul,
 Till the waters of death, like a burning stream,
 O'er the whole great nation roll;
 And poverty takes the place of wealth,
 And sin and crime and shame
 Drag down to the very depths of hell
 The highest and proudest name?

Is this our mission on earth, dear friends,
 In the years that are to come?
 Should we not arouse and do the work
 Against this spirit of rum?
 There is not a soul so poor and weak
 In all this goodly land,
 But against this evil a word may speak,
 And lift a warning hand.

And lift a warning hand, sweet friends,
 With a cry from home and hearth,
 Adding voice to voice, till the sound shall sweep,
 Like rum's death-knell o'er the earth,
 And the weak and wavering shall bear,
 And the faint grow brave and strong,
 And the true and good and great and dear
 Join hands to right the wrong.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
 Be Zealous.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

"Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child, girded with a linen ephod." We are apt to overlook the childhood of Divine Providence. Children in the ministry—what an anomaly. So we think. But God girds children with a linen ephod the world over, if we could but see it. The world itself was once but a day old, and had a ministry for that day, which was linked to the succeeding, and so on, till the uses which it served reach down to the present hour. The little toe has a ministry, and although we may give it no special attention, it keeps its place and serves its end as faithfully as the head or the heart. And should it become bruised or broken, the whole body is in sympathy with it, and bows down to do it service. Let us "not despise the day of small things." All Israel is in the loins of Abraham, and all nations in the handful of clay which the Almighty is moulding into an Adam. A "cloud no larger than a hand" may overspread the heavens and flood the world with God's blessing. 1 Kings 18: 44. The despairing death-council of "four leprous men" may bring incredible plenty to a hunger-bitten, starving city. 2 Kings 7. Out of a stable and a manger comes the "Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Is. 9: 6. None should despair of doing great things for God by small means, and none should overlook a mustard seed because it cannot grow a cedar. God Himself unfolds the stupendous from the tiny. With innumerable littles He compounds an earthquake. Whenever He utters His voice He wants recognition, whether in the buzz of an insect's wing, or the rolling thunder, or the raging tempest that heaves the billows and rocks our vessel even to the jeopardy of our life.

Deity may wait for us with an awful message, or an unspeakable blessing, where there is no indication of His presence. The burning bush may attract from curiosity. Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" Our prejudgments and misconceptions blind us to many a beatific vision and deafen us to many a Divine cardiphonia. We shout crucify when we should lift up the voice in glad hosannas.

What moral fists were doubled and shaken over the Gospel Visitor at its inception. How unsparingly was its author branded as a dangerous innovator, and his periodical denounced as a disturber of the peace of Zion, and an obstacle to the progress of the Gospel. How few could hear in its pages the voice of God calling His people to sustain it as an auxiliary to the pulpit. And yet how signally has He blessed it, and how unmistakably has He stamped upon it the seal of His approbation. Although its name is among the things that were, it still lives. It grew out of and is a part of the very life of the church. It is an excellent whetstone to sharpen the weapons of our warfare, a medium of communion in the One Body, a cabinet of facts and illustrations which greatly tend to ministerial efficiency.

No less urgent is the need of a German Periodical. God has called two standard-bearers to whom He has entrusted this important work. Brothers Plate and Meyers, of Germantown, Pennsylvania, issue a monthly, entitled "DER BRUEDERBOTE," which may be safely hailed as the herald of the Most High for our german membership. God times His events aright, and knows where to find Moses, Bezaleel and Aholiab, Joshua, Gideon, Sammel and David. God is not at a loss for a prophet, even if He must pick him up behind the plow. 1 Kings 19: 19. He has given us a Moore to epitomize the marrow of the Gospel in tracts, and a Hope to translate them into a foreign tongue, and ambassadors to bear them beyond the Atlantic. He has given us a Kurtz and his coadjutors to make the press the power of God unto salvation. And now He has set apart those who are to take the van of the left wing of the Lord's host, and calls the german soldiers of the Cross to rally, and sustain, both by subscriptions and contributions, the cause in which the glory of the Holy Trinity and the interests of immortal souls are involved. The periodical was conceived and born in the fervor of prayer, and has the cordial support of many who are pillars in the church, and is carried by holy hands before the Mercy-seat as God's own instrument for the upbuilding of His Everlasting Temple with living stones. Although it is in its first year, it speaks with the wisdom of the hoary head. When saints like Moses Miller, John G. Glock, William Hertzler, George and Cyrus Bucher, and other Peters of the Church, who draw down their inspirations fresh from the heart of Jesus, enrich its columns with their prayer-flavored, Spirit-bathed productions, we may be sure that it will be to the family that gives it entertainment, what the Ark of God was to Obedomom the Gittite. 2 Sam. 6: 11. All ye who can read German, and have learned to pray aright, "Thy kingdom come," invest Seventy-Five cents for Jesus, and welcome to your homes this Christ-proclaiming Magazine. From its pages the minister can gather many a barb for his arrows, and the family many a theme for edifying discourse and contemplation. Its object is to unite in the One Faith which was once delivered unto the saints, to stimulate God's people to holy zeal, and to incite to a more unreserved consecration in the glorious work of saving souls. Dearly beloved German fellow-pilgrims, take up this prayer-born bantling as good old Simeon did the infant Jesus, and give it a hearty God-welcome, a hearty God-speed, and prophesy for it the blessing of Heaven and a glorious record in the annals of the Eternal Historian. Employ your knees and tongue to help it fulfill its mission as far as the breath of the Holy Ghost will waft it. Take the swaddled bairn to your bosoms, and nurse it into stronger life and give it a wider field, not forgetting to preserve the insignia of its origin, so that it may keep company with Jesus to the end of its course, and be blessed of Him to the keeping of saints and the rescue of sinners from the thralldom of the devil. It is worthy of the right hand of fellowship from those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, for it breathes the heart utterances of those who are much within the veil, communing with Him who dwells between the Cherubim. It speaks for Jesus and of Jesus, and what effort you make for its extension is so much done toward the consummation of the great end on which His heart of Everlasting Love is set, and your cooperation with Him will find due entry on the roll of Eternal Glory. God did not shrink from exhausting His resources in the provision of a Mediator, and now calls upon His people to tax their energies, their time and coffers, and combine all the means at their command to present the claims of Jesus, and urge a sinful world to their acceptance. Forget not "Der Bruderbote" as a means to this end, and let "the zeal of the Lord's house eat us up" root and branch, so "that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified."

The Greek Language.

BY OBED SNOWERGER.

It is sometimes said that the Greek is one of the most beautiful and poetic of all languages. It seems remarkable that just at the time when extraordinary light made its appearance in the world, a language was spoken by a nation so well calculated to put on record the great revelations which were delivered unto man. It is believed that even in the present day, there are many passages of Scripture which in the Greek are more plainly and pointedly expressed, than in the English or German languages.

We take for example the 12th verse of the 24th chapter of Matthew.

In the English we find, "and because iniquity (in-ik-wi-ty) will abound the love of many will wax cold."

In the German we have, "und die weil die ungerichtigkeit wird ueberhand nehmen, so wird die liebe in vielen erkalten."

This is about as much as to say, and because unrighteousness will take overhand, the love of many will wax cold.

If we read over the English translation and use the Greek word translated iniquity, then the reading will be as follows, "and because anomia will abound, the love of many will wax cold.

Now nomos in the Greek language is law, perfect law; a placed before means privation, not law, not perfect law. Anomia, a violation of law.

There seems to be good ground to infer, that a meaning is contained in the passage which predicts that in the last days a spirit will arise that will disregard law. That men will despise the preaching of the gospel, and become more hardened than if revelation had never appeared unto them. Consequently, the wickedness of those who tread perfect law under their feet, must be a different kind of iniquity, from the unrighteousness of those who never gained any knowledge of the teachings of the Scriptures.

In the Greek, the word through, and also the word multiply occurs. It is quite plainly said, "And through the multiplying of anomia, will grow cold the love of many.

Christian Perfection.

BY I. N. CROSSWAIT.

"Pe ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect." Math. 5:48.

These words were uttered by him who spake as man never spake, by him who spake nothing in vain, but always with a real purpose, to instruct or reprove unto profit. In the first place I would ask, Are we, as the chosen people of God, living in obedience to this command as we should? or, are we ready to dispute our ability so to live in this sinful world? I cannot admit that our great Lawgiver ever has given one command, or made any requirement of us that we cannot comply with. I believe that many have a very erroneous understanding of this command. I do not believe it to mean that we should be perfect as he is in power, nor yet in any of his works that belong to him as God over all, and by whom all things were made. Doubtless, it is perfection in mankind to love the Lord our God with all our heart, might, mind, and strength, and our neighbor as ourself. This, most truly, embraces the whole duty of man to God and also to his fellowman.

"But," says one, "you have not included the ordinances of God's house, as a duty to be observed." This charge I deny in toto, and I will prove it to be a mistaken one. I say without fear of successful contradiction, that a full, true, and confiding belief in the atoning blood of Christ, will lead anyone to obey the gospel requirements in ordinances as taught by their Author, who gave them to his disciples, and showed how to observe them, even stooping to wash their feet, although he was Lord of all. Was ever such humility shown before or since that time?

Now, I come to notice a view that I fear may be offensive to some. It is this: "Many have observed all the ordinances of God's house to no profit, being yet in their sins, not cleansed. I claim this to be a self-evident fact; and it is, in my humble judgment, a great mistake, and very wrong for our ministers to preach as they sometimes do, that we can know our acceptance with God from having obeyed those outward forms of the house of God. I do hope that all who thus preach have themselves received the ordinances honestly, into hearts made new by the blood of Christ, and have only erred from a belief that all have done likewise in the matter. In conclusion, I would humbly beg those who stand on the walls of Zion to examine this with care, and test it by the word.

"Rightly Dividing the Word of Truth." 2 Tim. 2:15.

BY C. F. DETWEILER.

In No. 5, of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, is an article headed "BE YE HOLY," to which I am constrained to add a few comments.

When I was received into the church of the Brethren, I was informed that the professed Discipline of faith and practice among the Brethren is the New Testament, nothing more and nothing less. This I heartily and unhesitatingly endorsed as my faith, and do yet. It appears from brother Saylor's view on a few points in his article, if I rightly understand him, that the policy which he advocates would include what he, by way of distinction, would term the moral part of the Old Testament. I am fully convinced that the part of the Old Testament that has direct bearing upon morals, or holiness, is all incorporated in the New Testament, while I am not able to find ground in the New Testament to warrant a policy that would forbid anyone to mar the corners of his beard, or to forbid a minister to marry a widow. I do not infer that brother Saylor would adopt such a policy as a church ordinance; but if his theory is correct, I should think such an ordinance would be very desirable, if not obligatory. I agree with brother Saylor on the subject of The Sure Foundation. Christ is the sure foundation; not a part of it, but all of it, in the strictest sense. Neither is there salvation in any other. Is not then his Covenant, or Testament, perfect and complete? For to speak after the manner of men, as Paul says, "Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed no man disannulleth or addeth thereto." If we have adopted the New Testament which was sealed by the blood of Christ, can we improve upon it by adding a part of that which was sealed with blood of oxen? Since faith has come, and we are no longer under the schoolmaster, and our holiness is not based upon our physical condition, a widow is capable of as high a degree of holiness as a virgin, and I think, as fit to be the wife of a minister. The perfect law of liberty strikes the line of demarcation on other grounds. The same law that makes no distinction between the blind and the seeing; nor between the halt and the hale; nor between the crooked and the straight; gives no warrant to make a distinction between the widow and the virgin; but between faith and infidelity; between Christ and Bellial. The perfect law of liberty does not only free us from the law of carnal ordinances, but makes it our duty, as well as our high privilege, to avoid contamination by voluntary unconditional life long intimacy with those who choose to stand in the chasm between Christ and Bellial. "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Though the difference seems to be definite between brother Saylor and myself, I hope his charity will be sufficient to suffer the difference, so that if our human short-sightedness causes us to differ in theory, we may be one in the spirit.

Thoughts on Death and Judgment.

BY A PILGRIM BROTHER.

"For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5: 10.

It is admitted, by all who take the word of God for the man of their counsel, that there is to be a final judgment, both of the just and of the unjust; that all must appear before the tribunal bar of Jehovah, and there receive a just recompense for their doings. Could the sinner but appreciate the force of the term judgment in all its bearings, and, more especially, of the direful consequences of the righteous judgment of God pronounced against those who die in their sins! That all must appear before God in judgment, is one of the plainest doctrines taught in the Bible: it cannot possibly be denied by any but skeptics. I shall try and refer the reader to a few of the many Scriptures having reference to judgment. The passage of Scripture heading this article is an insurmountable testimony of a judgment to come.

Again we are told that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29. "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, * * * and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books * * *. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to his works." Rev. 20: 12, 13. Numerous equally strong testimonies could be adduced, were it necessary to do so. But notwithstanding all these testimonies, the devil, that arch enemy of God and man, is ever endeavoring to keep the solemn thought of death and judgment from the mind of the sinner. He is trying to keep the sinner engaged, as much as possible, in the sinful delights and pleasures of the world. Nothing is so detrimental to the schemings of the devil as the sober, solemn thoughts of death and judgment. Such thoughts, accompanied with the grace of God, sometimes make such impressions upon the heart of the sinner that he will be made to exclaim, when pricked to the heart like the Pentecostians, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" But the devil has his emissaries, who are always on the alert, who will try to lull the sinner asleep again in his sins. They will tell the sinner that God is not so tenacious; that he is merciful; that he would have all men to be saved, &c. Again, these emissaries will tell the sinner that there is no such a thing as torment beyond the grave. They try to persuade themselves and others that hell is the grave, and nothing more nor less. We admit that in some instances the term hell means the grave; but whenever the term hell is made use of for the punishing of the wicked, it has no allusion to the grave whatever, either in the Old or New Testament Scriptures. I shall refer the reader to a few of the many instances only. "The wicked shall be turned into hell." Ps. 9: 17. "Her house is the way to hell." Prov. 7: 27. "Hell from beneath is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming." Is. 14: 9. "Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire," &c. Matth.

25: 41. "To be cast into hell fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Mark 9: 47, 48. "And in hell be lifted up his eyes, being in torments." Luke 16: 23. "In flaming fire taking vengeance * * * Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. 1: 8, 9.

A few words of caution to my dear brethren in the ministry. Let us beware how we handle the word of God. We are told that it "is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing," &c. Heb. 4: 12. Let us be cautious how we handle this sword. Two-edged swords are not to be trifled with; handle carefully. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." 2 Tim. 2: 15. My dear brethren do not try to smooth and bridge judgment and hell over with such combustible materials that one swoop of God's wrath will sweep into eternal degradation. The finger of scorn may be pointed at you; it may be said that you are one of these hell and damnation preachers; care not for this, for as long as you have the word of God to bear you out, you are on safe ground.

Not long since one of these pretended preachers of the gospel openly and defiantly declared that there was no more fire in hell than in his hat; that it was all nonsense to believe any such stuff, &c. I lately heard one of our brethren say in his preaching that it was "the goodness of God that leadeth to repentance, and not the fears of hell." The last sentence he emphasized very strongly, at the same time looking at me, to see whether I had understood him. Yea, verily, I thought, it is the goodness of God that the sinner is not instantly cut off in his sins; it was the goodness of God that moved the Father to send the Son into the world to save sinners; and that he suffered and bled and died for sinners. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." All this, and more, came to pass through the goodness of God. Yet it is not saying that we should not preach judgment, and the direful consequences of sin, if unrepented of. The Almighty saith, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." Is. 58: 1. The true ambassador of Christ will warn the sinner to flee the wrath to come.

Dear brethren, let us not be men pleasers, but let us try to please the Master. Let us ever remember the solemn charge given by Paul to his son Timothy. Let us preach the word; let us be instant in season, out of season; let us reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine. Paul saith, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." Brethren, we know the time has come, and more than this, the time has come when but few preach sound doctrine. "They shall heap to themselves teachers." Let us remember, my dear brethren, that Paul was under sentence of death when writing these words of caution and warning; yet did he not shun to declare the whole counsel of God.

In conclusion, my dear brethren, let us remember that we must all appear before him that sitteth upon the great white throne, from whose face the earth and the heavens fled away, where the dead, small and great, stand before God; where the books are to be opened," &c. There we will have to render an account of our preaching; and what think you? "how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." There will be no escape there. Then let us beware how we handle that sharper than any two-edged sword—the word of God. It was shown unto the Revelator, that "the Kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, &c., hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, follow us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath (judgment) is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

Shake off that Viper.

BY JOHN H. PECK.

When Paul was landed on the Island of Melita in a cold rain, he, ever ready to do his share of any work, whether physical or spiritual, that needed to be done, gathered up a bundle of sticks to make a fire for himself and his companions to warm by; but when he threw his sticks on the fire there came a viper from the heat and fastened on his hand. The barbarous inhabitants of the island at once pronounced him a villain, whom, though he had escaped the rage of the sea, God would not permit to live. But when Paul shook off the viper and remained unharmed, they changed their minds very suddenly and materially, and pronounced him a God. Paul with that viper on his hand might have preached a long time to those people without effecting any good results, but shaking off the viper, his actions spake louder than any words, and at once convinced them that he was a peculiar character, imbued with supernatural power, and hence they would be willing to hear and believe what he had to say. Now it is a lamentable fact that many of our brethren, after having in their baptismal vow covenanted to renounce Satan with all his pernicious ways, still go about with a very prominent viper in the shape of tobacco hanging to them.

It has been remarked by some adherents to secret societies that they would leave their church before they would their lodge. Now I wonder if any of our brethren would leave the church before they would deny themselves the luxury of smoking and chewing tobacco: If there are any such, I think it would be well for them to decide upon one or the other quickly, for they should remember that they cannot serve God and Mammon. How can such a one approach his brother to salute him with a holy kiss? Can anything holy proceed from a character polluted with poison? Shake off that viper, brother, ere it fastens its fangs so deeply as to send your soul to perdition; for though not as immediate in its results, its sting is finally as fatal, and it has killed a thousand times more people than the kind that fastened on Paul's hand. It has been a wonder to me how any man can wear his hair parted in the middle under the pretext of non-conformity to the world, when, at the same time, he is engaged in one of the most filthy practices ever indulged in by man. When I see such, I am led to exclaim to myself, "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" Paul who did not hesitate a moment to shake off the viper when he discovered it, also said he would not eat meat as long as he lived if it would offend his brother. Oh, what self-denial! Then will not you shake off that viper, brother, and prove by your actions your self-denial and non-conformity to the world? Do this and you will not need any external marks to show that you are a child of God. I do not wish to be understood as reproaching those external peculiarities with which some of our most pious brethren adorn themselves; but I do think where these externals are used they should be kept sacred, and not be desecrated at the same time by indulging in an evil that is so popular among sinners.

Gems of Thought.

In Dr. Day's last contribution to the Star occurs this beautiful passage: "If God be for us, who can be against us?" That is the question of one to whom God's helpfulness was a constant reality in experience as well as a leading article of faith. Such a soul is beyond a serious and palsying doubt. There is ever a calm looking for victory. There may be clouds, dangers, disasters, repulses; but in spite of all, there is a calm utterance, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth;' 'I know in whom I have believed;' 'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil;' 'Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory!' Such a sense of God's helpfulness is a blessing that no words may fully express. What it is worth only they can know of whose life it has become a part. It is at once the rock on which their feet rest without shaking, and the distant peal of the trumpet that heralds their coronation."—Sel.

How is This?—Answered.

On page 91 I read a correspondence by brother S. S. Mohler, which I thought ought to be answered. And I felt that it was quite in my place to do so, because I was an impartial and silent observer, in that solemn assembly last Fall in Northern Illinois. And when I read brother Mohler's article, it made me feel sad, and I should not wonder if many more hearts were made sad by reading the said article. The Danish question was an important one, and I venture to say that the brethren composing that council last Fall were too seriously impressed with the salvation of precious, blood-bought souls in Scandinavia, to have any longing after fame. Fame! What is it but the blast of a trumpet? Can a brother who has been born again, who has put on Christ and buried the old man with his deeds, be hankering after such a delusive and vain phantom as fame? No, brethren, this was not the motive of those brethren composing that solemn meeting in Northern Illinois; where there was a union of sentiment, and the brethren were moved by the Holy Ghost. When a brother has no more regard for the church than to move away hundreds of miles to some place where he can not hear the brethren preach, he is not to be pitied if his calls for a preacher are not answered for some time. But when sinners who want to be saved are calling for assistance to attain their salvation, then there should be assistance given without much delay. I have written this because I was an eye witness to those proceedings, and felt like bearing testimony for my brethren in Ills, that they did not act with any impure or vain motive.

A Little Sermon.

"The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough to make cakes to the queen of heaven."—Jeremiah 7: 18.

This verse tells you what some boys and girls did a long time ago, in the country where the Saviour was afterwards born, and in a famous city, Jerusalem. The people who dwelt there were called Jews. They had been taught to worship the true God, who made all things, and who is wise and good. But after awhile they became like the heathen around them. Instead of worshipping God, they worshipped the "queen of heaven," for so they called the moon. Now the moon is beautiful to look at, and ought to make us think of God, who made it to give light in the night-time. But those evil Jews thought it was a god, though it has no more sense than a lump of clay. They used to get together in the streets of the city and in groves to offer to it sacred cakes, thinking the "queen of heaven" would be pleased with such worship, and would love and favor them. Everybody had something to do in this work; the father, the mother, and the children. The women made the cakes, and the fathers made the fire to bake them in. But it was the children that gathered the wood to make the fire with, each one bringing an armful or a handful; and perhaps a very little child tottling along with a single twig in its tiny hand. You see that but for what the children did, the poor "queen of heaven" would have had no cakes!

How very foolish all this was, you say. Yes, it was, and very sad, too. But it shows how very important even little folks can be in any work.

You who live in this happy, Christian land, know better than to do as these Jewish children did. But their active and cheerful zeal is worth your imitation. Can you not do as much to please and honor your kind Heavenly Father, the King of Heaven, as they did to please the senseless moon? Surely there is something you can offer to God. It may be very small, no more in value than a handful of sticks. But if it be all you can give, and you give it out of love, God will accept it. It may be a kind word, a loving deed, an act of self-denial, or of obedience to your parents. It may be giving of your little treasures to teach heathen children to love and worship the true God and Jesus Christ His Son, instead of bowing down to senseless idols. There are many thousands of such children. Will you not honor your Heavenly Father by doing something for them? Gather and bring in your little sticks to make a fire of love that shall lighten and warm the dark, cold homes of those little ones over the sea, who have never heard His name.—The Watchman.

Sewing-Aches.

Jessie sat down by her mother to sew. She was making a pillow case for her own little pillow.

"All this?" she asked in a discontented tone, holding the seam out.

"That is not too much for a little girl who has a work-basket of her own," said her mother.

"Yes," thought Jessie, "mother has given me a work-basket, and I ought to be willing to sew;" and with that she took a few stitches quite diligently.

"I have a dreadful pain in my side," said Jessie, in a few moments. "My thumb is very sore," she said in a few moments after.

"Oh, my hand is so tired!" that was next. And with that she laid down her work. Next there was something the matter with her foot, and then her eye.

At length the sewing was done. Jessie brought it to her mother.

"Should I not first send for the doctor?" said her mother.

"The doctor for me, mother!" cried the little girl, as surprised as she could be.

"Certainly," said her mother, "a little girl so full of pains and aches must be sick, and the sooner we have the doctor the better."

"Oh, mother!" said Jessie, laughing "they were sewing-aches; I am well enough now."

I have heard of other little girls besides Jessie, who had sewing aches whenever their parents had work for them to do. These aches and pains do show sickness. They are symptoms of a bad disease, a disease which eats some people up. This disease is called "selfishness." It makes children cross, and fretful, disobliging, and troublesome, and unhappy; and I am sure it makes those unhappy who have the charge of them.—Christian Child.

Faith.

Sometimes men, and they are generally young men, those just beginning to be a little learned, say, "If I believed in religion, if I could have it proved to me by reasoning, as other things are, I would become a Christian as quickly as possible. They would put Christianity on a level with matters in science or government, and attempt by man's little intellect to reason concerning it.

But this is hardly possible. Religion differs from these things; it demands more than the intellect, the reason; it calls forth the heart, the affections, and needs the application of a generous faith. Not merely a faith that means simply a belief in the Bible and the being of God, but beyond and superior to this a thorough devotion to, and sincere affection for, the principles taught in the holy word.

We are not so literally to interpret faith as to suppose it will build churches for us, or pay the salaries of our ministers, for it won't do any such thing. That is not the faith we need or are required to have. It is necessary to have something more material than faith to meet such demands as these.

But that belief in Christianity that causes men to look above the littleness of the world into the future, into eternity; which elevates man to a higher standard of living, developing the full nobility of his nature, that is the kind of faith we need, and the kind that blesses the world.—Morning Star.

Given Up To Sin.

How often does it happen in the history of these wilful sinners of the flesh, that, after a while, all things seem to smile upon them and prosper them according to their heart's content. Are they mad for gold?—gold seems to roll in upon them. Are they mad for pleasure?—their seductive arts are successful, and victims come ready to their lure. Are they mad for drink?—those around them cease to strive with them, and give them up as hopeless. Shame, too, abandons them. It is very wonderful to see how often, if a man is bent on an end, God gives it to him, and it becomes his curse. God does not curse us; he leaves us to ourselves, that is curse enough; and from that curse what arm can save us? We will have it, and we shall have it. We leap through all the barriers which He has raised around us; though they be rings of blazing fire we will go through them and indulge our desires; and in a moment He sweeps them all out of our path; perhaps roses spring up to beguile where flames so lately flamed to warn. Saul is a most frightful example of this truth.—Christian in the World.

ONE of the illusions is that the present hour is not a critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is doomsday.—Emerson.

PREREQUISITES FOR SUCCESSFUL BIBLE STUDY.

The importance of an honest and sincere heart—a heart right toward God—a heart deeply impressed with his majesty and supremacy, ready to acquiesce in his requirements when those requirements are known, and do whatever he requires to be done, cannot be estimated too highly by those who would search the Scriptures successfully to obtain a correct knowledge of the will and law of God.—To read the Scriptures understandingly, some literary qualifications are necessary. It is necessary to know something about the meaning of words and their relation to each other in the sentences they form. The importance of some knowledge of this kind, will be readily acknowledged by every person. But certain moral qualifications are no less necessary for all who would study to the best advantage the sacred oracles.

We have said above that the heart should be right toward God. We do not mean it must be right in every respect before any knowledge of divine things can be obtained, for a right heart in every respect implies a renewed heart. But there are some things to be known before the heart can be renewed, and there are certain moral qualifications necessary for the obtaining of that knowledge.—There must be a certain degree of humility, of honesty, and of sincerity possessed by all who would learn the first principles of the doctrine of Christ so effectually as to bring them to Christ. And the possession of these constitute what is called in the parable of the sower, "the honest and good heart"—the heart which brings "forth fruit with patience," "some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred." It will be observed in the parable of the sower, that a certain fitness of heart is necessary in the reception of divine truth in order that the truth may render the receiver a fruitful branch of Christ.

The importance of honesty and sincerity, if we would "believe with a heart unto righteousness," is clearly implied in our Lord's language to the Jews. He said in one of his addresses to them, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not that honor which cometh from God only?" John v. 44.—The important principle taught us by our Lord is this: There is a close connection between the state of a man's heart and the exercise of saving faith; a much closer connection than is generally perceived or acknowledged. Whether he has faith or not to come to Christ successfully for pardon and salvation, does not depend altogether by any means on the amount of testimony apprehended by the intellect or mind, but it depends also much upon the state of his heart. If he is not truly honest in the desire he manifests to find out the true way by which he is to become reconciled to God, and by which he is to serve God,—if he secretly cherishes a desire for anything he is not willing to give up,—or if he prefers, or seeks the honor of men rather than the honor of God, he will lack the qualifications necessary for a saving belief in Christ, and he can never while in such a state of mind, experience "the peace of God which passeth all understanding, and which is the fruit of genuine or justifying faith in Christ. Neither can he without the qualifications of such principles as honesty and sincerity, make the progress in acquiring the knowledge of divine truth, or in reaching the maturity in the divine life, that he can with such principles. The most important qualifications for "growth in grace" and "in the knowledge of the truth," do not depend, as already intimated, merely upon the state of a man's head or intellect, but much depends upon the maturing of Christian character, and upon obtaining the knowledge by which that character is known, upon the state of his heart. Where there is a self-will and a haughty spirit, and a strong bias of mind to something different from the simple truth as it is in Jesus, no ordinary degree of light is sufficient to convince such of their errors, or to set the truth before them in a way that will produce conviction. But if there is a meekness of spirit, and a readiness of mind to receive anything that the heavenly Teacher has to communicate, there will be no difficulty in learning all that pertains to life and godliness.

That no amount of mere external evidence without any regard to the moral state of the heart is sufficient to produce genuine faith, is evident from the history of the Israelites. They had been witnesses to many wonders in the land of Egypt; they had passed through the divided waters of the Red Sea; they were daily fed miraculously from heaven; they had witnessed a grand manifestation of the divine glory and greatness on Mount Sinai; and yet within sight of that mountain they made a golden calf and worshipped it for their god. And the Jews who saw the miracles of Christ so frequently, were not convinced by them, but sought his death, and "cried, saying, crucify him, crucify him." It is evident that a certain moral state of heart is necessary to enable men to read effectually the lessons of God whether taught in his providences or in his word.

Persons often with a strong bias of mind to some particular doctrine that is popular, or that their ancestors have held, and in which they have been educated, read the Bible anxious to find that doctrine there. And being anxious to find it, and having a bias of mind to it, they may conclude that they receive just the answer from the divine oracles that they want.—They are like Balaam, who inquired of God, with a strong desire to get the answer he wished to have. And instead of yielding at once to God's direction, which was that he should not go with the messengers of Balak, he applied to the Lord again, plainly indicating that he was not satisfied with the direction he received, but wanted something more congenial to his own feelings. And upon his second application to the Lord, he received permission to go, and accordingly he went, but "God's anger was kindled because he went." God has declared himself to be a jealous God, and it is extremely dangerous to call in question the propriety of any of his counsels, or to follow our own judgment rather than his, since by so doing we dishonor and offend him. The apostle Paul in speaking of persons who "received not the love of the truth," says, "And God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12.

Much more depends upon an honesty of purpose, and a sincere desire to do the will of God, in coming to a correct and satisfactory knowledge of the truth, than many suppose. The want of these is the cause why some are so much perplexed in their minds, and have so much difficulty in ascertaining their course of duty.—There must be an honest and ready will to believe just what God has said, and all that he has said, if men will do justice to themselves and justice to God. Christian truth is adapted to an honest, sincere, and humble mind, and a mind that lacks these can not see its importance, beauty, excellence, and harmony. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth," said Jesus, "because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." There must be a child-like docility or teachableness of mind, to properly understand and effectually receive the doctrine and teaching of Christ.

It seems to be a mystery to some persons why there is such a variety of sentiments among professing Christians in regard to what the Scriptures teach, when all claim to take the Scriptures for their guide in Christian faith and practice. When, however, we consider that people have been differently taught in their education in their childhood, and have had different theories of religion impressed upon their minds by their surroundings and associations in life, it is altogether likely, and indeed pretty certain, that when they come to read the Scriptures for themselves, and that, too, with a desire to form their religious principles according to their teaching, they will bring with them to the Scriptures a bias of mind that will probably have much to do in forming their principles. They will have to contend with a prejudice and bias of mind that may be greatly to their disadvantage in learning "the truth as it is in Jesus." Unless they are very careful, they may be more anxious to have their preconceived views of Christian duty confirmed, than they are to know what the Bible really teaches as Christian duty. We cannot but believe that the teachings of our heavenly Master in regard to the duties of his disciples, will be the same to all, if there is no bias or prejudice to warp the judgment, or no selfish desires to be gratified. "The meek will be guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." Psa. xxv. 9.

Cleanings and Jottings.

TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.—On Saturday evening, 4th inst., Rev. D. C. Babcock, of Philadelphia, Corresponding Secretary of the State Christian Temperance Alliance made his appearance in our town, to spend a few days with us in laboring in the cause of temperance, or rather, total abstinence and prohibition. On Sunday morning, at 10 o'clock, he preached a very acceptable sermon in the M. E. church.

In the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, he entered on his labors in the temperance cause. The first meeting was in the Brethren's meeting-house, and was a union Sabbath-school concert or drill.—A few of the schools of our town met together and with them a respectable number of citizens. The exercises consisted principally in singing and class-drills from lesson leaves prepared for the purpose.—The class-drill was on the scientific and biblical phases of this great question, and was interspersed with short, pointed, and sensible comments. We were particularly interested in the treatment of the text, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright." It was assumed that most of grapes are of a purple color, and the unfermented juice of these grapes is of the same color.—When this wine ferments, it changes color, becoming red. Hence the prohibition, "Look not thou upon the wine, when it is red," means, "Desire not fermented wine." To rebut the position that the unfermented juice is not called wine, he quoted Isaiah lv. 8, "As the new wine is found in the cluster." The Scriptures recognize two kinds of wine, unfermented and fermented, the former as a blessing and the latter as a curse.—He insisted very strongly on the use of unfermented wine for communion purposes. But as it is not our purpose to give a lengthy report of the meeting we will pass on.

On Sunday evening at 7 o'clock he again preached in the M. E. house, to a large congregation. His text was Prov. xxiii. 29, "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" The answer is contained in the next verse: "They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine."

On Monday evening he lectured in the Brethren's meeting-house. Subject:—"The History of Temperance." This subject was ably discussed, and we were profoundly sorry, and more than half ashamed, that so few of our members were present to hear him; and our town, too, was poorly represented.

The next day, Tuesday the 7th, at half past two o'clock, p. m., a number of ministers, Sunday-school superintendents, lay-members and others in sympathy with the object of the meeting, assembled in convention in the M. E. church to confer with each other in regard to making an organized effort against the baneful and growing evil of intemperance. At about half-past five the convention adjourned to meet again at seven o'clock, p. m., first to be addressed by D. C. Babcock, and afterward to finish the business before the body.

The hour arrived and we were treated to a very interesting address.

Next the question of organization taken up again, and after much discussion it was finally decided by a majority vote to organize a County Christian Temperance Alliance, auxiliary to the State Christian Temperance Alliance. After the election of the necessary officers the convention adjourned to meet again in June next, at the same place.

Those who wish to know more about the National Christian Temperance Alliance, should send a few stamps to CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE ALLIANCE, published at Bellefonte, Centre Co., for the constitution and sample papers. B.

The following came too late for insertion in the proper place. We hope brother Holsinger may succeed in his new business, and that he may also have a Bethel and an altar in this great and growing city:

ANCHORED AT LAST.—For several years past I have had a desire to locate somewhere in the Great West, and with that view have spent a considerable amount of money in traveling and exploring the country, having passed over portions of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, and Nebraska. Being partial to the printing business, or something in the commercial line, I felt it necessary to live in some large town or city. So after mature deliberation I have finally decided upon this city, the metropolis of the West, and the business center of the prairie country, as the basis of my operations for the future, Providential interferences always excepted. And I am now established and ready for business. I am commencing on a small scale, making a specialty of printing Cards, Envelopes, Statements Note Heads, Letter Heads, and Circulars; but I have acquaintance, and also business relations, with more extensive publishers, and will therefore be pleased to receive orders from my friends for anything in the printing line, from a pill box label to a mammoth poster,—from a single page tract to a thousand page book, and if my estimates do not suit my customers, they will not be obliged to contract with me. I believe I can give satisfaction generally, and would most respectfully solicit a trial.

I will also act as purchasing agent for my friends, for any article or goods, they may wish to secure, until I shall find it necessary to give all my time to my other business. I have a pretty good run of the trade of the city, and feel confident that I can save much money to persons in the country, who may wish to procure Goods, Household Furniture, Musical Instruments, Books, Papers, or anything in the market at wholesale or retail.

Persons wishing to make purchases through me, should give the quality of the articles desired, and about the price they expect to pay, giving highest to lowest figures, full and careful shipping directions, and remit one-half the amount with order to purchase, and be prepared to meet the balance on receipt of goods and presentation of bill. I will charge only for my time and expenses. I will ascertain prices and communicate to parties who are willing to pay for the expense of it. I am here to do business, and I will do it "on the square" honestly, faithfully, and promptly.

Lastly, and principally, what I wish to do most of all is, to build up a Produce Commission business, making good butter and fresh eggs a specialty, but will receive and dispose of all kinds of country Produce, and make prompt returns. For particulars, see advertisement.

For the present my address will be simply

SISTER Ella Williams of Funkstown, Md., says:

"Inclosed you will find $1.50 which you will please add to your "Poor Fund." At the commencement of the year I got the P. C. for four persons, two were able to pay for it and two were not, and as I have not much "filthy lucre," I thought I had done my duty in this respect; but after reading the brother's proposition to be one of two hundred to give one dollar fifty, I felt as if I ought to encourage that plan. The plan has a scriptural aspect—it's "provoking one another unto good works." Don't you think it is difficult, sometimes, for us to know when we have done our duty? Indeed, I doubt whether we can do our duty to God. For instance, it is our duty to be grateful to God for the gift of his Son, and to manifest our gratitude by our works; and yet, can any one be duly grateful, or make any adequate return?

You seem to be somewhat in the condition of the little child that cried because he could not eat all the good things set before him; and I think, for your sake, some of our contributors had better hold off a little while, hence in this letter there is only something for your pocket-book (which is perhaps sometimes empty), and nothing for that other receptacle which is always full.

Sister Ella surely did a good thing for us and for the poor when she sent that "something" for the "pocket-book;" but she misses the mark considerably when she says, "I think, for your sake, some of your contributors had better hold off a little while." This is all, all wrong. We do not want "that other receptacle—the Manuscript box—ever to be empty. Let it be full—full to running over; and if we are to enlarge it all the better. The more we have in that box, the greater variety we will have to select from, and the more interesting will be our paper; but we want that our contributors shall not complain when their articles do not immediately appear, nor be dissatisfied if they should not appear at all. If any of our contributors drew the conclusion from our remarks on "Our Manuscript Box" that they "had better hold off a little while," we hope they will abandon that conclusion without delay—right off, and resume writing at once. We wonder whether sister M. has been discouraged. We fear she has, as we have nothing from her "Seed Basket" this week. B.

BROTHER J. A. Clement, of North Georgetown, Columbiana Co., Ohio, Feb. 28th, 1876, says:

"The recent troubling of the waters with us is still causing penitent souls to come to Jesus, I believe; for yesterday at Freeburg, one more was added to the member that gladly received the word. We had yesterday the rare opportunity of witnessing two burials. One was "buried with Christ by baptism," and resurrected "to walk in newness of life;" and the other one was buried to await the resurrection morning, as we hope, "to have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death hath no power.

BROTHER Jacob H Kurtz, of New Middleton, Mchoning Co., Ohio, Feb. 27th, says:

This evening will probably close a series of meetings at Zion's Hill church, which commenced a week ago, yesterday. Bro. John Clement preached for us several days. Many precious truths were brought to bear upon our minds, and we have good reason to believe that lasting impressions were made upon the minds of some, which will manifest themselves in due time. May the Lord revive his work. Yesterday evening brother Moses Weaver arrived to remain over Sunday. His labors are very acceptable, and, we hope, may be blessed to some precious souls, which are yet out of Christ. We are reasonably well."

BROTHER M. Mamert of Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill., March 1st, says:

I am receiving the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN in my daughter Susan's name, who is living with me. I can say I am pleased with it, and will continue subscribing for it so long as it will hold forth the truth in meekness and in the spirit of the gospel. Dear brother I am much pleased with the admonition you gave to your readers, and writers under the heading, "The Spirit and Language of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN." May God write those admonitions upon the fleshy tablets of the heart, that we may always speak the truth, or whatever we do, in love and meekness, in my prayer."

BROTHER J. H. Roberts, of Ott, Coos Co., Oregon, Feb. 6th, writes:

As an item of news you may say that the Brethren here still seems to be alive to their Master's cause. We have meeting every Sabbath, principally at our private houses; but I am sorry to say without any visible increase to the church. The health of quite a number of people here is rather poor at present,—but generally those that came here afflicted,—in consequence of much rainy weather this winter. Poor health, with little means to start into the winter with, has, with some, made it pretty hard getting along; but we do hope that the Lord when he comes on earth again, may not find any brethren which their store-houses well supplied with the poor around them lacking the very things that the "holder for cash" will have no time to dispose of then.

THE following clipping is ominous, showing that pedo-baptist sentiment and pedo-baptists are rapidly on the decline in Great Britain:

The annual meeting of the British and Irish Baptist Home Mission was held on the 23rd ult., at Bloomsbury Chapel, London. The mission has now 27 regular missionaries in Ireland, who preach in 270 stations and in the regions beyond. There are now 330,000 fewer Roman Catholics in Ireland than there were ten years ago; there are 10,000 Episcopalians less; and 19,000 Presbyterians less. The Baptists have nearly doubled in membership, doubled in chapels, doubled in preachers, and doubled in a financial point of view.

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

RURAL VALLEY, Armstrong Co., Pa. }
Feb. 24, 1876.

Brethren Editors:

Having been solicited by Elder John Wise, some time ago, to visit the brethren of the John Settlement, in the Glade Run district, I consented so to do at the earliest opportunity. Elder Wise had held meetings for the brethren at the above named place, for about one week, during which time their new meeting-house was dedicated. He preached the dedicatory sermon to a large and attentive congregation. At the close of this series of meetings, three persons designated themselves as willing to submit to the teachings of Christ; but as brother Wise had his arrangements made to leave the next morning, he could not attend to baptizing them.

According to previous arrangements, brother Joseph Wilt and myself started on the 12th of February. We commenced on the evening of the 12th and closed on the 21st. We had services day and evening, the Lord working with us in our weak efforts to hold forth the word of life, and answering the prayers of his children. The meeting resulted in good. Twenty-three were added to the number of the disciples by being buried with Christ in holy baptism. The ordinance was performed in the waters of the Alleghany River. There was also one reclaimed. We feel that others are counting the cost, while some have said they would unite with the people of God before long. May God help them so to do, and keep those that have taken upon themselves his service faithful, according to the covenant they have made, until life with them shall terminate, when they may enter upon that eternal life that shall never end. May the blessings of God rest upon and abide with all his children here and elsewhere, and may we all be united in his service so that his great name may be glorified, and daily be added unto the church such as shall be saved, is the prayer of your weak brother in Christ,
J. B. WAMPLER.

A Mistake Corrected.

In a recent article in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, on my trip to Harrisburg, a sentence stating that my mission in regard to the prospects and success of an object in which we were all interested was a failure, proved a stumbling block to some, and was construed to mean that the interests and outlook of the Plumcreek School were not benefited and advanced.

Among other matters a charter for the school was sought, and as it was forbidden by law to grant it, none could issue; hence that was a failure, and it seems that no colleges or universities can be chartered in Pennsylvania.

A few words about the school in question may not be out of place. The institution is now on a fairer footing and has brighter prospects than ever before.—Everything belonging to the school and within the province of our purpose is progressing surely and favorably. Having been identified with the school from its very first day to the present, I can testify to its sure and continued progression onward and upward. With the blessing of God and the material aid and influence of the Brethren, we hope to have a school far above mediocrity and second to none, if earnestness can bring it up to that point.

Not a few are enlisted on our side, while the whole fraternity, everywhere, are interested in the founding and perpetuation of a school where the children in our midst may receive the training, educationally and morally, characteristic of a broad and deep education, based on the religion of our Lord and Master.

To this end the aid and influence of every brother and sister, everywhere, are requested in our behalf. None are so poor that they can give nothing. Every person has his influence, and we ask you for it in our favor; give us your prayers and well-wishes. Scattered all over the United States are thousands of happy homes into the bosom of which this article finds its way. Perhaps there is a bright boy or girl who would like nothing better than to have the power which knowledge confers. If so, send him or her, or both, here. Perhaps there are others to whom the talent of aptness has been denied, and whose progress has been slow; send them to us. We will send back your children gifted with the power to look upon many of the pictures that now hang with their faces to the wall—with the power to hold their own in contests with the powers of evil. But over and above all, we will return them to you not ashamed of their faith, and the walk and conversation of a primitive Christian.

Our Trip to Belington--Our Arrival
--The Condition of the Church--
Past Condition--Present Prospects
--Effect of Preaching, etc.

VALLEY FURNACE, West Va., }
Feb. 29, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—

Last Friday, in company with brother William H. H. Shafer, we started through the mud and the excessive inclemency of the weather to visit the church near Belington in Barbour county.

We arrived on the evening of the same day, at about 4 o'clock p. m., and were kindly received by the brethren, who, in anticipation of our coming, had made preparations for holding a meeting some days here.

While we found a number alive to the church and the interests of religion, we are sorry to say that a general apathy has seemed to prevail to a great extent for some time. The field of labor in this vicinity has not been improved as assiduously as we would wish, or as is essential for the prosperity of the church. We have found that any field of labor under divine culture gives signs of life and material prosperity; and we hope in the future to see better indications in this portion of the moral vineyard.

The past condition of the church invites particular attention, it having, as Paul says, been tried in the fire, and emerged from the trial stronger and purer than it seems to be now in the days of quiet and peace. I allude, brethren, to the castigation laid on you by the Rev. Martin.

The present prospects of the church are improving. The growth of the church at this place may be slow, but we think it substantial. Many evidences of prosperity are visible here that were not some time ago. There were two accessions during the meeting, which lasted from Friday evening until Tuesday night. The attendance and behavior during this meeting were unexceptionably good, and we think the word preached was kindly received, and had some effect even among those who made no demonstration.—Among the brethren we were pleased to note the happy effect of preaching.

I cannot conclude without acknowledging the great kindness extended to us by the brethren and sisters. Brethren and sisters, I hope we may often meet here. It affords me pleasure to contemplate our meetings here on earth; how much more can we enjoy in our final meeting above the skies! Brethren let us strive to follow in the narrow path, that we may enter in at the gate of immortality.

ELIAS AUVIL.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I often was called to reflect upon the words in the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." It seemed to me to be the mind of some that when we become Christians we would be tempted and tried whether we would prove faithful or not. That the Lord would tempt us to sin I could not believe; but that the evil one does, I know. For a time I thought the translation was incorrect. I had a conversation with you, and your opinion was that the translation was correct. I was not fully satisfied, and wrote a letter to Charles Finney, President of Oberlin College. He answered me a short time before his death. His answer is as follows:

"The translation is correct; but temptation means trial. The petition means, 'Lead us not into trials, but deliver us from afflictions and suffering, that is, from natural evil.' It does not mean, 'Lead us not into temptation to sin.'"

J. FAHNESTOCK.

UNION CENTER, Elk Co., Kan.

Dear Brother Quinter:

I suppose you get but little news from southern Kansas. I will try to give the readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN a few lines from this section of country.—The church here is in a tolerably healthy condition. There have been about twelve additions during the past season. We number about thirty members in this arm of the church.

Health is pretty good here at this time, but ague was very prevalent during the fall and first part of the winter season.—We have had no winter to speak of. In November we had ice 1 1/2 to 2 inches thick, and about the same the first week in this month (February), but it is nice and warm now. I see snakes and other sleepers around like spring; in fact, the entire winter, so far, has been more like spring than winter.

The wheat crop promises very fine, but no marvel, as this is certainly the greatest wheat growing section of country this side of California. The crop last year was heavy; as high as 57 bushels per acre, is reported in Cowly county. The field averaged 37 1/2 bushels per acre. Cowley, Butler, Sedgewick and Sumner counties are reported to have produced 3,500,000 bushels of wheat the past season.—As much as 18 bushels was raised to the acre, volunteer, that is, the stubble was turned under and left to take its chance.

Now, brethren, while the staff of natural life is thus easily raised in such astonishing abundance, the staff of spiritual life, the true bread that cometh down from heaven, is hardly so much as known; there is every assurance that, if the seed could be sown in the hearts of the people, the spiritual harvest would surpass the carnal harvest. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he may send forth laborers into his harvest."

Brother James:

We have retired from our farm to this place. It is quite a business place.—There are 8 members living here; but we are amongst the "Pattons," or "New Dunkard's," as they call themselves. We have meeting once a month in their house. They have their communion meeting on the 2nd Sabbath of February. Brother McClure from Ohio, will be with us on that day, and will preach for them at 11 o'clock, a. m. In the evening he will preach at Burnettsville, and will be with us, perhaps, a week or so.

Brother James, we see through your paper that some brethren will soon start on a tour across the waters to preach. I think this is all right. But I am told by some friends from New York State that they never heard tell of such people till they came here. I think the Brethren never had any meetings in that State; or, at least, we never heard of any church in that State. People come here and wonder why the Brethren do not come there and preach. One young woman came here from New York last fall. She attended some of our meetings, and became convinced that she should join the church. Brother Joseph Amich baptized her, and now she comes out in a beautiful uniform and has wondered that she never heard of such people.

From your brother,
GEORGE R. KEEVER.

A Change.

By urgent request, I have concluded to issue Truth Triumphant in numbers of four pages each, believing that they can be more widely circulated than in book form.

- First Lesson—Baptism.
- Second " "Grace and Truth.
- Third " "Feet-washing.
- Fourth " "Brotherly Kindness.
- Fifth " "The Lord's Supper.
- Sixth " "Non-resistance.
- Seventh " "Faith and Repentance.
- Eighth " "Holy Kiss" and Charity.
- Ninth " "Non-conformity to the World.
- Tenth " "Non-essentialism measured and found too short.

These tracts will be printed in neat form and sent out at the extremely low price of one cent each, or eighty cents per hundred. Brethren who intend to travel should order several hundred and distribute them wherever they go. One brother sent for 500, saying he would scatter them in places where the Brethren are but little known. Order immediately, so that that I may know how many to get printed. I am unable to get many printed and then have them remain on hand for some time. Sometimes we count too many and sometimes too few. I thought 1000 copies of Truth Awakeners would supply all demands; but, contrary to my expectations, they were all gone in ten days.

What is the result of sending out tracts and book? No doubt many have asked this question and answered it satisfactorily to themselves. But for the benefit of those who have not yet solved this problem I will say that, one of the results of scattering tracts is this: They fall into the hands of those who never heard of the Brethren, and then they send for the Brethren to come and preach for them. Another result is, the people read them, and become convinced of the doctrine without ever hearing a preacher. Were we so minded we could lay before the brethren many interesting facts concerning the work of books and tracts published by Brethren; but we forbear lest we be considered boasters, which we trust we are not.

M. M. ESHELMAN.

Lanark, Ills.

BUNKER HILL, Russel Co., Kan.

Dear Brother:

As there are a great many brethren that I would like to write to, if you will permit I would like to drop a few lines through your valuable paper.

First, we send greeting to all. We are still all living in Russell county, and are blessed with reasonably good health, for which we have reason to be thankful. I will here say that I still think as I always did, that this is a good country. I raised this year one hundred and thirty-nine bushels of fall wheat from eight bushels sown, and a little over twenty-three bushels to the acre.

We would like to have some of our eastern brethren come in here. There is still plenty of good land here to homestead; and also some improved land, for sale, cheap. There is one piece of eighty acres of bottom land, about twenty acres well broken, good house with cellar under it, good well near the house, a good stable for this country, garden fenced, and some other improvements, which can be bought for four hundred dollars. I claim that all who come in here now have better chances than those who came when we did, as one can get everything he needs right here at reasonable prices, which we could not get at any price when we came here.

Brethren, in reading over our periodicals and seeing the good meetings you have, I think I must just leave and go to where we can meet with our brethren in worship; but then when I think again, I know that there are just as precious souls here to be saved as anywhere. I think if we had a few more live men here we could soon have a church. I have been trying all I could by handing my paper to my neighbors, and I have brother Eshelman's book, "Non conformity to the World," which I am passing around. All say it is true. The people here would like to hear the Brethren preach. I think the Danish move a good one; but there are also a great many calls here, which have not been answered, that ought to be filled. Now, brethren, we feel an interest in your prayers. Pray that we, too, may have the gospel preached in its purity, and that we may all press upward and onward toward the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

Your weak brother,
W. B. HIMES.

Original Sin.

To the Rev. Mr. Simons, Pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, (German,) Indiana, Pa.

SIR:—I have heard your sermon on "Original Sin," a subject of which I have heard much in my time; and from what I heard others say, I had come to the conclusion that I could not understand it, and was very glad when you announced your intention to treat upon that subject.—Well, I heard all you said, and I think I understood every word you did say, and I suppose you said all that is worth saying on that side of the subject; and if the expressions of some of the audience are to be regarded as a criterion, and the word of God as a standard, you said some things that, to say the least, were not very edifying. The term "Original Sin," I could never find in the Bible, and when you referred us to the action of Cain, to self-willed children, to children subject to suffering and death, and asserted that by nature we are all the children of wrath and have nothing to expect but the wrath of God, and recommended baptism as the antidote for all this, I must confess I felt somewhat disappointed. I was not alone in the disappointment. Others expressed themselves in unmistakable terms. I recalled to mind your sermon delivered some time ago on Matt. xviii. 23-35, in which you tried to show that all are freely pardoned; but now you say there is nothing to be expected but the wrath of God, unless we are baptized, and this after asserting our totally depraved nature, so that "There is none good; and that we cannot originate anything good."

In your sermon on baptism you admitted that there is no clear case of infant baptism in the Bible, and that there is no clear evidence of its use beyond the second century, but tried to leave the impression that in baptism the child in some mysterious way partakes of the blessings of the Holy Trinity. Is the word of God such a book of mysteries? Is it not true that it is so plain that "the wayfaring man though a fool shall not err therein"?—Please tell, Who originated infant baptism with the office of sponsor? Is not this a human invention? Since man is so desperate, why follow his devices? I have had nearly a quarter of a century's experience in training children, and I find no material difference in the dispositions of those who have received "this grace," as you are pleased to call it, and those who have not. Please tell, did you ever see a child who was baptized exempt from irritability, suffering and death? The effect of Adam's transgression is death entailed on all his posterity, baptized or unbaptized. There is no hope but the resurrection from the dead: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should walk in newness of life."—Rom. vi. 6.

John's baptism was from heaven.—Christ received it, and in so doing sanctioned it; hence it is not of man's invention; but infant sprinkling claims no such origin or sanction; hence it is not to be relied on—it is a base counterfeit.

Christ says, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and thus they are presented as our standard of comparison that we might aim to arrive at a similar degree of perfection; but you would have them still better. When God says it is very good, Satan says not so, and Eve is tempted, partakes of the forbidden fruit, and sin enters and death is the consequence. Beware, ye who would improve upon the word of God.— Because Christ says to Nicodemus, "What is born of the flesh is flesh," and "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." You say a child cannot enter.— Who told you so? You treat the child as though there were no reconciliation. Please read 2 Cor. v. 19-21, then read Rom. v. 13. Then ask your questions—"When do persons begin to sin?" "When is sin implanted in the hearts of children?" Peter says, Acts ii. 38, "Repent and be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins;" and in Acts iii. 19 he says, "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted that your sins may be blotted out;" Paul says that his instructor, Ananias, taught him, "Be baptized and wash away thy sins." Acts xxii. 16. From these texts it is plain that baptism is for the remission of individual sins, while you would have it to answer for Adam's transgression, not remembering that John the Baptist says, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," John i. 29. Look at this quotation, and please tell what is the "sin of the world." The effect of Adam's transgression is passed upon all men, even death, and that is destroyed in Christ; for "He hath taken the power from him who hath the power of death, which is the devil," says Paul. Is not this sufficient? Can we not believe and trust in such a Savior, or must we add to his word and promises? One apostle says, "Sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John iii. 4. Another says, "Where no law is, there is no transgression." Rom. iv. 15. And Paul says, Acts xvii. 30, "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." If God winked at the ignorance of the Athenians, and did not hold them accountable when they had no law, will he not also accept the reconciliation which Christ wrought for infants, especially since there is no law in their case, and consequently no transgression nor sin?

But you ask the question: "When do persons begin to be sinners?" I answer, with the Apostle, when they transgress the law. Paul directs, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord." Mark the words "IN THE LORD." "Honor thy father and thy mother" (which is the first commandment with promise.) Eph. vi. 1, 2. Is there any commandment to children prior to this? You say with Peter, "The promise is unto you and your children;" but you do not quote the whole text; why not say, "and to all who are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Does the calling militate against the doctrine of infant baptism?"

But probably you are ready to ask the question, "In what does the reconciliation consist?" "What are the effects of that reconciliation?" I answer, in Adam's disobedience many were made sinners, so in the obedience of Christ shall many be made righteous. Rom. v. 19. How many? Answer, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22. And if they have not transgressed the law of God, will you not allow them to appear with him when he shall come the second time without sin unto salvation? See Heb. ix. 38; also Rev. xiv. 4; compare Rev. vii. 9-14. If they at any time transgressed the law of God, knowingly, they are not virgins, but if they have applied the blood of Christ according to his institution, then they have made their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. (The hundred and forty and four thousand (a prophetic number), who have not transgressed the law of God, in whose mouth was found no guile, who are virgins (emblem of innocence), are represented as standing with the Lamb on Mount Zion. Is not the Lamb the head of the church, and Mount Zion the church itself? Are not the innocent children fit subjects of the kingdom without any ceremonies contrived by human expediency, or ordained for the salvation of actual transgressors, by him who came not to do his own will but the will of his Father?)

Sincerely,
JOSEPH HOLSOPLLE.

JACOB H. KURTZ.

Near Leesburg, Kosciusko county, Indiana, Feb. 22, 1876, Elder JOHN B. NEFF, aged 56 years, 6 months and 17 days. Disease, kidney and liver complaint. Brother Neff was born in Franklin county, Virginia. There he united with the people of God, and in 1850, moved to Wabash, Ind. In 1855 he was elected to the ministry. In 1864 he moved to Marshall county, Ind., and lived there 9 years, and then was ordained to the full ministry. In 1873 he moved to Kosciusko, Indiana, and lived there until his death. Thus one of the old pillars of the church has passed away. Brother Neff leaves a wife (a sister), and 4 children to mourn their loss, which we trust is his great gain. Before he died he called for the Elders of the church, and was anointed with oil, in the name of the Lord. Funeral services by brother Daniel Wysong and the writer from 2 Cor. v. 1.

Pimples, Eruptions, Rough Skin.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated with the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with serofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by dealers in medicines.

THE NAME IN THE SAND.

BY MRS. HANNAH F. GOULD.

Alone I walked the ocean strand;
A pearl shell was in my hand;
I stooped and wrote upon the sand

My name, the year, the day;
As onward from the spot I passed,
One lingering look behind I cast;
A wave came rolling high and fast,
And washed my lines away.

And so, methought, 't will surely be
With every mark on earth for me;
A wave of dark oblivion's sea

Will sweep across the place,
Where I have trod the sandy shore
Of time, and been to be no more;
Of me, my day, the name I bore,
To leave no track nor trace.

And yet with him who counts the sands,
And hold the water in his hands,
I knew a lasting record stands

Inscribed against my name—
Of all this mortal part has wrought,
Of all this thinking soul has thought,
And from these fleeting moments caught,
For glory or for shame.

Discussion—Miller and Walker.

The propositions under consideration during the next two days read as follows:

3. The teaching and practice of the German Baptists on the subject of Feet washing is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.*

4. The teaching and practice of the church of the Disciples on the subject of Feet-washing is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

The following are some of the arguments offered by brother Miller to prove the teaching and practice of the German Baptist church.

1. The command of Feet-washing is founded upon Christ, and it comes to us in the power of Christ. We approach him in this, like in all others, as the wisdom and power of God to us—the author and finisher of our faith. He begins it, carries it on, finishes it. The difference with reference to this command as practiced by christendom in our day is founded upon opinion and not upon Christ. Churches fail to observe it, not because Christ says they must not observe it, but because they are of opinion that it need not be observed—that it is not necessary, &c.

2. The command includes believers only, and no one else, because Jesus and Paul both put it there.

3. The third argument is based upon the penalty against the non-observance of the command. We have no greater command in the Bible—no greater penalty against any: "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me."

4. There is something spiritual in it; otherwise we should not contend for it. This is true, first, because it is put among spiritual beings and none other; second, Peter's spiritual welfare depended upon it; also that of the widow spoken of by Paul.

5. The fifth argument is based upon what the Savior said to Peter, "What I do thou knowest not now, but shalt know hereafter." The Savior did not tell Peter that it was intended to cleanse from filth—that he was observing an ancient custom; but that it was something new—something not practiced before, and that he (Peter) did not know its import now. From this Peter learned, 1. That unless he washed or was washed he could have no part with Christ; 2. That he that is washed (lavo) needeth not save to wash (nipio) his feet, but is clean every whit; and ye are clean, but not all. The idea is, that he that is baptized needeth not save to wash his feet, but that he does need. Both are cleansings, and he who receives the first, needs the second for a similar import. But the wicked Judas was not benefitted by either.

Some of the arguments offered by elder Walker to sustain the teaching and practice of his church were the following:

1. The universal necessity to wash feet to keep them clean, makes it a universal practice.

2. When necessary, it becomes the duty of every child of God to wash his feet.

5. It is an act of hospitality, and should be practiced in private families where we have basins and towels, and not bring them to the church.

I am not able to give elder Walker's arguments in regular order, because he did not present them in that way. I mean, he did not present them by numbering them, and therefore I was unable to know what he considered his first, second, or third argument. Brother Miller displayed great ability in building arguments, and no less tact in bringing the point in the argument to the surface, and holding it up before the minds of his hearers, in a plain, simple and logical manner.

Elder Walker, endeavored to show that it is a duty to wash feet when they are dirty in order to have them cleansed, and argued that on that account it became a universal necessity, since the feet of everybody needed washing for that purpose; but objected to washing feet in the church, or bringing towels and basins to the church and engaging in washing "one another's feet," there. He considered it a part of decency for every Christian to come to church after he had washed his feet clean. Brother Miller freely admitted that it was the duty of every Christian to keep his feet clean, and that it was indecent to go to church without having not only the feet, but the hands and face clean; but beyond all this he found the Savior washing the feet of his disciples in "a large upper room," in an assembled capacity, and that, too, when they were "every whit clean," and therefore argued that it was not done by the Savior because their feet were dirty, but for some other purpose than to cleanse them—for the very purpose which he set forth in his fourth argument.

Walker insisted that there was nothing spiritual in it, but that the Savior meant to teach them a lesson of humility, because a spirit of ambition had arisen among them, as proven by the mother of Zebedee's children asking the Savior to grant seats at his right and left hand for her two sons; and said they as a church taught and practiced it in that light, and that there was much good in it; in proof of which he related a circumstance of two of their preachers stopping in the town of Wabash one summer evening, and before retiring they concluded it was necessary to wash their feet. They therefore went into the back yard, and by the light of the moon engaged in washing one another's feet. While thus engaged, an infidel was looking on and was so struck by this example of humility that it led to his conversion.

Brother Miller thought that if the washing of the feet of two ministers in a back yard resulted in so much good as the conversion of an infidel, then it was certainly right to wash feet where many more than one sinner may profit by the example of humility, and many be induced to leave the ways of sin and be led to the blessed Savior. He proved very emphatically from Walker's own examples that it was not only right to wash feet when they were not dirty—in an assembled capacity—to teach humility, but that it was a direct command from him who "spoke as never man spake," for all Christians to do so in a spiritual sense. There certainly was something spiritual connected with it, otherwise the Savior would have had no occasion to wash their feet when they were clean, and on Peter's refusing to be washed, to tell him that he could have no part with him—that it did not mean this universal necessity; for that would carry it out of the church, to the sinner and the infidel; but that the import was spiritual, and was to be engaged in by Christians who were assembled to receive spiritual good, and that then and there was the only proper time and place where the washing instituted by the Savior could be engaged in to divine acceptance, and to the benefit of those who engage in it. The Savior put it there—he commanded his disciples to practice it there—Paul did practice it there—the German Baptists teach and practice it there, and therefore their teaching and practice on the subject of Feet washing is strictly scriptural. Many other topics, such as "ancient custom," "impropriety to wash feet at church," might be referred to, but my communication would become too lengthy. I therefore close by assuring your many readers, that the Savior's teaching on the subject of feet washing did not suffer in the hands of brother Miller during this discussion.

Fraternally yours,

J. G. R.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Feet Washing.

BY NOAH LONANECKER.

In the American Christian Review of 1875, No. 48, the editor purports to give some light on the above subjects, and through the influence of one of his readers, as well as by the request of a brother, I will give the article a brief notice. He says, "When we see persons performing anything in the name of religion and claiming the authority of Scripture, we ought at least to give them a respectful attention and not treat them with indifference or disrespect." How far he can keep his word sacred when he circulates the following slander, or untruth, let the reader judge. He says, "We have been informed repeatedly that where they practice this ceremony now they only wash one foot of each person." I suppose the Adversary took advantage of ignorance in circulating the slander. I have read church history to some extent, and have been an eye-witness in different places where the rite was performed, and have some knowledge of the doctrine that different churches teach on the subject, and with the knowledge I have gained from each, I meet the charge as false. The writer says that in "John 13: 1—10, and 1 Tim. 5: 10, the reader will find all there is in the New Testament on feet washing." I suppose he means those are the only places where it is commanded; if otherwise, he must not know all that is written. His first argument against feet-washing as a church ordinance he pretends to draw from 1 Tim. 5: 10. He says, "1. If feet-washing had been practiced in the church as it is by the people alluded to above, and some others, in connection with the communion, there would not have been widows in the church 'threescore years old' who had not 'washed the saints' feet,' and Paul, in describing those to be 'taken into the number,' would not have said, 'if she have washed the saints' feet.'" Let us prove his argument. On Lord's day evening after services a poor widow 'threescore years old,' manifests fruits of repentance and makes application to be received into the church, which is granted her. Some four or five days afterwards she makes application to be received into the number of widows; and, although she is a full member of the church, and has brought up children, and lodged strangers, &c.; yet she has not washed the saints' feet, for she has not had any opportunity of attending communion services, and therefore cannot be classed with the number of widows that Paul refers to. But again; some members belong to the church for months before they attend communion services. The writer evidently aimed to make his readers believe that a widow threescore years old must necessarily have belonged to church a long time, and therefore often communed, but I have shown that such is not the case. But it is more probable that Paul referred to the unfaithful widows. I fail to see an argument in the writer's assertions above, although he says, "this shows that there was no such standing practice among them." But this will be more fully met in my reply to his second argument, which I will now briefly notice.

He says, "2. There is no evidence in Scripture, or in any early writing, of any such practice as washing feet, in time of worship, or associated with worship, either public or private, as a religious rite, an ordinance, an act of devotion, or in any other way. There is no intimation that the washing of the saints' feet, alluded to, 1 Tim. 5: 10, was a religious rite, or an ordinance connected with worship any more than lodging strangers. It is put down in the list of 'good works,' and not religious rites or devotions." My reply to the above will meet all his principal arguments. "There is none good but one, that is God." No works can be good, but such as are commanded by God. "We are created in Christ Jesus unto good works." Bringing up children is a good work, for the good Lord has commanded it. Lodging strangers is a good work, for God has commanded it. Washing feet is a good work, for our Lord and Master has commanded it. Every work that God commanded is good, but not unless performed where and in the manner that God has commanded, and God never commanded that we should do all his commands in the family circle. If the Lord had not commanded the washing of the saints' feet Paul would have added to the word, for he required it of widows as a good work. From this we learn two things; first, that Paul taught feet-washing as a command of God, for he calls it a good work and required its performance. Secondly, Paul could not have referred to it as he did, if he had not before taught the same doctrine. As further proof that the Lord commanded feet-washing, and that the apostles were therefore to teach it as a good work, as well as the manner and the place in which it should be performed, I refer the reader to John 13: 1—17. John informs us that "Jesus knew that the Father had given all things into his hands, &c.;" he riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself. After that, he poureth water into a basin, and began to wash his disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded." After he had washed their feet, he said, "Ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Ye should do. Should as an auxiliary is the imperfect of shall, and by consulting Webster's work on page 1223 for the meaning of should, we are referred to shall; for, says he, "Should is everywhere used in the same connection and the same senses as shall, as its imperfect. On page 1212 he says, "as an auxiliary, shall indicates a duty or necessity whose obligation is derived from the person speaking. It ordinarily expresses, in the second and third persons, a command, a threat, or a promise." On page 925, he classes ought and should under the head of synonyms, and says, "both words imply obligation, but ought is the stronger." Should then impresses a command, and ought no less for it is the stronger. Christ attached the same meaning to ought as Webster. He says, "woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" Why, Lord? Because ye left undone what "ye ought to have done." Matth. 23: 23. But again, "cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness." Why, Lord? Because he ought to have put my money to the exchangers, but did not. Matth. 25: 24-30. Considering all this, how forcibly do the words "ye also ought to wash one another's feet," and "ye should do as I have done to you," present themselves to the mind! Christ washed his disciples' feet; he gave them an example; and no lover of the truth will ever say that he did not command his disciples to wash one another's feet. But like the editor of the A. C. Review, so there are others who contend that Christ did not wash his disciples' feet in public, nor in time of worship at all, but in the private circle, and therefore never taught his disciples to wash one another's feet in the public assembly of the Lord. Let the Bible settle this matter. The communion,—which all observe in the public assembly of the Lord,—was instituted by Christ in the night in which he was betrayed, in a large upper room furnished and prepared, and devoted for the time being to public service. In this room Christ's disciples had prepared a meal, and when evening was come they sat down, and "as they were eating," Jesus took the bread and cup and instituted the communion. As they were eating this meal Judas was made known as the Traitor. Matth. 26: 21-25. John informs us that this took place when they were eating the supper at which Jesus washed his disciple's feet. John 13: 18-26. This is evidence that feet-washing took place at the same time and place where the communion was instituted. Again; after they had eaten the meal at which the communion was instituted, Jesus said unto Peter, "Verily I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." This Matthew informs us, took place after they had gone out from the place where the communion was instituted. John informs us that after the meal at which the Master washed his disciple's feet, Jesus said unto Peter, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, the cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice." This is another evidence that feet-washing took place at the time and place where the communion was instituted, and therefore in the public assembly of the Lord. Some contend that the supper mentioned in John 13, cannot be the same that is mentioned by Matth., Mark, and Luke, at which the communion was instituted, from the fact that the one mentioned by John took place before the feast of the passover, while the other did not. A careful examination will show that they were both celebrated before the feast of the passover. The meal at which the communion was instituted was celebrated in the night in which Christ was betrayed. After the eating of the meal, and the institution of the communion, Christ instructed his disciples, and then was betrayed. Early next morning the Jews led Jesus from Caiaphas unto the judgement hall; "and they themselves went not into the judgement hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover." John 18: 28. So we see that the Jews' passover was yet in the future. After the trial had continued a little longer, Pilate said unto the Jews, "Ye have a custom that I should release unto you one at the passover;" and John informs us that "it was the preparation of the passover." John 18: 39, 19: 14. How does this read in connection with the following from the A. C. Review? "The feast of the passover was over before the communion was instituted. The feet-washing was before the passover, and the institution of the communion was after it." When it comes to this, "let God be true but every man a liar." The editor of the A. C. Review says, that the "disciples had been to the bath and washed all over; but in coming up their feet had contracted dirt, and needed washing before they retired; Christ says, 'he that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.'" Which of the two knows whereof he affirms? The fact however is, Christ did not refer to washing away of the filth of the flesh, but to the washing of regeneration, which was for the answer of a good conscience toward God. The editor says, "those who wash feet as a religious rite, do not wash their feet because they need it." Exactly so. We do not receive water-baptism because our bodies are filthy; but still we feel that we need it, because the Lord said so. We do not have our feet washed because they are dirty; but still we consider it necessary, for the Master has said so. The editor of the A. C. Review further asks, "if washing the saint's feet had been a religious rite connected with the communion, how could Paul have omitted it when giving that which he received of the Lord?" Paul wrote 1 Cor. 11. to set things in order, and 1 Tim. 5: 10. is proof that the church still observed the ordinance of feet-washing after the manner of its institution; but not so the Lord's Supper and holy communion: and in order to set things in order Paul necessarily had to mention the Supper and communion in the manner in which he did. Christ washed his disciples' feet in the public assembly of the Lord, and then commanded them to wash one another's feet; and in their teaching they were to teach all nations to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them. Feet-washing was one of those things, and the apostles taught it as a command; if otherwise, Paul could not have referred to it as he did in 1 Tim. 5: 10. "Where there is no law there is no transgression." All our Christian duties are good works. If a widow neglects to wash the saint's feet, she neglects a good work, and therefore her duty as a Christian; and I have sufficiently shown that this good work, or Christian duty, is to be performed in the public assembly of the Lord, and in connection with the Lord's supper and holy communion. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," are the words that close Christ's essay on feet-washing. We can only purify our souls in obeying the truth.

To understand the world is wiser than to condemn it. To study the world is better than to shun it. To use the world is nobler than to abuse it. To make the world better, lovelier and happier is the noblest work of man or woman. There are many intelligent and talented persons who waste the best part of their time in useless dreaming. Their years are spent in the world of fancy and unreality that their imagination creates about them. Mental phantoms render them insensible to present opportunities, and prosperous chances slip by them unheeded and unnoticed, until their youth and energies are all gone. Then, in adversity and old age they attribute their want of prosperity and worldly success to some imaginary fate or destiny, even yet blind to the truth that their want of prosperity is simply the result of opportunities wasted.

—Many persons feel an irreconcilable enmity toward those whom they have injured.

AN ANCIENT SPANISH POEM.

O! let the soul its slumbers break,
Arouse its senses and awake,
To see how soon

Life, with its glory, glides away,
And the stern footsteps of decay
Come stealing on.

And while we eye the rolling tide,
Down which our flowing minutes glide

Away so fast,
Let us the present hour employ,
And deem each future dream of joy
Already past.

Let no vain hope deceive the mind—
No happier let us hope to find

To-morrow than to-day;
Our golden dreams of yore were bright;
Like them the present shall delight—
Like them, decay.

Our lives, like hasting streams, must be,
That into one engulfing sea
Are doomed to fall,—
The sea of death, whose waves roll on O'er king and kingdom, crown and throne,
And swallow all.

Alike the siver's lordly tide,
Alike the humble rivulet's glide
To that sad wave;
Death levels property and pride,
The rich and poor sleep side by side
Within the grave.

Our birth is but the starting place,
Life is the running of the race,
And death the goal:
There all those glittering toys are brought;
That path alone, of all unsought,
Is found of all.

Say, then, how poor and little worth
Are all those glittering toys of earth
That lure us here?

Dreams of a sleep that death must break.
Alas! before it bids us wake,
Ye disappear!

A Glorious Fruition.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Margaret F. Worrell, of Philadelphia, Penn'a.

God, Heaven, Salvation: these are the comprehensive synonyms of the believer's vocabulary. God means good, Heaven means up, and Salvation means holiness. In an anticipative and imperfect way, they may be all ours here. But their full realization is not for this life. The magnetism would be so overpowering and the rapture so intense, that the soul would leap out of its earthly casket. At the foot of Sinai the Israelites had a glimpse of what lies beyond the veil. Thick clouds, fearful lightnings, terrific thunders, an appalling trumpet peal, fire and smoke, and a dreadful shuddering of the rocky mount, attested the glorious Majesty and awful Holiness of the I AM. "So terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake." On Mount Tabor the three chosen Apostles had a faint shimmer of "the Excellent Glory," and "fell on their faces and were sore afraid." On his way to Damascus, Paul was felled to the earth, trembling, astonished, and blind with the excessive brightness of Him to whom all the luminaries of heaven are less than a tiny taper to us at midday. On the Isle of Patmos the holy seer had a view of God in the flesh as was never granted to any mortal since sin blurred the vision of humanity. "Eyes like a flame of fire; feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; His voice as the sound of many waters; in His right seven stars; out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and His countenance was as the sun shineth in His strength." What terrible Majesty. No wonder that John says, "when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead." These foregleamings give us an idea of what the Apocalypse of Jesus Christ will unfold, the irreconcilable antagonism between holiness and sin, and the necessity of death in order to make personal fellowship with God possible and blissful.

A hundred miles apart, both in the crucible of the great Refiner, you in a populous, bustling city, and I in an obscure cottage among the hills of Hanover, I cordially greet you with the wonderful salutation of the exiled evangelist, which contains an animating periscope of "the inheritance of the saints." "Grace be unto you, and peace, from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the Seven Spirits which are before His Throne; and from Jesus Christ, who is the Faithful Witness, and the First-begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the Kings of the earth. Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to Him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." Rev. 1: 4, 5, 6.

I have now wished you all it is in God's Infinite Resources to bestow, and more than your eternal development will ever be able fully to appropriate. O the Eternity of the saints! What unimagined heights and depths of bliss and glory and honor await "the pure in heart" in the unexplored future! We can easily put together and pronounce these three letters—G-o-d; but it requires the "forever and forever" to unseal the abysses of wonder and beauty and ecstasy which are hidden therein; and the "forever" will forever leave more unrevealed than it reveals. It will be always the "forever," the future never diminishes by so much as a second, though all finite arithmetic fail to enumerate the years that are past O that dread, that blissful word, "FOREVER." Just as little as we can fathom the Divine Name, so little can we gauge the bottomless depths of the three opposite letters—s-i-n. Here the "forever" comes in with all its overwhelming horror. Holiness empties "all the fullness of God" into the renovated soul, while sin drains all the fullness of Divine wrath, brimming the cup of woe eternally with the wormwood of remorse, and the fire and brimstone of Righteous indignation. The impassable gulf of Eternity unceasingly echoes from its lathomless caverns the awful words, God, SIX, FOREVER.

God is Love, and love is communicative, and holiness is the condition of its reciprocity; so that in the love of God we have not only ground for hope and confidence and exultation, but for fear and trembling. The very goodness of God creates a hell for all ungodness. The very love of God must needs be "a consuming fire" to whatever is morally unlovely. "The wrath of God" is always the "wrath of the Lamb," and this is the wrath of Goodness, and is "revealed from Heaven against all unrighteousness and ungodliness of men." Injured Purity smokes with indignation. But the saints are safe. Their life is of God and in God. They live God, speak God, smile God, and even weep God just so far as they are like God. For what are the tears of saints, but the expressions of God's grief in them. The Holy Ghost in the holy people is pressed with "groanings which cannot be uttered." A genuine Christian sigh or tear is as expressive of the Divine as the human. God has no tears to shed, but the most intense weeping requires no tears. God is incapable of sin, but not of emotion on account of sin. The holiest natures feel the deepest, and God deepest of all. Our perfect oneness with Him in the Life Everlasting, and our perfect sympathy with all His ends and measures, will completely do away with the agony arising from the memory of lost ones, which troubles so many good people. God is not impassible. No being so passible as He. Nothing can disturb the eternal equipoise of His Nature. His feelings do not overpower His Reason, Righteousness, and Will. The Hell into which He perpetually looks, and the writhings which He sees, and the groans which He hears, do not make Heaven any less Heaven to Him. He feels aright in relation to all things and all creatures. There would be and could be no

Heaven, either for God or any of His creatures, save in the alternative of blotting memory from the soul, or being exalted into an altitude of moral excellence and dignity which can rejoice in righteousness, no matter who is in Hell, or what they suffer. No one can suffer beyond his capacity, and all that capacity was given for the enjoyment of God; and when voluntarily surrendered to the service of evil, God has a right, and is obliged, to fill it to the utmost with the "fruit of its own doings." The Holy Ghost can be grieved, but not to the diminution of His Divine Joy. A pure, unalloyed spiritual grief is the same in all moral natures. To be morally hurt by wrong, and not be in the wrong, is a very different matter from the feeling of resentment of which we are conscious under sin. At this point is the switch where so many turn off in misconceptions of God, and Heaven, and "the just made perfect."

In the "great salvation" that awaits the saints, the moral sensibilities will be augmented instead of diminished. Grace does not petrify, nor does glory destroy what grace begins. Death does not dwarf the Christian, but on the contrary is a bursting forth into magnitude. Sin alone constricts and shrivels. It is through the devil's lattice that the redeemed bound into liberty, power, and greatness. No sin, no death; no death as the fruit of sin, no redemption and no Heaven. "We shall see Him as he is and we shall be like Him." This is the central idea of "the glory to be revealed." All the objectivities of Heaven, are but the radiations of this "mystery of Godliness." O the ineffable rapture of the Beatific Vision! O the unutterable ecstasy, the inconceivable marvel, of the Beatific Assimilation! O the immaculateness of the blood washed elect who sit at Jehovah's eternal banquet of Love! "PURE AS HE IS PURE." This is "the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." A sinless, painless, sorrowless, tearless, deathless Eternity! To know God, to see Him as He is, and be so conformed to Him in the properties of His character, as to see oneself in Him as a man beholds his natural face in a glass. Deeper and closer still. To know God as Adam knew Eve before she was extracted from his person; as the Virgin knew her Divinely-conceived Son before He was born. To know God as He was known by Him who was in His bosom in a by-gone Eternity! The thought is too vast, and glorious, and blissful for our present powers and capacities. This is Heaven, subjectively—begun on earth and consummated above. "This is Eternal Life, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." Knowing God thus, and not only knowing about Him, is the soul's true rest. Short of this there is no salvation—no Heaven. To grow up in God's Eternity, and unfold "the power of an endless life" through interminable ages in Love, Holiness, and Wisdom, who can conceive the moral stature to which we may attain! What Princedoms, and Priesthoods, and Royalties, and Hierarchies, and exaltations in power and glory and blessedness, are funded in the God-man Mediator for the God-owned, God owning adherents of the Cross!

There is an incoming of God in regeneration as real as in the Incarnation. "As Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." "I in them, and Thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." John 17. O the full realization of this in the upper world. The unending years of the saints can never know one moment of weariness or dullness in the unfolding of "all the fullness of God." Deity can no more be exhausted of glory and joy and wonder, than an unbeginning, unending existence can be measured. And then to think that the amazing apocalypse of the eternally unsearchable, is not only to be to us, but of us, revealing ourselves to ourselves no less than God to us. It is to be ever a part of ourselves, as the development of our bodies in this life. To know God experimentally and personally forever, as we know ourselves physically and psychologically, is Eternal Life. This is to feel God as emanations from Him, as He felt us before we were objective to His eternal Mind and creative Power. To lose sight of this, is to miss all that is supremely grand in the grace of Christ. To err here is to invert the Divine order, and give the objective precedence over the subjective. As to the source of salvation, the Objective is first in order and importance; as to the means of salvation it is inferior. But without personal subjectivity, both source and means are unavailing. To be of Him, in Him, with Him, seeing, feeling, knowing like Him, unfolding our possibilities in His realities, sweeping along with Him in the comprehension of and assent to His purposes, and ever spreading out in the magnitudes and majesties of His Godhead, O the depth, O the glory, O the grace, O the unending, ever deepening wonder! Words fail us, and thoughts no less, to set forth or conceive what is signified by knowing God. I know Brother Quinter, have seen him, have heard him preach, have read him into the furniture of my soul. But if he had the power, as God has in new-creating us, to imbreathe himself as the life of my life, and complement my being by his own, in what a different sense would I know him. I would then be Quintered through and through, so that it would be no longer I, but Quinter that liveth in me. This may give a faint illustration of what is comprehended in being born of God. It is to be Christed—possessed, permeated, kindled, pulsated, filled, rounded out, and dominated by the Eternal God. To be a Christian is no half-hearted matter, as the Incarnation was no half-hearted work, and Heaven is no diluted joy and barren glory and insipid immortality. What God has in reserve is great, and wonderful, and inexhaustible, so that each revolving cycle in the zodiac of Redemption will entrance and thrill the Lamb's Wife with deeper tides of joy, making the beatitudes more blessed, the glory more luminous, the Divine assimilation more perfect and intensely delectable, and the soul's Heaven more and more what God is. Immortality derived to be eternally filled and flooded and swayed, and widened and filled and flooded again, by Immortality Absolute! O, "the joy unspeakable and full of glory! "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, nor have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." "Now we see through a glass darkly, but THEN FACE TO FACE." Who will not break alliance with sin and hell in view of such an Eternity?

Where to Labor.

BY I. M. BROWER.

There is evidently a great interest manifested in the brotherhood for the spread of the gospel, undiluted, and in its primitive simplicity. This anxiety is a hopeful sign of prosperity in Zion, to be realized in the not very remote future, from which we take courage to submit for consideration a few suggestions as to how it may become practicable to meet all the calls for having the truth proclaimed and taught. It is worthy of notice, in the first place, that all who name the name of Jesus should realize that they are called to preform their part in this work; that they are required to contribute their talent, be it ever so humble; in short, that each one is called to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. But every one is not required to perform the same labor, or to labor in the same department of service. There are many branches of usefulness, all contributing to the same end—the prosperity of Zion; and in one department or another, in one capacity or another, every child of God can find something that he is able to do, in a greater or less degree of efficiency, according as it is given him; and all are under obligations to do all the good they can, to contribute all they can in time and money to extend Christ's kingdom. It becomes each one, then, to examine carefully whether he is doing all for Christ and his cause that he can. If, upon examination, any find that they have, they can have the happy consciousness that they will not be held accountable for the lack of progress in the extension of Christ's kingdom. If it were so, that the church and all its members have discharged and are discharging their whole duty, we might take consolation unto ourselves even if we should see the church gradually falling off in membership in many of its oldest branches in the east, and little or no progress in many more. But is it not well for us to inquire whether the fault may not lie with ourselves. God is waiting to be gracious, and longs to bless by the outpouring of his Spirit upon his people, whenever they prove themselves worthy by their love and devotion to him. We fear the hindrance very often is in failing to improve our opportunities, in neglecting to occupy the ground and sowing good seed even in and under the jurisdiction of organized churches. In many cases the children are not suitably instructed by the church, and, in consequence, are permitted to seek religious instruction elsewhere and anywhere; and the result is, as might be rationally expected, they grow up into membership in those churches in which they were educated. Well, it may be suggested where is the difference? they become members of church; they are professing Christians at any rate. Very true, and quite satisfactory, no doubt, to those Brethren who think that other churches are best suited to promote the highest interests of their children and tending to bring them the greatest happiness here and hereafter. But those who are not of that mind, those that believe the laws of God are unchangeable, the commands of Christ were meant to be obeyed, that true religion does not change with the progress of time and the advancement of knowledge and refinement, should seriously consider whether they are emulating the wisdom of the serpent; whether they are making use of all the means that God has placed in their reach for the spread of the gospel, while neglecting to supply public religious instruction for their children, and all children that might be induced to accept of it. Not wishing by any means to disparage labor in other directions, but bidding God speed to all efforts for good, I submit it to the consideration of the earnest friends of the cause, whether this is not the most promising field in which to labor. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it" is a policy, I think, promising more substantial progress than pushing out into new places building up churches and church buildings at great expence, to be in turn deserted and left to decay in consequence of neglecting to provide instruction and society suited to the requirements of youths.

Clothed with Humility.

BY A PILGRIM BROTHER.

"Be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble." 1 Peter 5: 5.

This injunction of the apostle is not generally appreciated in its full extent. The apostle saith, "Be clothed with humility." To be clothed, is to be shielded, covered, and protected. This is, what is meant, by being clothed, in a literal point of view: If we are truly humble, "clothed with humility," we are under the protecting care of God; and as long as we continue to be truly humble, and follow in the footsteps of our blessed Savior, we are secure from the wiles and snares of the evil one. "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble." Thus we understand that the humble Christian will be sustained by the Lord. Not only will the children of God be sustained, but he will dwell with them. "I dwell in the high and lofty place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit." Is. 57: 15. Thus the more humble we become, the more shall we be exalted in the sight of God. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." James 4: 10.

My dear brethren and sisters, it is even honorable to be humble. Why, then, not be truly humble? "Before honor is humility." Prov. 15: 33. "By humility are riches and honor and life." Prov. 22: 4. Great promises, indeed, for being truly humble. It is honorable in the sight of all good men; yea, it is honorable in the sight of God and angels. "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." John 12: 26. True humility is in direct opposition to pride. There is as much difference between true humility and pride, as there is between light and darkness. The one is the offspring of God, the source and fountain of light, and of all that is good and noble, holy and lovely. The other is the offspring of the devil, the source of blackness and darkness, from whom comes all evil. Then, O my dear brethren and sisters, how should we withstand pride, in all its diversified forms! The Psalmist saith, "Him that hath a high look and a proud heart, will I not suffer;" and again, "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall;" and again, "A man's pride shall bring him low." Many other proof-texts could be produced equally strong, were it necessary to do so.

Let us take a glimpse of the innumerable miseries and evils that have been brought about through the instrumentality of pride, since the world began. It was pride that induced our first parents to partake of the forbidden fruit. It was wounded pride that caused Cain to murder his brother Abel. It was pride that induced the sons of Jacob to sell their brother Joseph. Gen. 37: 4. It was pride that caused king Pharaoh to pursue the Israelites into the Red Sea. It was through pride, that Korah, Dathan and Abiram rebelled against Moses and Aaron. In short, it was pride that caused nearly all the bloody strifes and wars since the world began to the present time. What a monster then is pride! It stands at the head of all the evils and miseries that ever transpired in the world. How should we be guarded against this gigantic evil—a world of evil. The apostle Paul tells us to "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." Eph. 6: 11. In the chapter last named, we have a description of all the armor, weapons, shields, and equipments necessary for the true soldier of the cross to have with him in his warfare against the enemy of souls. We are to have our loins girt about with truth, to have on the breast-plate of righteousness, our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; and above all, the shield of faith, and the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, and that formidable weapon, all prayer and supplication. Being equipped with all these powerful weapons and shields, the apostle tells us we "may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

The humble follower of Christ must have every weapon named ready for immediate use, not knowing when and where he may need it. The apostle Peter saith, "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, like a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour, whom resist steadfast in the faith." 1 Peter 5: 8, 9. It requires a steadfast resistance, and that in faith; hence the Savior's admonition, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." We are told by the apostle James that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God. He that will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." What think you then, proud sinner? Your days of pride and reveling in sin will soon end. Soon you will have to change time for eternity. Soon you will have to close your eyes in death; and in the hour of death you will need a friend. When all earthly friends can do you no good, then you will wish that God were your friend. But think of it! you are an enemy of God, you have lived at enmity with him, you were the friend of the world, and consequently the enemy of God. He will now forsake you. All your sinful, proud friends, nay, all the world, can do you no good, and in this condition you will have to leave the world; and as death leaves you, so judgment will find you; and if you die in your sins, God will resist you at the judgment; you will there have to hear the awful sentence pronounced, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

In conclusion, then, dear sinners, for God's sake, "Be clothed with humility;" forsake your sins; come unto Jesus. He stands with outstretched arms, and bids you come. Yea, come whilst you have time and opportunity. Come whilst it is called to-day. You have only the promise for to-day; and you know not what to-morrow may bring forth. To-morrow may find you beyond the reach of mercy, encircled within the icy arms of death. Become the friend of Jesus, who will be a friend when all other friends will leave you.]

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Omniscience.

BY B. B. BOLLINGER.

"For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous." 1 Peter 3: 12.

The human eye is, perhaps, the most wonderful organ of the body. There are about six hundred thousand blind persons in the world now, groping in the dark. We pity the blind. We have one brother here who is deprived of sight; but we believe that the eyes of his understanding are open. Christ opened the eyes of the blind. How delighted they must have been to look upon the beauties of earth! This was glorious; but the spiritual light which shone in darkness, although "the darkness comprehended it not," was much more glorious. "The sun of Righteousness" shines with greater splendor than the sun of the planetary system.

Human vision has been greatly aided in the last century by means of the telescope. Astronomers survey the starry firmament—the heavenly bodies, determining their distances and dimensions, so as to astound the untutored mind. But while we view with astonishment nature of the work, nature's God, "there is an eye that never sleeps," "like flaming fire," that looks upon us and sees all we do. From this eye none can hide. It penetrates all things. The thief that goes out in the deepest shades of darkness for his neighbor's crib is seen. The libertine, who skulks through lanes and alleys, and climbs in at back windows, is seen as in broadest daylight. The card-player cannot shuffle his pack nor utter his hellish oaths without being seen and heard. No religious cloak can hide the hypocrite's heart. We look through glass and clear water, so God looks through all things. He sees the heart with all its deceitfulness. Our thoughts, whether good or bad, are all known to him who fills the heavens and the earth. Every rising thought is discovered as it is produced by the operations of the mind. "He is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

If we had this power of vision, how differently things and men would appear. How many dark spots on the characters of many that by the world are called great and good. How many bright spots upon many that are overlooked and despised by the crowd. How small things would look larger, and large things look smaller. Did you ever think of this? Did you ever weigh yourself in this just balance? Do we always act in private as in public? Would we like to have our whole character—every thought—published before the world—before friend and foe? "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "Be ye holy, for I am holy," saith God. Not only on Sunday, or when we meet for worship, in the presence of brethren and sisters, but every day—seven days in a week, fifty two weeks in a year—"Let your light so shine before men, that that they may see your good works and glorify your father in heaven."

God sees us when we lie down and when we arise; when we sell our merchandise; when we buy stock; when we buy our clothing, erect buildings, put foolish ornaments upon them; when we black our boots, paint our cheeks, braid our hair, buy our jewelry, and a thousand other things might be named. He is looking on us all the time, day and night, summer and winter, all the time. That eye flames and darts its glances over the universe now and forever, and all the unforgotten sins will be recorded in God's memory and will separate the ungodly from his presence—"Depart ye workers of iniquity into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Shall we not exclaim with the poet,

"O for a closer walk with God,
A calm and heavenly frame."

Anecdote of Rowland Hill.

Rowland Hill was once driven by a storm of rain into a village inn, and compelled to spend the night. When it grew late, the landlord sent a request by the waiter that the guest would go to bed. Mr. Hill replied, "I have been waiting a long time expecting to be called to family prayer." "Family prayer! I don't know what you mean, sir; we don't have such things here." "Indeed! then tell your master I cannot go to bed until we have had family prayer." The waiter informed his master, who in great consternation bounced into the room occupied by the faithful minister, and said, "Sir, I wish you would go to bed, I cannot go until I have seen all the lights out; I am so afraid of fire." "So am I," was the reply, "but I have been expecting to be summoned to family prayer." "All very good, sir, but it cannot be done at an inn." "Indeed! then pray get me my horse. I cannot sleep in a house where there is no family prayer." The host preferred to dismiss his prejudice rather than his guest, and said: "I have no objection to have prayer, but I don't know how." "Well, then summon your people and let us see what can be done." The landlord obeyed, and directly the astonished domestics wore upon their knees, and the landlord was called upon to pray. "Sir, I never prayed in my life, I don't know how." "Ask God to teach you," was the gentle reply. The landlord said, folding his hands, "God teach us how to pray." "That is prayer, my friend," cried Mr. Hill, joyfully: "go on." "I am sure I don't know what to say now, sir." "Yes you do; God has taught you how to pray. Now thank him for it. 'Thank you, God Almighty, for letting us pray to you!' 'Amen!' 'Amen!'" exclaimed Mr. Hill, and prayed himself. Two years afterwards, Mr. Hill found in that village a chapel and a school, as the result of the first effort of family prayer at the "Black Lion."

Remember Your Pious Mother.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

How dear to a loving child is the name of a kind parent! Ye who have sustained the loss of a loved mother know how the memory of her care and affection lingers upon your hearts. Could you again welcome her lively presence to your sorrow stricken home and its enjoyments, you would promise yourself never-failing kindness and devotion to all her wants and wishes. You would find your chief delight in doing her bidding, taking her advice, or caring for her comfort and happy condition in the advancing years of her old age. But she has gone, and will not return. You are left to make your own way through life, to build up your own character, and if possible, fill her station, doing good, and being useful in the society in which you live and move. If mother is yet present with you, and lives a pious life, and encourages you to seek the Savior, and live a truly religious life, oh, do not turn away. If you turn away heedlessly, the day will surely come when you will regret it, perhaps in great anguish of soul.

A pious mother! What shall I say to express an idea of her worth? I can command neither comparison nor language. Give me not the inheritance of millions of dollars, but give me a pious mother. Give me not the untarnished fame of a king, or president, or statesman, nor any other fame, but give me A PIOUS MOTHER. Give me not the "gold of Ophir," nor a "palace of silver," nor yet "the whole world" with all its wealth and honor, and eloquence, but still and ever give me A PIOUS MOTHER. "Her price is far above rubies," and she is worthy of our best and sweetest love.

Mother! Endearing name! Home is a precious word, but more precious is mother! What were home, with all its attractions, with all its comfort and abundance, with all its cherished associations, but without mother! Mother gone, and the keystone of home-ties is taken away. Mother severed from a mother-loving, Christ-taught family, and truly "the golden bowl is broken, and the pitcher broken at the fountain." Eccl. 12: 6. Well may the wisest of men say to each one of us: "For-sake not the law of thy mother."

Now, my dear young readers, let me tell you that few young people appreciate the value of a Christian mother. I have read of great men who have attributed their usefulness in life to the early teachings of their mothers. If God, our Father and Savior, has permitted you to have a pious mother, who took you to her side, and perhaps took your hand in hers, and then talked to you of Jesus, whom God sent into the world to save us all from being lost forever, and to show us how we might be saved, if so, I say, you have reason to thank God for it—it was a blessing from Him.

But now, let us see, have we made good use of mother's teaching, and her bright, Christian example? Have we already grown up to the stature and years of young men and young women, and still not following her holy teaching? Now have we really been so slow to think on our ways, and of how much we need a Savior? The law of your mother was to do the will of the Lord—to walk in His commandments. She gave you that law. Oh, what a sacred inheritance! She was blessed and benefited by it, and it will "do thee good." "To walk humbly before God in His commandments, will give you a good name and usefulness in this life, and a heaven of rest in the world to come."

May I encourage you to remember your loved, pious mother and her Christian teaching? Seek the Savior without delay. I know it is a sweet-sounding message to your ears. And I beseech you don't spend your best days in the world's wisdom that knows not God, and its fashion that pleases and deceives so many souls, and its enjoyments that "drown men in perdition." Give your heart to Jesus, and your life to the glory of His church, and so shall your associates and neighbors see what a good thing it is to be a Christian, and how much better it makes men and women.

Religion itself will do you no harm at all, it is all in your favor. But if it be not the religion of the Bible, and do not lead you to keep and observe all the commandments of Jesus, there will be great danger. Men talk of many ways, but Jesus spoke of only One Way, and your faithful Mother labored to impress this upon your mind—one "strait" and "narrow" way. The Savior said: "Few there be that find it." Your pious mother prayed, with many tears, that you might "find it." O think of her anxiety and solicitude for you! Have you found it? If not, are you seeking for it? Don't be discouraged, don't wait until your ear gets dull of hearing, for your hearing may not return. Sad indeed would your condition be if you should wake up to these realities on your dying couch! Don't put it off. The world is robbing you of golden years, riches of grace, and a crown of Glory. Come to the feast "for all things are now ready." COME, COME.

Why Have Ye Not Brought Him ?

Many have been asked this, and the answer has been and still is, "Never man spake like this man." Our Lord found many a topic in the scenes around him. Even the humblest objects shone in his hands; as I have seen a fragment of broken glass, as it caught the sunbeam, light up, flashing like a diamond. A little child which he took from his mother's side, and holds, blushing in his arms, before the astonished audience, is a text for a sermon on humility. A husbandman on a neighboring height between him and the sky, who strides with long and measured steps over the field he sows, supplies a text from which he discourses on the gospel and its effects upon different hearers. In a woman baking; in two women who sit by some cottage door grinding at a mill; in an old strong tower, perched upon a rock whence it looks across the brawling torrent, to the ruined and roofless gable of a house swept away by mountain floods—Jesus found texts. From the birds that sang above his head, and the lilies that blossomed at his feet, he discoursed on the care of God—these his text and Providence his theme.—Guthrie.

THE LORD MUST HEAL.—Alexander, Emperor of Russia, when in England, ordered a watch to be made for him, combining the peculiarities and advantages of several. It was made and forwarded, but met with an accident on the way. No one in Russia could repair it, and it had to be sent back to the maker. And so sin and Satan having injured us, none but the Maker can restore us to soundness. Pretenders have tried in vain. "God is in Christ." Let us go and place ourselves in Christ's hands, that we may be "created anew in Christ Jesus."

"All that have received the truth should spread it. Some are ready to say, Truth wants so many things done that she is an expensive friend. This is a libel. Sin is expensive, drunkenness is expensive, worldly pleasures are expensive. Truth requires from you a portion of your money, time, and energy; but she will save you much, give you much, teach you many things, and ensure you an eternity of good."

—All the rarest hues of human life take radiance and are rainbowed out in tears.

THE GOSPEL AND THE LAW---A CONTRAST.

We do not find in the gospel or Christian Scriptures the same system of rules in minute detail, that we do in the Mosaic law. Our Lord and his Apostles laid down principles rather than rules, or when they did give rules, they were commonly of a general character. There was also contained in Christianity what the apostle Paul calls "the spirit of a sound mind." 2 Tim. i. 7. And Christian believers were alluded to as having been "renewed" in their minds, and as having their hearts "sprinkled from an evil conscience." And with the internal change or renewal of heart which the converts to Christianity experienced by the transforming power of the gospel, and with the principles and dispositions inculcated in the gospel, and having "an unction from the Holy One" by which, according to John, they "know all things," (1 John ii. 20.) and enjoying "fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," as it was also their privilege to do, (1 John i. 3,) Christians possessed such facilities for understanding their various duties as superseded that specification of duties that we find given in the code of laws for the government of the Jews.

It is true, it would be more in harmony with the nature of man, or with his natural inclinations, to have all his duties plainly specified, and fully described, and to have no more to do than to yield an external obedience to them, than to be left in many things to his own discretion while still required to strictly govern his life according to some great moral or religious principles, and to direct his steps through the varied scenes of life with constant watchfulness, and a due regard to his own sense of right. The idea of having the responsibility thrown upon ourselves of judging in so many cases of what is right is not pleasant to our nature which is usually inclined to shun responsibility.

But whatever may be most in harmony with our natural inclinations, our Lord in regulating the conduct of his disciples has thrown a considerable amount of responsibility upon them, requiring them to decide from general principles rather than from direct precepts in many cases what it is their duty to do. And though such a course is attended with mental labor, anxiety and care, it no doubt is a wise arrangement, and designed to answer a good end in the cultivation of our Christian characters. The correctness of our actions in many cases depending upon our own judgment and conscience, the importance of preventing the light within us from becoming darkness, the conscience from becoming hard, and the judgment from becoming prejudiced, is very apparent.

We have a very striking view of the Jews and of the weakness of their religious characters, in the following language of the apostle Paul: "Now I say, that the heir, so long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all: but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world." Gal. iv. 1-3. The Jewish rituals are here represented as "the elements of the world," as they were adapted to the weak understanding of children, who are best taught by sensible objects, and who have but a little taste for, and a low conception of heavenly things; the Jews in the apostle's figurative language being compared to children. While Christians are to attain "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, (Eph. iv. 13,) and are thus exhorted by the Apostle: "Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men." 1 Cor. xiv. 20. And with the matured understanding of Christian men, and with the singleness of eye, to the will of God as the rule, and to the glory of God as the object, characteristic of the Christian character, and with the helps possessed by Christians already referred to, the path of duty will always be open to those that desire to walk therein.

To illustrate the practical and important truth we are endeavoring to present to our readers, we shall compare the teaching of the Law and that of the Gospel upon the subject of charitable contributions to meet the wants of the poor and the expenses incurred in maintaining the worship of the Lord. In the law we read, "And at the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates: and the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest." Deut. xiv. 28, 29. Tithe means tenth, and there were several sorts of tithes to be paid by the people. The tithe referred to in the passage above quoted, was designed for the poor as well as for other purposes. Having seen what the law says in regard to the provisions made for the poor, we shall now look at what the gospel says. The following is the gospel rule for collecting contributions: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as the Lord hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2.

The above two passages show a marked difference between the law and the gospel in regard to the method of furnishing finances for benevolent purposes. The law prescribed the exact amount to be given, namely, the tenth. The gospel is understood to appeal to the divine principle of benevolence presumed to exist in every Christian believer. Every Christian is directed to lay by him in store upon the first day of the week as the Lord has prospered him. While the Jews as children, to use the apostle's figure, were instructed in regard to the exact amount they were to give, Christians as holy men of God, and men of understanding, and as persons having the mind of Christ, were to decide for themselves the amount they were to contribute for the Lord's poor, and for other benevolent purposes. And it will be a great dishonor to all who will act unworthy of this high trust committed to them by the Lord. Other subjects might be selected to illustrate and explain the difference that exists between the Gospel and the Law, in regard to the point which constitutes the subject of our present article. But we think the point will be seen and appreciated by the thoughtful reader.

It may be well to look at the practical bearing of the subject a little more carefully and see how its application can be made to our advantage. When we consider that the gospel was designed for all nations, and that churches were to be established among people of various habits, and governments, and in the world amid all the changes that it was to undergo until our Lord shall come, we could not expect to find a direct precept enjoining our duty upon us under every circumstance of life under which we may live, or a specific prohibition from doing every evil to which we might be exposed. A complete list of everything which we as Christians are to do, and of every thing that we are to abstain from, would have made an unwieldy volume to handle and read. But in addition to the direct precepts and positive commandments given in the gospel, we have such general precepts and principles as the following: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world," Titus ii. 11, 12; "Abstain from all appearance of evil," 1 Thess. v. 22; "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," Gal. vi. 10; "But to do good, and to communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased," Heb. xiii. 16; "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," Matt. v. 48.

Again: as every Christian will, at some period in life, and under some circumstances, find it necessary to decide for himself what is his duty, all Christians should study well the gospel that they may become well acquainted with Christianity both in its laws and its spirit. They also should endeavor to maintain a good conscience, and the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit. With these their duty can be ascertained; without them it cannot. As we have seen in the case of contributing money for benevolent purposes, God has thrown the responsibility upon us in many cases of deciding upon what is right, and if we fail to decide correctly with the helps we have for knowing what is right, we cannot expect to escape condemnation. Every Christian should habituate himself to the examination of what is his duty to do, both in regard to what is taught in the Scriptures, and what is not taught there, and not depend too much upon the judgment of others. Every one will be held responsible for the exercise of his own judgment, as well as his own actions.

And further: as we cannot expect to find a direct rule or precedent in the gospel for every thing that is to be done by us as Christians, for our Lord never designed this, as has already been shown, it follows that a great responsibility rests upon the church to adapt itself to the great work it is called to do, in whatever age and in whatever country it may exist. Much depends upon the wisdom and discretion of the church to make its mission the most successful. The church is "the ground and pillar of the truth." And if it is faithful to its mission, it will labor to maintain the truth in its fulness and purity, and to teach it to those that know it not. And in regard to the manner of working, and to the appliances, auxiliaries, or helps to be used in accomplishing these desirable ends, much depends upon the discretionary power committed to the church. This it should properly understand, and act accordingly.

Gleanings and Jottings.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For some time past we have been sending out specimen numbers pretty freely, and expect to do so for some time to come. We aim to send these only to our old subscribers who have not yet renewed; but for want of time to examine in every case, the probability is that some who are now getting the paper regularly will receive specimen numbers. We give this notice lest any such might think there was something wrong that their names are not on our books. Do not trouble yourselves about that as long as your paper continues to come all right; and if you receive a specimen number, you can hand it to some one who may be induced to subscribe.

ADVERTISEMENTS.—In the current volume we have inserted a few advertisements which seem to be of doubtful character, such as the Eye cup and Canary birds, &c. Some of our good brethren think we had better not insert such advertisements in our Christian journal.—We are not prepared to say that these are "humbug" advertisements; neither can we recommend them as worthy of notice. A kind brother says: "I would suggest that you admit no advertisement without you have the assurance that it is what it is represented to be. I was humbugged by a quack doctor and I do not want to be humbugged by the brethren." In reply to this we will say that we are careful in admitting advertisements and reject a great many that are offered us; but with all our care we may occasionally be imposed upon by men of bad character. We have not always the means of determining to absolute certainty whether an article advertised is in every respect what it purports to be. Again, if we were to test the patent Eye Cup, it might be just the thing we want; and having tested it and derived great benefit from its use, we might admit an advertisement and recommend the article. Others might purchase and try the Eye Cup and it might be a failure in their cases. In this case who would be to blame? While we are trying to guard against admitting spurious advertisements, we want our readers to guard against the thought that an article must be all right because an advertisement of it is found in religious papers. A wolf may wear a sheep's clothing; hypocrites and humbugs seldom put on their own garb. If you see an article advertised, and feel interested in it, we advise you to satisfy yourselves before investing money in it. Send a stamp or two to the advertiser's postmaster and inquire of him, and you will generally receive such information as will enable you to make up your mind. B.

BROTHER Landon West of Sinking Springs, Highland Co., Ohio, March 8th, writes: "The brethren here are firm on the reporting question, and want a full report of A. M. They are not particular whether in pamphlet form or not. The health of our people is generally good.—The spring is opening here beautifully, and the farmers appear to be ready for it. Some fruit is killed, but we think we will have enough yet. We have plenty and ought to live happily; but the curse of our country is drunkenness and profanity, which always go together." B.

BROTHER George W. Ksım, Creston, Union county, Iowa, says: "I am now prepared to furnish any one wishing it a Price List of Union county Lands. I will send to any address one copy of the Real Estate Journal, published in Creston, which will give you a partial list of farm lands; also the improvements, how far from Creston, and a full description of each. Brethren wishing a copy will please send me their names, postoffice, county and State. I will send you one copy. Don't miss good bargains." B.

In this issue we have an article from brother Noah Longanecker, in reply to the American Christian Review on the subject of Feet-washing. We before had two articles from brother M. M. Eshelman. We should think the Review sufficiently reviewed for the present. B.

BROTHER I. G. Harley, of Philadelphia, says: "In the Preamble and Resolutions sent you for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and which appeared in No. 9, my address as one of the committee is wrong. Please correct it. The number of my house is 1414 North 13th, not South. "We had baptism last Sunday. Two were added to the church, and to day, six more; and we expect two or three more to come this month. So you see the work goes on, and the Lord has not forsaken us."

Bro. Hiel Hamilton, Ervin, Howard county, Ind., says: "As I have been careful in keeping and stitching together almost every volume of our periodicals that I received I will take this method to inform brother H. J. Kurtz, or any one else that sends first, that I will send them either of volumes 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 20, 21. Vol. 6 lacks the February and March Nos.; vol. 7 lacks the June and December Nos.; vol. 12 lacks the April No.. The rest are full and not much soiled. All or any of these I will sell for 50 cents a volume."

Bro. Jesse H. Smith, Mt. Royal, York county, Pa., after expressing his admiration of our paper and of the new name, says: "It is now almost three years since my wife and I came to the Brethren, and we like them. We have preaching every four weeks, and we delight in going to hear God's word. It is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe.—Thank God, it makes me feel for those who do not believe; for they have no promise of heaven. I have quit using tobacco, and will use no more. I think our dear brethren should use no tobacco, it is so nasty. I think tobacco and rum are alike, and to use either is an appearance of evil and wrong in the sight of God our Maker. May God help us to be sober and to watch unto prayer."

Bro. Daniel D. Wine has changed his address from Lima, Allen county, Ohio, to Nevada city, Vernon county, Mo.

A CORRECTION.—S. M. Loos, Green Springs, Seneca county, Ohio, March 1st, says: "I have written to you to pu' lish the District Meeting on the 6th of May. The notice in the paper says the 16th. I know not whether I made the mistake or you. But the time is the 6th of May.—Please correct as soon as you can."

Neither do we know who made the mistake, but hope this will correct it.

READ THIS.—Being very closely pressed for money, I now propose to send my book, The Jewish Passover and Lord's Supper, to any one who will send me 75 cents before the 10th of April. After that date the price will again be $1 00 per copy. I have no right to ask any one to send for the book, but shall be very thankful to all who will favor me with an order. Address plainly: J. W. BEER, Meyersdale, Somerset county, Pa.

Your attention is called to the following, published by request of the writer, Elder Henry Koontz, Waynesboro', Pa.: "I had the pleasure of examining your book on the Jewish Passover and the Lord's Supper. I was much delighted in perusing its pages. It seemed to be so conclusive, based on gospel facts, that I can highly recommend it to all the brotherhood in the United States, and to the universal world, as a true exposition of the subjects on which it treats, that cannot be shaken even by 'the gates of hell.' Publish this short communication. I want the book to have a wide circulation."

BROTHER J. H. Miller, Milford, Ind., says:

"The church here is still laboring for love and union, and much desires that the members would pray more for an increase of holiness unto the Lord; for it is written, 'Be ye holy.' Health is not as good as it was in the fore part of the winter. Our elder John B. Neff, is poorly; confined to his room, and has been for several months. I think his days are about numbered. Typhoid fever seems to be raging, in some localities. The winter so far has been very mild. Some herbs have started to grow. On New Year it was as pleasant as the month of May. The thermometer on New Year stood to 71°. Snakes made their appearance, and frogs began to sing their chanting song of spring; but a cold "snap" soon "told them hush" until spring. Meadow larks have made the woods ring, as though the month of June was here. Truly such a winter I never saw. Poison elders are coming out in bloom. We have had an abundance of rain, and roads have been disagreeable to travel. The weather has been so warm that pork, in places, came near spoiling.

I wish to say through the columns of your paper that I had promised to visit some churches in Noble, and Allen Counties Ind. and Defiance and Williams Co's., Ohio, and then into Michigan; but on account of my wife's delicate health, I cannot meet the Brethren according to promise. Hope this will satisfy them; but would say, the Lord willing, sometime in the future I will try to be with you."

BROTHER Daniel Neher, Burnett's Station, Johnson Co., Mo., March 11th writes:

"We could not well do without the paper; it contains so much good and wholesome instruction, and brings much good news and glad tidings from the different churches. We had a very mild winter. Yesterday the mercury was 70° above and this morning it is 10° below freezing. We fear the peaches are killed as they were about coming into bloom."

BROTHER B. F. Miller, Deer Park, Garrett Co., Md., says: "Ministering brethren who want to buy good lands on good terms will come to this place. Every one coming to this place will like the country. I will go around with those who come, and will show them land. We need ministerial help here. Farther information will be given to such as desire it." He also extends an invitation to ministering brethren to visit them and preach for them, and says:

"Our arm of the church is called Glade Valley church. There were about 46 members last fall; but it is going down, and will still go down, unless some of the ministers come in and stir us up. We started up a prayer-meeting last fall, and it was going on nicely until brother S. Pike came down and put it away. Since that we have tried to bring it up, but failed. I want advice. Were we right or wrong? Is not prayer the main point in the Lord's work? Please insert this in your paper so that some of the brethren will explain it. I do not think that the church is against prayer meetings. If so, let me know."

A FRAGMENT: By C. H. BALSBAUGH.—May we strive and may the blessed God enable us to make this year an exhibition of holiness, which will render all the world gathered devices in Fairmont Park a mere bagatelle. If all nations and kindreds and tongues contribute their ripest wisdom and rarest skill, they can put nothing on exhibition which is so wonderful and glorious as a CHRISTIAN—a soul redeemed by the blood of Jesus, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost. Let us yield ourselves unreservedly to the chisel and mallet of the Great Artist, so that we may be fit specimens of Divine workmanship for eternal exhibition before God and his Angels.

Brother J. W. Beam, Jener X Roads, Somerset Co., P., says:

"Will you ask, through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, whether there are any Brethren living in Cumming Co., Nebraska? I have a quarter section of land there, and would like to know whether there are any brethren there. The land is three miles east of a station called Charles, I think, on the Elkhorn R. R. and about seven miles from Westpoint. If there are any brethren there I would like to correspond with them. I think I will go there sometime in the spring."

TRACTS. We have a number of orders for tracts which should have been filled before now, but we are out of them, and so is the publisher. The best we can do is to wait till we can get them, and we must ask those who have ordered them to wait on us a while longer.

Brother Levi Hoffer, Sarinda, Col., Feb., says:

I send you 36 cents for the poor fund. May the enterprise be crowned with success. How many of the brethren could give a few cents, or even dollars, and thus lay up treasure in heaven. "The Lord loves the cheerful giver."

The assistant editor of this paper left on the morning of the 16th, for Philadelphia. He will visit the churches at that place, Germantown, and perhaps at a few other points in that vicinity. He will be absent for about ten days. May he have a pleasant journey. G.

POOR FUND.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

GREAT CROSSING, KY.

Dear Brethren:—

Noticing a letter in No. 8 of the Pilgrim, written by brother James R. Gish, from Kentucky, brought the thought to my mind that we here as a little flock are in a very dependent condition. The brethren of Ohio have been very kind and have sent ministers to preach for us occasionally, and in less than one year have baptized seven souls. Brothers Aaron Frantz and Abram Detrich were with us a few weeks ago and baptized a very worthy young lady. There are nine of us in number now (one has gone to receive her reward).

Now, what I want to say is, We have many, very many starving souls here, huddling and thirsting after righteousness, and there never was a better time to work in the Lord's vineyard than now. The best of the people have become so tired and disgusted with the pride, display, and extravagant folly exhibited in the churches here that they are seeking something purer and better. The simple, humble doctrine of the Brethren and their strict conformity to the teachings of the Scriptures is the very thing to draw their minds to compare the religion of the present with that practiced in former times. I know it grieves some of our good people to see the best and holiest things on earth turned into mockery—to see professors of religion dress and arrange themselves to make an exhibition of all the silly customs the authors of fashion can invent. They want to serve God, but there is so little difference in the habits and practices of church members and the worldly-minded that their confidence in religion is shaken and they are bordering on infidelity.

And now, dear brethren, with many thanks for what you have done for us, we want you still to help us until we are able to help ourselves, trusting that God is in the work and is stirring up your pure minds to the work. We hope the day is not far distant when Kentucky will hold a strong place in the church. We are very weak now, and if you drop us here it will be a hard struggle for us to maintain our position, and still harder to increase our numbers.

There are constant inquiries when we will have more preaching and if we cannot give them papers or tracts that explain different points of doctrine. Dear brethren, if I had the means it would give me great pleasure to subscribe for different works and periodicals published by our brethren editors, but I am not able to do so; but after reading my own I distribute them where I think they will do the most good. If by that means I should bring only one soul to search the Scriptures and then become a true follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, I would have great reason to rejoice and would be very thankful to God that he had made me the humble instrument of doing some good in his cause.

Dear brethren, do not forget us in your prayers, remembering that "effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much." I was very glad to learn from brother Gish's letter that there was a srt made for a church in another part of our State, and I think if we all work together there can be much good done now that slavery is done away with, for when it existed it would have been almost impossible to have organized a church that held to equal rights and privileges in the church. Now the blacks and whites have their churches separate and do not associate. The colored people are very much pleased with the preaching of the Brethren and the idea of being on a gospel level. But lest I make my communication too long I will close.

DORA, Wabash Co., Ind., }
March 2, 1876.

Dear Brother:

Inasmuch as church news is always read with interest, I will give some from the Antioch church, as it has been a long time since we have seen any news from this arm of the church.

Brother Stephen Bashor, from Missouri, was with us the first part of December. He commenced a series of meetings at Dora, Wabash Co., which lasted over a week. During the meeting there were seven precious souls added to the church by baptism. The meeting throughout was largely attended, with apparently much interest in the word preached. At the conclusion of this meeting the members felt to thank God and take courage when they saw the goodness of God in reviving his work of grace and calling sinners to repentance.

Brother Bashor then commenced another series of meetings at the Hart school-house, some five miles south of Antioch. This meeting lasted nearly two weeks, most of the meetings being at night. Although the roads were bad and the nights dark, the house was crowded at every meeting, with good order and attention. During this meeting there seemed to be a general awakening of the young people, and 23 were added to the church by baptism and one reclaimed.—

We have good hopes that the Lord will continue his good work and that soon there will be many more Lambs brought into his fold. May God grant to all of them his grace which is sufficient to enable them to overcome temptation, and to endure persecution for his sake and hold out faithful to the end.

Brother Bashor and others also held a series of meetings in the town of Antioch. One added to the church at this meeting. May it please God to continue the good work and bless his children everywhere.

MARIA BAILY.

To Brother Michael J. Thomas.

Dear Brother in the Lord, and all the dear brethren in the Sandy Creek church, W. Va., Greeting: The article headed "Historical," in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, No. 10, page 136, was read with more than an ordinary degree of interest. It does us good to go back and in imagination to live over some of the days of by-gone years; to taste anew some of the joys and sorrows of the past. I think, however, there are a few mistakes and omissions in the article that ought to be corrected.

1. You date the time of the ordination of Elder Jacob M. Thomas I think about two years too early.

2. The choice of your correspondent and brother Harader to the ministry is one year too early. Brother Harader united with the church in the summer of 1861, and that other disciple a month or so later and about a month after the love-feast which was probably held the latter part of August. A special council was called for the purpose of electing two speakers, and brethren (Elders) Jacob Myers, John Berkly, and Jacob Lichty, all of Somerset county, Pa., were present. All these have long since gone to the spirit world to wait with Paul for a "crown of righteousness at the appearing of the Lord the righteous Judge." Then and there brother Harader and that other disciple were chosen to the ministry. The exact date I cannot give. I hold a certificate of the fact dating it to Aug. 22nd, 1851, but that must be at least one month too early, as I very distinctly remember it was after corn-husking time. This certificate was written about four years after the occurrence, and I presume the time in the year guessed at. Brethren Quinter and Kelo were also present, and brother John Boger, the oldest minister in the church. I well remember his being present at his son-in-law's, John Guthrie's, the following winter. He spoke kind words of encouragement to the young speakers, and rejoiced because of their zeal, &c. Such things are not soon forgotten. Hence I remember it.

Brother Jacob M. Thomas, the next oldest in office, was not ordained to the eldership until after brother Boger's death, and I well remember that it was done at a lovefeast; hence it could not have been earlier than the fall of 1852.—His aged mother was present. She was truly a mother in Israel, and according to your narrative, was really the mother of the Israel of Sandy Creek, W. Va. I can see her now in imagination, laden with years and somewhat bowed with age, walking up and extending the hand of fellowship to her son in his new and responsible office. It brought tears to many faces, that of your correspondent not excepted.

3. You enumerate 18 ministers elected in the church, and on counting those your name we find only 15; so you must have omitted some. I remember one that you failed to enroll.

4. You also state that 4 have died, and in looking over the list we find only three. Now I wish you would revise your article, and I hope the editors will indulge us in the wish to have it republished. We would like to have it as near correct as we can have it, and then preserve it for those who come after us.

Yours in gospel union,

P. J. BROWN.

Congress, O., March 8, 1876.

PAWNEE, ILL., Feb. 12, 1876.

Brother Quinter:—

Enclosed find $3 20 for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN (2 copies). I am sorry that I cannot send more names, but on consulting our brethren they all plead poverty, owing to a continual wet season, crops failing, being in debt, and having high interest to pay, &c. Oh how painful to think that so many families are without reading one church periodical. Brother Beer in "Free Gift," No. 2, estimates 25,000 families who do not take the church periodicals. I fear that even brother Beer's estimate is too low. But while brother Beer urges those to be looked after, and points out who are the proper persons to see see after those who are able and those who are not able, he fails to give us a plan by which means might be appropriated to meet this demand. Brethren, think up a plan whereby a fund can be started or raised to meet the wants of many brethren and sisters who are just as anxious to read church news as we are. This matter has for some time engaged my mind, and I have been seriously impressed with the great, grand and central thought of a little more equality among us, or in our fraternity, as I am deeply impressed with the idea of the probability of equality in the upper kingdom. The poor have ye always with you, and ye can do them good whensoever ye will."—Jesus. This would be a good opportunity to do them good. Our fraternity is amply able to send the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to every family, and it is a shame to let them be without it.

This, however, still does not suggest a plan; but perhaps it may be the means of bringing forth something from our brethren that will give us light on this subject. There was a plan adopted for the raising of the Danish Fund. Who will say that it is not a success. Who has been impoverished by supporting that plan. There was a plan adopted for the Stein Fund. Who will say that it is not accomplishing its design? Who has been made to suffer by the plan? Brother Beer says that many can take one or more political papers, literary and art journals, but they cannot spare the money for a paper that advocates primitive Christianity.—"There are many thousand families in our brotherhood in which none of our papers has ever been seen." &c. "Who is to bear the blame?" To this he says: "Let the ministers and deacons answer." In reply to brother Beer I would say, because the horse is noble, kind hearted and willing to work, lay all the burden upon him; weigh him down because he will bear it; but because the "ass" is churlish, stubborn, and full of shirk, let him play the part of the drone, and ease his conscience by knowing that he attends preaching regularly, when the weather is not too inclement, and church councils when no very urgent matters of a temporal nature intervene? Oh no! but draw out the drone; let the "dumb ass speak" instead of the minister and deacon.

[Brother Beer will say right here that we must not depend on the churlish, stubborn animal, that is inclined to shirk. If we do, our cart will be left in the mire.—No; we must look to those who are willing. It has always been so and must be so. If the dumb animal should speak, and speak aright, we should certainly have no objection; but it would be a miracle. There must first be the manifestation and ministration of some angel before we can expect such a phenomenon. Go forth, then, ye willing hearted; place yourselves in the way; arrest their attention; infuse new thoughts into their minds, and new feelings into their hearts, and then you can expect new speech from their tongues and new actions from their lives. Under God, we must still look to our ministers and deacons, and to such as have the good cause at heart. We do not expect our ministers and deacons to answer for the neglect of others; but as they have better opportunities to talk to our members in general, we merely wish them to speak for themselves, and say whether they have done what they could. Some, no doubt, have; but we are afraid that some have not.—B.]

Methinks I can see some costly evils in the fold. If these could be eradicated and the amount thus expended be appropriated to a fund to supply our needy members, as well as the needy outside, with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. It would speak volumes of love for our fellows.—The evils to which I refer are extravagance at our tables, chewing and smoking tobacco, and unnecessary adornments. I will venture the assertion that if the money paid annually for the above-named evils would be devoted to a fund for the needy families, the amount thus saved would be sufficient to furnish every needy family in the brotherhood with a copy of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, besides to many thousand families outside of the fold.

How many families in our brotherhood who pay out for extravagance at their tables $25 each year? How many families pay out each year for tobacco $15, more or less? How many families pay out each year for unnecessary adornments $25, more or less? Now take it for granted that according to brother Beer's estimate 20,000 families are without taking a church periodical; in order to supply this demand it would require a fund of $32,000 annually. This, at first, no doubt looks like a mountain in the eyes of some; but after more mature reflection, it will be seen that upon the supposition that one-fourth of those 20,000 families spend annually $15 for either or all of the above-named evils, it would create a fund of $75,000. Now where is the mountain? On the other side of the picture; and yet I have reduced the amount to one-fourth of its probable estimate. O blushing shame, if this is a correct view of things in the brotherhood! And I venture to say a correct statement will increase our figures.

Is it possible that the enormous sum of $75,000 is annually wasted for the above-named evils? Now brethren, let us all manifest more interest in the future in admonishing brethren to break off their evil habits by reform, and to lay up treasure in heaven by sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the needy.

In conclusion I will say that the motive of this article is to stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance: "Son, remember, that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things;" and second, to draw out the minds of our brethren to suggest some plan whereby every family may have access to either of our church periodicals that they might prefer.

I will now propose a plan to which I invite the attention of all who are willing to deny themselves of some of the evils referred to; and all who will can work in this way until something better is brought out. Brother Lair, in one of our periodicals, writes that the church to which he belongs numbers 500 members. Some churches number 600 members. For a safe basis to estimate from let us assume that in all the States there are 20 districts of 20 churches each. Then if we suppose the churches average 100 member, we will have an aggregate of 40,000 members. This is not more than about one-third of the number generally claimed, and hence is safe ground. Suppose, then, that one-fifth (20 members in a church, 400 in a district, or 8,000 in the brotherhood) should be favorably impressed with the thought suggested, and become active workers in this department of the Master's cause. Let each of these lay by one penny in store every week, and at the expiration of every ten consecutive weeks let them send the amount to our editors. This would amount to $2 to a church, $40 to a district, and $800 to the brotherhood every ten weeks. In one year the aggregate amount would be $4,000. This would supply 2,500 of our most needy families, and we would indeed make many brethren and sisters rejoice, while we would never miss the penny a week given to the Lord.

"But," says one, "Where is the Scripture?" Answer: "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." Now will some brother give us gospel for indulging in either of the three named evils? If you can, let us have it; if not should we not all profit by the admonition?

BENJ. B. WHITNER.

Preaching the Gospel in the West.

This, truly, is a great work which devolves upon the ministers of the church; and it is likely there could be much more done in this direction than has been heretofore, if more of our ministers were impressed with the responsibility imposed upon them by the command, "Go ye."

It appears to me great good might result from taking the advice of brother Wrightsman, as in the Pilgrim, No. 3, vol. 7, viz: Raise a fund for sending missionaries west, and elsewhere, instead of using so much money for holding and attending Annual Meetings.

In order to show what might be effected by sending into the vineyard some able and zealous ministers, I shall here state, as near as I can, what has been effected by the labors of a few, during the past year. From the congregation at Falls City, Neb., there have been three brethren traveling and preaching some, namely, John Forney, Sen., Samuel C. Stump and C. Forney; and as near as I can ascertain, they baptized more than one hundred persons in 1875, the consequence of which is the organization of several congregations where the doctrine of the gospel had heretofore been almost entirely unknown. Brother Stump spent in preaching about five and a half months out of twelve, and immersed sixty souls, and is still continuing the labor wherever he is called for, and especially where those calling will bear his traveling expenses.—About the same is true, I believe, of brother John Forney. Brother C. Forney also used considerable time in the same way; though his circumstances as yet, do not admit of as much absence from home as those of the older brethren. Think of it, brethren ministers, where there are more of you than can labor to good effect, what a reward may be awaiting your earnest labors in the west. I can say I was made to rejoice in reading brother H. Troxel's proposition in No. 8, and I hope he may succeed in his plan and come west. Hoping that it may encourage some plan for sending missionaries to aid in the west in the good work, I submit the foregoing to the consideration of the reader.

Brother Quinter:

As to church news we have nothing special to communicate; however, will say that while on business at Denver city, on the 18th ult., we were summoned by a telegram to come to Boulder county, to preach the funeral of a daughter of friend Sweck. Age of the child, 10 years.—Good congregation.

Being in the immediate neighborhood of the Brethren, by request we preached at Pella school house. The next day, Sunday, met with some members we had not seen before. All seem faithful and earnest in the cause, and still live in hopes of having a minister come and settle amongst them. Now that we expect to make Greeley our home for at least the present year, we hope to get over more frequently to the brethren in Boulder Co., and much desire that some speaker may come and settle there and help on the good work.

Brother Nicholas Brubaker from near Dayton, Ohio, is now here. He came out with a hope that he may regain his health, and we think the prospects to that end with him are very favorable; and we cherish the hope that he may be blessed with health, as such pillars in the church (he is an efficient minister) are much needed now to uphold the noble structure of Christ's earthly kingdom.—May the united prayers of the church ascend to heaven in his behalf.

Just here we will say to the many inquiring ones, as to whether this climate is good for invalids, we can, in good faith say, yes; especially for consumptives and those suffering with asthma, or pulmonary disease of any kind, dyspeptics, or persons who are afflicted with liver diseases, or general debility, provided the cases are not too far gone. We may meet persons on every side who came here invalids, some of whom the doctors gave up to die, who now are stout and hearty. There is quite a number of invalids here now, and they continue to come the year round.—Probably no other locality in Colorado is more healthy, than this town. It is a quiet town, strictly temperate, no saloons allowed here; people social, and living cheap. The winter has been mild. The weather most of the time dry and pleasant. J. S. FLORY.

Dear Brother Quinter:

We, the members in this vicinity, made an appeal, Dec. 11th of last year, in the Companion, hoping that God would move the heart of some dear laboring brother to move into our part of the country and preach the word of eternal life to the people here. God answered our prayer; and six ministers wrote us concerning the country, and one of them, B. F. Paul, of Allen county, Ind., came out and looked at the land and liked it both in price and quality. If his companion likes his description of the country, he will move out here next fall, if God spares him. He is a good speaker, and the people liked to hear him speak. He preached three sermons while he was here.

Now I will say to ministers and laymembers that there are several hundred acres of land for sale in our county. The most of it was canal land, bought up by speculators 25 or 30 years ago, and they want to sell it now to get clear of paying taxes on it. If there are any of the brethren without much money, come here and buy yourselves homes while land is cheap, for land will soon be higher, as we are likely to have two railroads in our county soon.

Brethren S. Murray, of Covington, O., and T. B. Wenrick, of Union City, Ind., expect to commence a series of meetings on Friday evening, March 3rd, and to continue them for several days. We believe we shall gain several members then, as everybody speaks well of our church.

If any of the brethren want any information concerning our country or people, it will be cheerfully given by us. Address either of the subscribers,

CORNELIUS DIXON, or GEORGE PRICE.

From Deep River, Iowa.

The brethren of the Deep River, Iowa, congregation would respectfully solicit the attention of brethren expecting to emigrate to Iowa to the south east part of Potosi county, as being a pretty country and good soil. Land, raw and improved, for sale cheap. Raw land can be had for from about ten to fifteen dollars per acre. Improved, twenty five to thirty.—Pretty good railroad advantages, and prospects for better, soon. But more particularly would we call their attention to our need of help in spiritual matters. We are building a new meeting-house, and we desire more help to labor for the conversion of sinners, that it may be filled with souls rescued from the service of Satan. Also ministering brethren traveling through will please not forget us.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to be as plain, and we could not insert verses with all.

In New Windsor, Carroll county, Md., Dec. 21st, 1875, MAARIA, wife of Jacob Snader; aged 68 years, 2 months and 25 days. Funeral services by J. D. Trostle, assisted by the brethren of Pipe Creek, from Rom. vi. 23, to a large and attentive audience. Mother Snader's object in life was to be and do good. In the early part of her married life he resolved to serve the Lord. Her husband could not see her serve the Lord alone, and on the morning of the day set for her to covenant with Christ to be faithful until death, they joined hands and went together. Forty-nine years were they permitted to live together. Her husband mourns to-day, but because there is an aching void which the world can never fill. She was the mother of 9 children, one of whom died in infancy, and 8 were married and settled in life. Mother had great concern for her children that they might serve the Lord; but had to leave the world with but one child who was following her example.—Mattie, her youngest daughter, and wife of Thomas Devillies, preceded her nearly a year, and delayed the day of making her peace with God. She had a disposition not to trouble any one with her sorrows and afflictions and to keep them from her dear mother. The disease was cancer of the breast, although she was flattered by her physician that she would have opportunity to be operated upon, she died, leaving four living children.—I helpless babe not a month old.—to mourn the loss of one who can never return again.

Also, in April last, a daughter-in-law, sister SOPHIA, wife of D. W. Snader, mother of nine children, seven living to mourn the loss of their dear mother, who took the advice in her affliction (consumption) of the Savior in his visit to a family whom he loved, recorded in the last paragraph of the Gospel by St. Luke.

SAMUEL WEYBRIGHT.

Jan. 14th, 1876, near the Pleasant Valley church, Washington county, Tenn., SAMUEL M'LELL, of paralysis, aged about 61 years. He was a member and deacon of the church of the Brethren. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Rev. xiv. 13.

PETER MILLER.

March 2nd, 1876, in the Covington church district, Miami county, Ohio, LEWIS, only son of brother Jacob S. and sister Hannah Mohler, aged eight years, 5 months and twenty-two days. The subject of the above notice had been in the mill with his father while the mill was in operation, and was caught by an upright shaft, and soon his right leg was wrapt about the same, breaking it in a fearful manner in three different places, which rendered amputation necessary. Death ensued in about thirty-six hours. The bereaved parents have the heart-felt sympathy of all the friends and neighbors in general. Funeral by the Brethren.

S. M.

At the residence of her son, Daniel Davis, Grand River church, Henry county, Mo., sister ELMIRA DAVIS, Sept. 3rd, 1875, aged 76 years. At her death she had 9 children, 41 grandchildren, and 11 great-grandchildren. She formerly lived and spent the greater part of her life in Madison county, Ohio. For awhile she was not in full fellowship with the church, but was fully restored a few years previous to her death, and died in the blessed hope of a glorious immortality. Funeral services by the writer.

J. S. MOHLER.

In Cleveland, Ohio, March 1st, of consumption MARY ANNE BEAR, daughter of brother Jacob and sister Sarah Bear. She was sent home to her parents, in Maple Grove church, Ashland county, Ohio, on the 4th and was buried on the 6th. Age, 22 years, 10 months and 12 days. Funeral services by the writer and friend J. B. Cressinger. G. BOLLINGER.

On the 18th of Feb., 1876, in Shoal Creek church, Newton county, Missouri, sister MARGARET HARRIS, aged 38 years, 9 months and 10 days. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, from Rev. xxi. 4. C. HARADER.

Within the precincts of the South Waterloo church, SALLY BARNARD, on the 20th of Feb. 1876, aged 73 years and 16 days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren from James iv. 4. The deceased was a respected member of the Baptist church. E. K. BUECHLY.

At State Center, Iowa, March 2nd, 1876, FLORENCE WILKEY, infant daughter of Henry and Catharine Wilkey, aged 18 months and 6 days.

Also, at the same time and place, infant child of Henry and Dinah Wall. The funerals of both were improved at the same time and place by the Brethren. JOSEPH W. TROSTLE.

In the Big Grove church, Benton county, Ia., Dec. 15th, 1875, OLLY BURKHART, a son of Riley and Barbara Burkhardt, aged one year and two months, less two days. Funeral by the writer and S. Johnson.

Also, in the same church district, Feb. 2nd, ELA LEHMAN, daughter of Henry B. and Catharine Lehman, aged one year, 9 months and 12 days. Funeral improved by the writer and S. Johnson. JOHN RIEUNOU.

In Westmoreland county, Pa., Mrs. MELISSA, wife of David H. Becker, deceased, Dec. 17th, 1875, aged 30 years, less one day. Occasion improved Jan. 30th, at the house, from Jer. xv. 9, "Her sun is gone down while it is yet day," by brother Abram Summy and the writer.

In the Jacob's Creek congregation, Westmoreland county, Pa., July 20th, 1865, of dropsy of the chest, brother HENRY BECKER, aged 63 years and 11 days. Funeral services by Abram Summy. Text, Rev. xiv. 12, 13. J. K. BICHER.

In the Jonathan's Creek branch of the church, March 2nd, of typhoid malarial, MARY EDITH, eldest daughter of friend William and Rachel Gull, aged 15 years, 3 months and 3 days. She was a good girl and was beloved by her associates. This was manifest from the many tears that were shed by them at her funeral. Funeral discourse by the writer to a large concourse of people who were very attentive to the word spoken. The services were in the Lutheran church near where her parents lived. Thus fades the flower in its beauty and its prime, and the time thereof none can toll. W. ARNOLD.

In the Sugar Creek church, Christian county, Ills., Dec. 1st, 1875, WILLIAM ANDREW, son of brother Jacob and sister Frances Brunk, aged 3 years, 11 months and 19 days. Disease, membranous croup. He was sick only three days, but his sufferings were great. It appeared that he wanted to go; but it went hard with him to leave father and mother. Our loss is his gain. Funeral services by the Brethren, from 2 Cor. v. 1. BENJ. B. WHITMER.

Bleeding from the Lungs, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Consumption. A Wonderful Cure.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1875. R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:

Dear Sir:—I had suffered from Catarrh in an aggravated form for about twelve years, and for several years from Bronchial trouble. Tried many doctors and things with no lasting benefit. In May, '72, becoming nearly worn out with excessive Editorial labors on a paper in New York City, I was attacked with Bronchitis in a severe form, suffering almost a total loss of voice. I returned home here, but had been home only two weeks when I was completely prostrated with Hemorrhage from the Lungs, having four severe bleeding spells within two weeks, the first three inside of nine days. In September following, I improved sufficiently to be able to be about, though in a very feeble state. My Bronchial trouble remained and the Catarrh was ten-fold worse than before. Every effort for relief seemed fruitless. I seemed to be losing ground daily. I continued in this feeble state, raising blood almost daily until about the first of March, '73, when I became so bad as to be "entirely confined to the house. A friend suggested your remedies. But I was extremely skeptical that they would do me good, as I had lost all heart in remedies, and began to look upon medicine and doctors with disgust. However, I obtained one of your circulars, and read it carefully, from which I came to the conclusion that you understood your business, at least. I finally obtained a quantity of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, your Golden Medical Discovery and Pellets, and commenced their vigorous use according to directions. To my surprise I soon began to improve. The Discovery and Pellets, in a short time, brought out a severe eruption, which continued for several weeks. I felt much better, my appetite improved, and I gained in strength and flesh. In three months every vestige of the Catarrh was gone, the Bronchitis had nearly disappeared, had no Cough whatever, and I had entirely ceased to raise blood; and, contrary to the expectation of some of my friends, the cure has remained permanent. I have had no more Hemorrhages from the Lungs, and am entirely free from Catarrh, from which I had suffered so much and so long. The debt of gratitude I owe for the blessing I have received at your hands knows no bounds. I am thoroughly satisfied, from my experience that your medicines will master the worst forms of that odious disease, Catarrh, as well as Throat and Lung diseases. I have recommended them to very many and shall ever speak in their praise.

Gratefully yours,
WM. H. SPENCER.

AT LAST
I CAN OFFER
SOMETHING
TO MY
NUMEROUS FRIENDS!

The Waterbury eight-day Clock, over two feet high, is warranted for time; retails at from $6 to $3. Any dealer in clocks will recommend it as standard goods. I buy these from the Waterbury, in Connecticut, at wholesale prices. They are warranted to me, and I can warrant them to others. I will give one of these beautiful pocket Clocks to any one who will be the means of establishing an agency for me in any locality where the Fahrney Medicine is yet unknown. I often, very often, receive letters asking why I do not establish an agency in certain places they name. To show up the way and wherefore of this would require me to dilate on the inside workings of such a business. Perhaps if I were to hire, at a big salary, kid gloved gentlemen to go into the different localities in the Northwest, I might be able to comply with the request of my friends; but even then, when you look on the map, you can see what a stupendous work it is to establish an agency in every post-office district. Moreover, the best medicine—like the best religion—is not always the most popular. Hence the difficulty of introducing Fahrney's Pains-ee without the cooperation of those who know and have known its great merits for more than half a century. Indeed I cannot find words to express my thanks to those who have volunteered their services free of any charge. In the past, and were thus the means of introducing the Blood-Cleaner to my friends. Many of them claim they have been rewarded by witnessing the results following the use of the Fahrney Medicine. But there are still others who might speak to their store-keeper or grocer (not druggist), with whom they have more influence than all the advertising matter I could send to such business men. To such I offer this Clock, provided the order is sent during the month of March, for an agent who begins in February or March will sell more during a year than half a dozen who begin in July or August. I will send you a fine agency, who means business, and get a clock. At any rate, send your name and address, for full particulars. Do not be uncharitable, and do not be a speculator, for my most intimate friends and acquaintances will not say so, and who should they. This offer is made in good faith, and I trust it will be so received.

LUTHER'S PSALM.

Carlyle, whose translation this is, pronounced it the greatest production of the kind in modern times.

A safe stronghold our God is, still,
A trusty shield and weapon;
He'll help us clear from all the ill
That hath us now o'er-taken;
The ancient prince of hell
Hath risen with purpose fell;
Strong mail of craft and power
He weareth in this hour,
On earth is not his fellow.

With force of arms we nothing can,
Full soon we were down-riden;
But for us fights the proper man,
Whom God himself hath bidden.
Ask ye what is his name?
The Lord Zebah's son;
He, and no other one,
Shall conquer in the battle.

And were this world all devils o'er,
And watching to devour us,
We lay it not to heart so sore,
Nor they can overpower us.
And let the prince of ill
Look grim as g'er he will,
He harms us not a whit;
For why? His doom is writ—
A word shall quickly slay him.

God's word, for all their craft and force,
One moment will not linger,
But, spite of hell, shall have its course,
'T is written by his finger.
And though they take our life,
Goods, honor, children, wife,
Yet is their profit small.
These things shall vanish, all,
The city of God remaineth.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

To a Lady in High Life.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

When the sons of Jacob returned from their first hanger-errand to Egypt, they sorrowfully said to their father, "the man who is the lord of the land, spake roughly to us;" little thinking that every syllable came from a heart that was swimming in tears, and ready to burst with brotherly affection. We must look through Joseph's lips into Joseph's heart. Even the hoary, God-guided Patriarch seemed to have forgotten the promises of Eternal veracity, and to constitute himself into a committee of ways and means for Omnipotence. "All these things are against me." The rough words of Joseph were but the repetition of Jehovah's great world-promise differently enunciated.

Absorbed as you are in the gayeties and vanities of fashionable life, you will perhaps regard my letter as wanting in tenderness, if not absolutely impertinent. The language may be in sound more austere than the intendment. It will not grate harshly on your feelings unless it takes that quality from your unwillingness to be addressed so pointedly on the great matter of your eternal destiny. I would only knock your idol to pieces to replace it by something worthy of your immortal aspirations. I would lead you away from your broken cisterns, not to "slay you with thirst," but to satisfy the utmost desires of your soul from the exhaustless Fountain Head of purest bliss. I have no other object than to woo, or if need be, to tear you away from the fascinations of sin, open the door into the flaming pit whither it leads, and conduct you to the "Chief among ten thousand," to receive in His embrace what you seek in vain in "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." You do not see your delusion, and do not feel under what an appalling weight of Divine wrath you lie, because you deliberately and constantly give your heart and mind to the gratification of the senses and the worship of self. You would sooner entertain a legion of Gospel-deriding, Cross despising, flesh-pleasing, self-exalting demons, than welcome the foot sore, nail-pierced, thorn-crowned, face bespittled Pilgrim of Nazareth, who has been standing at your door till his locks are saturated with the dew of the night. In order to sustain your zest in the fruit of the forbidden tree, you keep aloof from holy influences, and set your teeth on edge to steel your heart against the wooing appeals of the still weeping, bleeding Jesus. The Christ of the past brings His history with Him, to melt and win with what He has been, as well as to lure and awe with what He is and will be.

What would you think and how would you feel, if a friend for whom you had made great sacrifices, and had had done all in your power to extricate him from perplexity, and shield him from disaster, and secure for him high position and independent circumstances, would turn you his back, and give you every indication of indifference and dislike? Would it not cut you to the quick as with a two-edged sword? And yet this is just the treatment you give to Jesus! Think of it, and think long enough and seriously enough to get its fearful significance into your inner sensibility as an arrow from the quiver of God. It is both pitiful and dreadful. No wonder if all Heaven stands amazed at the infatuation of sinners. The exquisite sensibilities of Jesus are ten thousand times more, pained by your neglect of His grace and abuse of His mercies, than yours can be any contempt and ingratitude from a fellow-being. How can you shun and mistreat a friend like Jesus, whose love and generosity for you were so overpowering, that He plunged Himself into a bottomless ocean of sorrow, sustaining the fiery billows of the Divine law, bearing the full measure of Divine wrath, suffering the sinner's hell and exhausting the sinner's curse? On the Cross He bled out His soul for you—yes, for you—smitten of God, assailed of the Devil, derided and mocked and mangled by those He came to redeem from sin and snatch from Hell. All this wickedness you are acting over again in every sin you commit, in every exaltation of self over the claims of creation and redemption. Pause but "for the space of half an hour," and give God an opportunity to hold the mirror of truth fairly before your gaze. Do not hide yourself in the crowd—do not lose your individuality in the race. Think of all that God has done and suffered and achieved, and bring yourself in such relation to it as if it had all been done for you only. Both in redemption and judgment God deals with the individual. Give all that the Bible says of righteousness, holiness, sin, wrath, and hell, an honest, undiverted self-concentration, and you will fall at the feet of the Holy One "as one dead." Yours is a desperate and losing battle, for you are warring against Omnipotence. At no distant day the bow-armed, sword-mouthed, righteousness-crowned Rider of the White Horse will go "forth conquering and to conquer." His conquest will be glorious, and your defeat lamentable and eternal. Rev. 6:2. Forestall the dread apocalypse, and welcome Him as a Deliverer, before He falls upon you as "a man of war."

Turn while you have the power of choice, before you will be wrenched by the Almighty arm to face an angry God and an endless doom. Tear yourself away from the tempter's snare, even if you come off with but one eye, one hand and foot, lacerated, bleeding, maimed, rather than have body and soul given as fuel for the flames of Tophet forever and forever. Rather have the lightnings of God scorch you into a cinder, and His thunders blast you into a mass of deformity, in the sphere where you can be remodeled and re beautified, than go on in sin till death hurls you into the furnace of Divine indignation, a hideous, smoking, smouldering ember of ungodliness through endless ages.

Wonderful must be the love of God, and paramount His claims, or their rejection would not be followed by such dire consequences. But God's love is more a love of principle than of persons. It is at this point that sinners commit their fatal blunder. They still cherish a faint hope for themselves despite their adherence to wrong-doing. All the attributes of Jehovah thunder forth an emphatic, Heaven-earth-hell shaking NO. God is no respecter of persons. The purple-clad, sumptuously-faring glutton goes to hell, while the famished, tattered, ulcer covered, dog-licked Lazarus is escorted by a celestial livery into the mansions and fellowship of the Everlasting God. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked." Now you are "wagging your head" at the Crucified; but as certainly as He hangs there for your guilt, "bruised for your iniquities," so certainly also will His agony pierce your soul, and that flame of Divine wrath "dry up your moisture," either in deep repentance in time, or hopeless despair in Hell. O what a bleak, barren, empty world the sinner lives in. But it still has a horizon of hope, although it may be too low and dim for your eye to discern. But oh, the world of horror to which it is the vestibule! You have gone far in the downward way, and your feet may stand on the crumbling edge of the lake of fire. Yours is no common sin, and yours will be no common fate. Your hell will be deep and doleful according to your guilt. Equity demands such a judgment. You have given satan and sin the preference against the most powerful appeals and effecting entreaties. You have forced your way hellward through the heart-broken prayers, and heart-wrung tears of a godly father, and a God-pleasing, God pleading mother. You are wading down to endless burning through the tears and blood of the only begotten, well-beloved Son of God! Can you review the past, ponder the present, and contemplate the future, and not "exceedingly fear and quake?" God means what He says, and His nature necessitates what He means. Hell is not a Divine caprice. Damnation is no love-forgetting, mercy-scorning impulse of omnipotent passion. God sheathes His sword of justice in the souls of the wicked with the tear of mercy on His cheek, and the blood of love on His hand and hilt. Damnation is Mercy giving the "right hand of fellowship" to Righteousness; even as salvation is Righteousness kissing Mercy. Facing Holiness, with Mercy in the train, "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." Confronting Love, with Holiness as a rear-guard, it is a blessed thing to have the Almighty, Immutable, Righteous God for our Judge. O, compel not the All-Pure and All-Pitiful to turn all His sacrifices and compassions and tender mercies into an ever-flaming, ever-crashing bolt of vengeance, and into a stream of unquenchable fire. Can you inflict another wound in a heart that throbs with measureless tenderness, and that drained its last drop of blood to rescue you from eternal anguish? Can you any longer trample on feelings so holy and Divinely sensitive? Will you still frown away the All-Beautiful, and consecrate your heart and life anew to the service of the Devil? The tears of Jesus are not all in crystal drops, but many, most, lie unwept in the depths of His Infinite Heart. Such tears He carries in the censor of His Divine-Human nature for you. O relent, repent, turn, flee to the bosom that yearns for your deliverance, and be saved. Should death overtake you in your unregenerate state, you will acknowledge that all I have written is but a feeble representation of the reality. I am only seconding the appeal of Almighty God. What I am urging with my pen, God has been urging for years through His Word and by His Spirit. It is not your purpose to die as you are. Then why live as you do? Why continue in alienation from God another day, not knowing the hour of your summons before the awful tribunal of Eternity? Lay aside forever the gew-gaws of fashion, dismiss your concern for the toilet in which you are to appear at the national centennial, and get ready for God's Millennium, and for the glorious, ever-brightening exhibition of the Wonders of His Eternity. AMEN AND AMEN.

The Poor.

BY Z. ANNON.

"For ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always." Mark 14: 7.

We learn that it is a good thing, to administer to the wants of the poor, and that from a Bible standpoint. "And whosoever we will we may do them good." But here is where all the troubles comes in, we are not willing. We too soon forget that it is said in divine writ, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." And it is the rule of the church to keep her poor saints. And we all agreed before God and witnesses that we would hear the church. Matthew 18th chapter. And so many begin to complain, and say, "I am too poor myself," and at the same time are worth from five hundred to five thousand dollars. Now brethren, why are so many of us so slow to give to the poor? Do we not know that God has given us all that we have, and that "we are not our own, for we are bought with a price." "And whosoever ye will ye may do them good." Sometimes we begin to think if I give this two dollar bill to this poor member, it is gone. Oh brother, don't forget that it is lent to the Lord.

"He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he (the Lord) pay him again." Prov. 19: 17. Here we see that is only loaned to the Lord, and we are laying up treasures in heaven, where moth doth not corrupt, nor thieves do not break through nor steal.

My heart has been filled with sorrow, when I have heard brethren say, "I will not help to keep the poor members, there is a way provided for them by the county, and we pay our taxes, and we have a right to make use of the money." So say I, if the Annual Council says so, and provided the members are kept among us, and not taken to the poor house. But brethren, we agreed to hear the church, and let us be careful to pay our vows. "For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister." Heb. 6: 10. "To obey is better than to sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." But the reason why we are so negligent in this matter, is because we are not interested enough in our salvation, and those that are around us. Again the Bible says, "He which soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye always having all sufficiency in all things may be abundant to every good work." 2 Cor. 9: 6, 7, 8.

Would we not be glad to know that the Lord loves us? And he declares that he loves a cheerful giver. And if we own him (not by word only) but by works and actions in this life, he will own us in the life to come. But as already hinted at, it is said, "I am poor myself." Brethren, let me say something right here, and that is this: Each district should have a treasury, and upon the first day of the week, give as the Lord has prospered. And if only the money that is spent for tobacco, was put in the treasury, how many glad hearts could be made with said means. Brethren, when money is spent for tobacco, how freely it goes. But oftentimes when we call for help for the poor saints, how slow it comes. And oftentimes we begin to look for the smallest piece, that we may give it. Don't be afraid dear brethren, Jesus Christ has said, "But seek ye the kingdom of God first, and all these things shall be added unto you," speaking of the necessities of life. Again, if each member was to put two cents a week into the above named treasury, there would always be money in the treasury when needed, and then there would be no gathering required when it is wanted. This is an important subject. Will not some able brethren give us an article upon it. May God help us to do his will, for he say, "Not every one that says unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matth. 7: 21.

"Always With Us."

BY LANDON WEST.

What a cheering thought that the Christian treads not a lonely way! What an extended, but always present hope he has! What a happy assurance he has that others shall share with him the struggles and sorrows of life! "Behold, I am with you always," comes like the glory of the noonday sun upon our pathway of gloom and sadness.

The more thought we give to the great workings of All-Wise Providence, the more we admire the power and wisdom and love to be seen in them all. And so we much admire the great provision made for the comforting of the saints. How natural that the child of God should be comforted by the Divine Presence!

The natural man seeks company but always that which is suitable to his own disposition, and is miserable if he finds himself alone or in the wrong company. There is no punishment so great, as that of entire loneliness, or to be in company where there is no blending of spirits. We once visited the dying bed of a neighbor who had buried all his children and then his wife. He was without disease, save that of mental anguish, but was the most distressed sufferer we ever saw, and died soon after of a broken heart. He was in the full sense alone and he felt it.

In the world we have our associations, and it may for the time seem pleasant, but our Master bids us leave it, or bring it with us and come and follow him. To obey, is to live, to disobey is to die. This change of condition makes a great change in our association. The things we once hated, we now love, and the things we once loved we now hate, and we pass from death unto life. Our Christian course may seem lonely and cheerless to those who walk not in it; but how gross their mistake! We have the best of company: the good, the pure and the happy for companions, angels for our ministering spirits, the Holy Spirit as our light and guide, and Jesus for our captain. Such people, with such hopes, such company and such a leader, how can they be lonely, and what is it they shall not gain? Can it be anything less than that rest which remaineth for the people of God. "All hail the power of Jesus name." Read Hymn 389.

Centennial.

BY D. E. BRUBAKER.

In No. 7, of present Vol., of Primitive Christian, E. Smith of Pawnee city, Nebraska, asks for some brother to give light on the subject of attending the Centennial. There are many older and wiser minds among the many contributors to these columns. But as I have as yet, not seen a response to the important request, I therefore will drop a few thoughts which may help some brother or sister to make up their mind, as to going or not going to the Centennial.

There is, under all circumstances, in which the Christian may be placed, safe ground to occupy. The proper way is not to ask oneself, will other members be there? And if so, therefore it will do no harm for me to be there too. Of all the unsafe rules by which Christian conduct is guided, this is the most unsafe, and it is to be shunned. If we have a longing curiosity to see this great modern gigantic exhibition, let us first determine what is the principal object of the grand display? Secondly, ask the Scripture, whether, the word and spirit of God, extends the privilege to Christians to join hands with the world in supporting such institutions by our presence, and by our admission fees. Again, when we undertake to perform any act, which leads us into doubt, we generally can find the safe ground, by asking ourselves, can I look up to the great God and ask his blessings upon it? Therefore let us imagine ourselves on the way to the great Centennial, hurled along by the powerful iron horse on his steel track, at almost lightning speed; we begin to think about the dangers of travel, about our loved ones at home, and we will then offer up a word of prayer for protection. In consistency it would have to run somewhat like this: "O Lord, remember and keep safely thy servant; and especially remember the loved ones I have left at home, for I am now on my way to the Centennial." Again, let us search the Scriptures, and see where we find the following quotation: "The day following, Jesus and his disciples made preparation and went up to Philadelphia to see the Centennial, it being highly necessary for them in their holy calling to see the great curiosities of the world." But although we find no such teaching in our guide book of Christian deportment, we find something like this, "But Jesus himself went apart into a desert place to pray." Brethren, let us also while the world is enjoying her "vanity fair" "draw apart" and ask God to keep us humble, and in the "narrow path." From the Scripture, I am led to believe that the greatest curiosity at the great coming Centennial will be a truly humble follower of Jesus.

Oh, that we might in our families and in our churches try the force of kindness. You can never drive men, women or children into the kingdom of God. A March northeaster will bring out more honeysuckles than fretfulness and scolding will ever bring out Christian grace. I wish that in all our religious work we might be saturated with the spirit of kindness. Missing that, we miss a great deal of usefulness. There is no need of coming out before men and thundering to them the law unless at the same time you preach to them the gospel.—Talmage.

A CALL BY THE SAVIOR.

Come, sinner, meditate within,
And think upon your present state,
How many are your pains and sins
When ye are absent from free grace?

Come, sinner, pause awhile and think
How much you injure all your joys
While you are subject to your sins,
And when you disobey my laws.

Remember, sinner, you are dead
To all the bliss and peacefulness
Which I do shed upon the head
Of all my saints who in me feast.

I died on earth for blood man,
And with my bloody laws I sealed;
But now I live on high and can
Your sins forgive—but ye must seek.

I knew your state by nature well,
And had compassion on your race;
I died, I rose and conquered hell,
And will impart free grace, free grace.

My laws are firm and just and true,
They bid you to repent and seek,
And all my counsels to pursue,
And worship at your Savior's feet.

My eternal Father calls to you,—
Awakens all your conscious years,
And I do plead a dying view,
Repent and I will dry your tears.

If you will disregard my call,
And thus neglect a glorious crown,
You know 't is written in my law,
Eternity will give you frowns.

But if you will my counsel take,
And seek for joy and peace and rest,
Live long for your Savior's sake,—
I'll bring you home to all my blest.

(The above was written by my father, Jacob Miller, March 7th, 1856, and given to his oldest sister, Mrs. Carpenter. At her death I got it, as it was the only copy I knew I could get in his own handwriting.—EMMA A. MILLER.)

• The Beatitudes of the Mount.
No. 7.

BY JOHN CALVIN BRIGHT.

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Matth. 5. 9.

We are reminded of a thought introduced in number three. And as this is the last of the trait-describing, fruit-producing beatitudes, we reproduce it here and enlarge upon it. That thought is this: that each beatitude seems to be an outgrowth of the preceding. That is, each succeeding one, rises higher and higher in precious truths and sublime and glorious blessings.

In the first we have a class in spiritual poverty. In the second, mourning caused by this spiritual want, and a consolation promised. Meekness ensues, and blessings accumulate. And such characters "hunger and thirst after righteousness." And being "filled with the fruits of righteousness," they are "merciful even as our Father in heaven is merciful." And having "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," they are "pure in heart" and worthy of the appellation—"peacemakers."

But I would not have you understand that one who has reached the acme of the Beatitudes, loses any of the virtues of the preceding ones. O no! He is only more and more imbued with their holy principles, filled with their divine fruits, and nerved to duty by their sanctifying influences. Hence the peacemaker is still the same meek character, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Or the same humble individual, mourning his waywardness and sinfulness, exclaiming in unison with the apostle Paul, "O wretched man that I am: who shall deliver me from the body of this death."

The whole vegetable world is comprised in two classes: Exogens and Endogens. The first class encreases its stem by additions from without. The second, from within. But the Beatitudes of the Mount increase, within-out, and without-in. We cannot reach their core, or limit their extent. This divine cluster of precious truths sprang from the "True Vine," and consequently, it produces an inexhaustible supply of perennial fruit. And none can see its ineffable beauties, or drink of its deep pleasure, or partake of its blessed delights, but those "whose lives are hid with Christ in God." And the whole world may be challenged to produce anything that will compare with the blessed climax, with which the Master introduced the incomparable and immortal sermon on the Mount. So much as we pass along.

Blessed are the peacemakers. Peacemaker, one who labors to promote peace and union, and assists in reconciling differences, and pacifying those at variance. It signifies to bind or connect what has been sundered or broken. A peacemaker is a public benefactor, a philanthropist one who is willing to lay down his life for his brethren. He will mediate, negotiate, and arbitrate—spend and be spent to secure harmony, tranquility and peace.

God is the great peacemaker. In the Scriptures He is frequently called the "God of peace." Man broke his law, raised the puny arm of rebellion, and with his whole progeny, became "by nature the children of wrath." Yet Deity followed him through various dispensations, and into the very mountains of sin and folly with the olive branch of peace and reconciliation. Glimmerings of peace were seen far down the stream of time, when God in cursing our fore parents declared that the seed of the woman would destroy the power of the devil, and rescue fallen humanity from the snares of old Diabolus. And by the transforming power of His sublime principles of peace make them "new creatures in Christ Jesus," "heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ."

And when the time was fulfilled and humanity was ripe for salvation "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life"—might find "peace in believing." The Father is called the "God of peace," as we have noticed already. The Son the "Prince of peace," and Paul in the introduction of the thirteen letters that bear his name desires that "Peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" might be with the various churches and brethren to which his epistles were directed. And the gospel is termed the "Gospel of peace," and when the angel announced the Birth of Christ to Bethlehem's shepherds, the angelic choir unfurled the banners of salvation, chanting its inscription, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men."

Christ came and preached peace. And if we are "justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." We should therefore "lead a quiet and peaceable life," "live peaceably with all men." "Follow peace and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord." "Be at peace among ourselves." And seek that peaceable wisdom that cometh from above. Then will we experience, that "The peace of God passeth all understanding." Then we have the Spirit of Christ and are peacemakers in deed and truth, for the fruits of the Spirit is peace, &c. Gal. 5: 22.

The weapons of peacemakers "are not carnal, but mighty through God" in demolishing the strongholds of the Devil. "The breastplate of righteousness," "The shield of faith," "The sword of the spirit," and "The helmet of salvation," are the implements of war and subjugation, with which the followers of the Prince of peace "fight the good fight of faith." With these they go forth "conquering and to conquer."

On the memorable night of Christ's betrayal and apprehension, two swords were enough for him to enforce the doctrine of peace and non-resistance. When Peter smote the servant of the high priest, Christ, "as one having authority," commanded him, "Put up again thy sword into his place: for they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." And it is still in its sheath and presumptuous and arrogant is the character who will unsheathe it, without authority from the Head of the church. The world has the other sword and she uses it only too well! Millions of treasure and myriads of slain have done homage to it. Untold wealth and rivers of blood have been wasted to satisfy the freaks of ambitious, ungodly, and designing men. But the church of the living God in obedience to the behest of the Master, "Resist not evil," "But overcome evil with good," has beaten its swords into plowshares, its spears into pruning hooks, and all its instruments of war into implements of peace.

Here we refer to the fact that while the various popular sects of Christendom were engaged in prosecuting the late civil war, the Brethren stood aloof. The Roman Catholic, the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, the Congregationalist, the Unitarian, the Universalist, the German Reformed, the Lutheran, the Methodist, the United Brethren, the Campbellite, the Free Mason, the Odd Fellow of the north thrust their swords into the very vitals of their brethren in the south. And their southern brethren returned the compliments, lacerating, deforming, mutilating their brethren, who were "made after the similitude of God." Thus while the various isms and schisms of Christendom, and oath bound societies of the world were committing murder—wholesale, reciprocal, continuous murder—the church of the Brethren were smoking the pipe of peace—praying for peace. "Who hath ears to hear let him hear."

A peacemaker may be compared to a mighty river. A warrior, to a foaming cataract. The former flows through the heart of the continent, spreading its benign influences on all sides. Its fertile valley feeds millions of people, cities spring up and flourish on its bank, manufactories are driven by its mighty power, and commerce decks her sails on its deep waters. But destruction and havoc mark the course of the latter. The awful thundering roar, the mad rush of the waters, and their appalling descent, feed no industries, nor promote any comfort. All that get in its ruinous power are destroyed. Even so light, life, and happiness, prosperity, love, union, and peace follow the footsteps of the peacemaker. And desolation, sorrow and despair the way of the warrior.

A peacemaker has a lock to his mouth, a bridle on his tongue. His speech is with "grace seasoned with salt." His words are like "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

"The law of kindness is on his tongue, And kindness in his actions runs."

He has a sympathizing and cheerful word for the tattered and ragged orphan, and disconsolate widow, as well as for those in better circumstances. He is "a living epistle" of philanthropy and benevolence "known and read of all men." But why go any further with this. The twelfth chapter of Romans is a graphic description of a peacemaker. No uninspired pen can approach it. I refer the reader to it and proceed to notice the second clause of our text.

For they shall be called the children of God. And they are worthy of the title. God is the "God of peace," Christ the "Prince of peace," the gospel is the "Gospel of peace," the fruit of the Spirit is peace &c., and the peacemaker is the promoter of peace. Surely it is a suitable and appropriate appellation. Christ is the only begotten Son of God. Peacemakers are His adopted children, and with Christ shall inherit all things. And no matter how they are designated here, or what manner of infamy are heaped upon them, they will be owned as God's children, when Christ shall sit in judgment, and shall be "kings and priests unto God" when "Time shall be no longer."

Here the question arises, Whose children are they that foment divisions in the church, state, neighborhood, and family? Who cause divisions contrary to Christ, and privily bring in "damnable heresies?" Who seek to change time and seasons, and "remove the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set?" Who are not satisfied with the "old paths," but with worldly wisdom devise one to suit their own notion? Who are contentious and "sow discord among brethren?" Are they children of God the Father of peace, and lover of concord? Are they followers of Christ the Prince of peace, and the sacrifice and mediator of it? Are they led by the Holy Spirit, who is the nourisher and bond of peace? Are they "lively stones" in the church of the Most High, which is the kingdom and family of peace—"the pillar and ground of truth?" "I speak as unto wise men, judge ye what I say."

A Necessary Explanation.

BY S. W. HOOVER.

In the following article I wish to give the transactions as they occurred at a meeting of elders and others at or near Covington, Ohio, in October last, and at the same time correct our brother John R. Denlinger, in No. 10, Vol. 1, of the Primitive

Christian, who it seems is laboring to produce the impression, both at home and abroad, that our brother S. Kinsey, editor and proprietor of the Vindicator, took upon himself the privilege and responsibility to publish as his own private views, that at our next Annual Meeting, no medicines, books, pamphlets, eandies, &c., &c., be brought upon the ground and offered for sale, and that to persons are to be brought there by brethren as reporters. That the meeting would be for Brethren only, and that no seat be reserved at the table, for such reporters.

The facts are that brother Kinsey published the proceedings and deliberations of that meeting, as they there transpired, and not his own views only.

All the churches, or nearly so in southern Ohio, were counseled in order to ascertain if they were willing or not, to take the Annual Meeting for 1876, to be held somewhere in the state, and willing also to assist in supplying the means necessary to hold it.

After the churches were counseled, a meeting was appointed in the Covington district, at which it transpired that some of the elders present, were not willing to take the Annual Meeting, nor assist in furnishing the needed means for it, if it was to be conducted the same as it had been of late. But upon conditions, that the above named objectionable things be prevented, they would be ready and willing to do their part.

They wished to hold an Annual Meeting that the brethren might be able to conduct free from these evils, so common of late years, and by the permission and indulgence of which a great portion of the brotherhood has become offended. Upon this then, a brother was called upon to write out a provision, which was done, and then read to the meeting and passed, as nearly, or quite, the unanimous conclusion of all present. The reporter was named among other objections of that provision, as brother Denlinger very well knows.

At the meeting at Covington, certain brethren were appointed to attend a meeting for the state near Lima. At which time it was ascertained that there existed a desire throughout the state to take the Annual Meeting again this year. Thereupon brethren were appointed to look out a suitable place, and to locate it. At this meeting also these objectionable features, as above noticed, were again made mention of, and as all know the decision was, and is, that they are a hindrance to the peace and quietude, that should otherwise characterize our conference.

I am indeed grieved to see that our brother has gone to so much pains to create a wrong impression among the readers of the Primitive Christian, and to cast odium upon brother Kinsey, and why if he was not satisfied with the proceedings of these preparatory meetings did he not say so, and thus avoid an effort to cast blame where it does not belong.

I entertain many kind feelings toward our brother, and with all due regard, for his views, and the truth as it is in Jesus. I am desirous that we be careful to discriminate correctly between the doings of an individual, and those of the church.

Prayer.

BY HENRY P. BRINKWORTH.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Ephesians 4 : 30.

Having read in our periodicals the two subjects entitled, a call to prayer:—from the pens of brethren Longanecker and M. Hady, and being deeply impressed with the truths contained in those articles, I have been constrained to add a word of encouragement to all who have felt it their duty and privilege while reading those lines, to exercise in prayer whenever called upon to do so, thereby fulfilling the law of Christ when here on earth, who has told us, to "take up our cross, and follow him." Yes, he has set us the example; and can we refuse conscientiously, to thank him when called upon in public. I think if we do so we "quench the Spirit. 1 Thess. 5 : 19. We "grieve the Holy Spirit of God; and we cause to run afresh the bleeding wounds of our dear and blessed Redeemer." Dear reader, whoever you may be, think on these things, think seriously; remember your Savior in the garden of Gethsemane. Reflect on his prayer for his followers, in the 17th chapter of St. John's Gospel, and then ask yourself the question: Am I daily bearing the cross for Christ! Or am I ashamed to own his cross, or blush to speak his name. Methinks the very angels blush when they see man, redeemed man, unwilling to take upon himself the yoke, or bear the burden; when Christ has assured us, "His yoke is easy, and his burden is light." Can we expect to receive the crown, or to hear the welcome plaudit, "good and faithful servant," if we will persistently disobey and set aside God's most Holy Law? Oh! dear brethren and sisters! let us be in earnest in our Master's cause, and if we have heretofore neglected what we now see to be an imperative duty, let us not put it off; "God's Spirit will not always strive with man." Oh! let us be up and doing, the night of death is at hand, and we are lying idle; we may rest assured that,

Satan finds some mischief still,
For idle hands to do.

May we be all encouraged to do our duty, and may God enable us to do so, by the outpouring of his Holy Spirit. May we be very careful that we "grieve not the Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption," thereby incurring the displeasure of our Heavenly Father. May we be enabled by his Spirit to obey; Yes, willingly. And we shall be abundantly blessed in this world, and in the world to come, is my prayer. Amen.

Imputed Righteousness.

BY J. S. FLORY.

"For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." 2 Cor. 5 : 21.

In a previous article we treated at some length upon the first part of the above text. We will now consider the latter clause, "that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Christ was made to be sin for us, that is, the sin of the world was imputed to him, that through him it might be atoned for, so we might escape its imputation. For we learn that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Thus by the vicarious sacrifice made by Christ, we escape the curse. The sin of the world was imputed to him, instead of to us; and by the efficacy of his blood was taken away that there be no hindrance to prevent us from coming to God. Christ having been "made to be sin for us," now we are "made the righteousness of God in him. Oh, what an inestimable favor!" "Made the righteousness of God;" not only righteous, but the "righteousness of God," and that, too, in Christ. And this righteousness is imputed to us. Oh, what love! Free grace, free grace! the very essence of salvation. We have nothing to do to merit salvation. That is impossible. It would be placing a low estimate on the merits of Christ, to presume that we must work righteousness on our part before God will impute his righteousness to us. The apostle Paul gives us to understand that in the gospel "is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, as it is written, The just shall live by faith." Yea, the Gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." Faith first, faith last, and faith all the time, is necessary, and that too a living faith in Christ, that we might be "made the righteousness of God in him." The gospel is the glass in which we behold Christ in all his beauty. It is there he is manifest to our believing eyes—we see him the meek and lowly One. All the divine characteristics of his life stand forth in bold relief. The breathings of his Holy Spirit have sanctified those holy pages, and we must believe on him as the Scriptures testify of him. An unbiased faith in Christ leads to acceptance of him. To accept of Christ is to accept of the Cross and his teachings above all else. Unreserved obedience is the ultimate result of faith—true faith in Christ. By all our acts of obedience we only give evidence of our love to God. In fact, obedience is the legitimate offspring of faith and love—nothing more; for our hopes of salvation are based on the free grace of God. Having such faith—such love as prompts to obedience, we may know of a surety that it is "God that worketh in us to will and to do." The strait path of duty is not shunned; and yet, after walking therein, we are counted "unprofitable servants." Yet the promise is eternal life; yea, the righteousness of God.

It is difficult to comprehend the real meaning of the "righteousness of God." To be righteous is to be clothed with righteousness; but to be made righteous is to be righteous throughout, solid, complete, essentially so in every respect; and that is what is meant by being "made the righteousness of God in Christ." Having thus the promise of being so "transformed," oh, what folly to be content with a "righteous" shell—a mere profession—while the kernel—the heart—is full of all unrighteousness; having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof! Formal worship, or formal Christianity, may look very well to a proud world; but it is an abomination to God. He would have the power of godliness centered in the heart, and at work there. There is indeed power in genuine faith and obedience. The might and power of godliness is in the gospel; he that would deny that, denies "the power" indeed. What folly also to claim righteousness in the kernel—heart—while through the shell—profession—oozes the very essence of "dead men's bones!" Creeds and isms full of all subtlety and cunningness, that if it were possible the elect might be deceived.

God's imputed righteousness in its nature is peaceable, pure and holy, and in its office sanctifies the heart, "purifies" the soul in obeying the truth," manifests itself throughout the whole "tabernacle" even to the cleansing of the "outside the platter;" that is, the points of righteousness will be manifest not only in the inner man, but the outer also must needs be sanctified, being as it is, the temple of the Holy Ghost. Shame on the professor who would adorn the temple as Satan would adorn his subjects, in the abominations that the world esteem; or would be found mingling with the world in their carnal feasts and abominable adulteries with the Queen of Babylon. The righteousness of God in Christ separates the subjects from the world, makes them "strangers" seeking a better country; and in their wanderings in the wilderness, God is their God, Jesus their captain and counsellor. Oh, the great work God has accomplished through Christ! Sinners taken from the miry clay of fallen humarity and placed in Christ's stead to be made like him. While sinners, our place is where Judas stood; but grace lifts us up to walk in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Christ has gone to bask in the smiles of heavenly glory robed in the rich robe of righteousness, and our privilege is the same. Oh! shall we forfeit our crown of glory prepared for all the faithful? Christ wore the crown of thorns, our due, that we might wear his crown of glory with him in heaven.

Oh, what a friend! What a Savior! Come ye, humble souls, who have tasted of God's righteousness, let us on the wings of faith mount up until we can stand where Christ stands at the right hand of exalted majesty, and sit with him who has overcome; for the promise is to all who overcome that they shall sit on thorns with him. He was disrobed of all royalty, and took our nakedness upon himself on the Cross, that we might wear the royal robes of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

And ye, poor sinners, come, oh, come, and see what Jesus has done for you. He was "made sin" for you that the righteousness of God might be yours through him. Yes, you. He came not to call the righteous, but sinners—sinners like you—who are far from God. Sin has dug the yawning gulf between you and your God. Daily it grows wider and wider. Soon, very soon, it may be the rising tide from below will meet you, and that, too, while you are prepared. Trust no longer to stand upon the trembling precipice. Flee, oh, flee to the arms of bleeding mercy! Christ has bridged the way across the gulf of sin. Faith is thy passport; Come in the name of all you hold dear; come and Christ will save.

An Uncleanly Habit.

That very many excellent people are in the habit of tobacco-using cannot be denied. To assert that the habit is in itself sinful would be to go beyond "the law and the testimony." To declare that the habit indicates in any degree a lower spiritual standard than does abstinence from it would be eminently uncharitable. To insist that in no case is the use of tobacco promotive of sound health would only open for discussion a question in which doctors disagree. Yet this habit is one which should not pass unchallenged, as desirable for boys and youths to cultivate. It is certainly fair to consider it in all its bearings, even at a risk of disturbing the equanimity of some who have been addicted to it almost from childhood.

Waiving then the question of the morality or propriety of tobacco-using, the fact stands out unmistakable that it is an uncleanly habit. Even if it could be shown that the use of tobacco tended to the health and well being to the user, the objection would still remain, that the habit renders a person offensive to very many with whom he is brought into close association. Mr. Moody has suggested, with his accustomed force and pertinency, that the only text in the Bible which can fairly be quoted in favor of the use of tobacco is in Revelation 22: 11, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still."

Most tobacco users are in the habit of spitting on the floor, wherever they happen to be, in office, sitting-room, street car, or railway carriage. Gentlemen of otherwise scrupulous neatness—those who are fastidious in dress and speech and manners—often grow uncleanly in this particular as they continue in the use of tobacco; possibly because of the stupefying, deadening influence of the narcotic, which renders them less sensitive to the demands of propriety while indulging in its use. A gentleman's smoking ear, for an example, on the best conducted railway in the United States, will not compare favorably for cleanliness with a first class stable. An extra price would be gladly paid, by ladies, or by gentlemen who do not use tobacco, for seats in a railway carriage which no tobacco user had recently occupied.

When indeed, as in the case of some who smoke but do not chew tobacco, a tobacco user refrains carefully from spitting offensively, he cannot relieve himself of the essential filth of a smoke-filled person.

While the best tobacco is burning, its fumes are by no means unpleasant to all who do not themselves smoke; but to no one is the stench of the residuum of burned tobacco more than tolerable; to many it is utterly intolerable. The breath, the hair and beard, and the clothing of an inveterate smoker are uniformly offensive to those whose senses are not benumbed or perverted by the use of tobacco, or by constant intimacy with those befouled by such use. To this rule there are no exceptions. Elegant gentlemen, those who smoke the best cigars, would many of them be surprised to learn how disagreeable their presence becomes in houses they enter as guests, or in rooms or cars where they take seats. Many a lady opens her parlor windows and doors to ventilate the room after a gentleman smoker has called. Many a sleeping car passenger is nauseated by the stench of the blankets which have enwrapped first class tobacco users on a former occasion in that berth. Many a young man has gone away disgusted, from a call on his smoking pastor, for a conference as to the great question of salvation, because of the unsavory odors about the person and in the room of the cigar-loving minister. This is not a mere supposition. The very names could be given in enough of cases to put at rest all questions on this point if that were deemed desirable.

Of course not all tobacco users understand this. Very many of them would abandon the habit if they realized their offensiveness from its indulgence. Hence there is a reason for calling attention to it. A Sunday school teacher who is in the habit of smoking has in that habit no slight barrier between himself and such of his scholars as are not tobacco users. If indeed the use of tobacco gives great comfort to those who are addicted to it, and there is no objection to it on the score of morals, and it tends to health and prolonged life, the man who secures health and comfort at such a cost, is to be counted much as would be an otherwise very lovely person who is afflicted with a foul putrid cancer. The best one can do in his society is to hold one's breath—and pity the poor fellow.—The Sunday School Times.

For The Young.

A Wound Well Healed.

"Mamma, if you please, I'll not wear this dress to school any more," said Jenny Bliss, beginning to unbutton the pretty garment in the making of which her mother had taken so much pains.

"Why, what's the matter with the dress?" demanded the lady; "I'm sure there are not many of your schoolmates have better."

"No, indeed," said Jenny. "But, dear mamma, that's just the trouble. The girls were all admiring it, at recess, when Rebecca Dale spoke up and said that she might have a pretty dress if my papa would pay her papa what he owes him; and I'd rather," she continued, as she hung up the new dress and took down an old one, "wear the shabbiest clothes in the world than wear nice things and be insulted."

Mrs. Bliss made no reply. Jenny was but twelve years old, yet she spoke decidedly, and the mother had lately begun to perceive that her children were no longer babies. That her husband owed some debts she knew; but it was only in the way of business, in which she had no interference, and so long as she did not waste his money, or tease him for more than he could afford to give her, she thought that her duty was done. But here was a pinch that hurt. It had always been her ambition to see her family looking nice, and now those debts, that had hitherto sat so easy, were obtruding their ugly presence to mar that pleasure. As these thoughts flitted through the good woman's mind, tears rushed to her eyes, which Jenny seeing, came to her side and kissed her.

"Now, mamma," she said, "don't you worry. I'm not unhappy about it. But, you know it is a little tantalizing, it papa owes Mr. Dale money, that Rebecca should see me dressed up while she can't. So we'll just fix over my old frocks, and I'll feel comfortable in them until papa pays up his debts.

Still Mrs. Bliss did not speak, but now it was surprise that kept her silent. Here was the child that such a short time ago she had rocked in her arms, soothing her in trouble, and arranging her own course in a family difficulty. At last a bright thought struck her and she asked: "Jenny do you know where Rebecca Dale lives?"

Jenny replied that she did.

"Well," said the mother, "go round there and ask her to come and spend the evening with you. You can study your lessons together; and if the child needs clothes she shall have them."

Jenny was delighted to go; and both Rebecca and her mother were surprised at the invitation, as the Blesses had always held their heads a little high. But the evening was spent pleasantly. When Mr. Bliss came home his wife had a little gentle talk with him; and the next day she further surprised Mrs. Dale by calling on her, and offering to give her so much a week until the debt between their husbands should be liquidated.

After that there was much economy in the Bliss household, but it was not half as unpleasant as you would suppose. Indeed, it became an amusement when mother and daughter planned cheerfully together how less could be made to do as well as more; and they were happy in feeling that they were working in the cause of honesty. When Jenny again wore the pretty dress that had been the innocent cause of this movement, Mrs. Dale and Rebecca had both new ones, and there was strong neighborly affection between the two families.—Christian Advocate.

To Our Young Women.

Young women of to-day! the solemn duty, the glorious privilege, rests with you to redeem the young men of our country in your companionship from dreadful danger, and save yourselves from sharing its heaviest part. You hold the heart strings of our young manhood. You can wield a power greater, perhaps than fathers' teachings or mothers' tears. Oh! use it for God; use it for purity and temperance. Demand reform—of the guilty, already sinning, immediate repentance and abstinence; those in danger, warn so that they may know that you are watching to see if they love sin more than you.

Don't trust your heart's affections with a man who is at any moment likely to yield to the lowest temptation and surrender his manhood. Don't trust your tender love with a man who cannot control even his grosser appetites and passions, but will risk his own health and your happiness for the idle gratification of a vicious propensity. Don't associate with a young man who drinks. These are the negatives. The positives are: go to work actively to save; dissuade young men from doubtful courses which may lead them to sin; kindly and tenderly reach forth and save the falling. Perhaps they are even now waiting for the token of loving anxiety or the word of tender rebuke that tells them that some one cares for their souls. Perhaps they are even now ashamed of their evil ways, and only need the power of some beloved voice to win them back to purity and peace. There is greater power, if wisely used, in the soft entreaty of love to turn the scale of resolution, than in the taunts and sneers of profligate companions. It is a power delicate but mighty like the sunshine; use it for God and temperance; chide and rebuke in love; as well as entreat and persuade. Induce your female friends to do likewise, and help them, and you can soon form a social sentiment and power against intemperance which will crush the demon in a year. Make the social atmosphere of your homes so pure that drunkenness will be ashamed to enter there. Oh! there is a service which will make life glorious, dignify womanhood, and glorify God.

Dare you do it?

Ask God's blessing and guidance, and begin to-day, and in His mighty power go forth conquering and to conquer.—Sel.

If you would keep a book, and every day put down the things that pester you, and see what becomes of them, it would be a benefit to you. You allow a thing to pester you, just as you allow a fly to settle on you and plague you; and you loose your temper (or rather get it; for when men are surcharged with temper they are said to have lost it); and you justify yourselves for being thrown off your balance by causes which you do not trace out. But if you would see what it was that threw you off your balance before breakfast, and put it down in a little book, and follow it up, and follow it out, and ascertain what becomes of it, you would see what a fool you were in the matter.

A LITTLE boy was born blind. At last an operation was performed—the light was let in slowly. When, one day, his mother led him out of doors and uncovered his eyes, and for the first time he saw the sky and earth, "Oh, mother!" he cried, "why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?" She burst into tears, and said, "I tried to tell you, dear, but you could not understand me." So it is when we try to tell what is in the Bible. Unless the spiritual sight is opened, we cannot understand.

MANY men, without being hypocrites at heart, surround themselves with an atmosphere of insincerity in the intercourse of life which destroys to that extent their faith in the reality of others. Let us not pretend to more than we have and are. Those who have homes should especially seek to keep them free from everything that is false.

THOUGHTS ON THE REPORTING QUESTION.

From what we saw and experienced at our last Annual Meeting of the question of a full report, and from the manifestation of the feeling of the brethren upon the subject since that meeting, we presume it will come up at our next A. M. for consideration, and it will probably be the first question to be considered by the meeting. It therefore becomes the duty of the brethren to give the matter a calm and candid consideration, that they may be prepared to give an expression of their minds upon the subject at the proper time.

Whether or not there is really the importance attached to a full report, or even to any report at all, that a number of the brethren thinks there is, is not the question now to be considered. The subject of a report of the proceedings of our A.

M., has been so looked at by a large number of our brethren, as to lead them to think that a report, and also what is understood to be a full report of the public proceedings of our Annual Council, is edifying and profitable, and therefore desirable, and such a report is asked for, and the question is, can the A. M., with propriety and safety, grant such a report, if it should appear that a majority of the brethren desires it?

A very common objection to such a report as is asked for, is this: There is no Scripture for such a report. And those desiring such a report may with the utmost propriety reply to such as make this objection, "If there is no Scripture for a report, there is also none against it, so we are in this respect both alike." But this answer does not seem to meet the case, since those who ask for a report do not base their claim upon any Scripture bearing directly upon the subject. It is well known by the reflecting among our brethren that we do not claim to have a "thus saith the Lord," or a direct command, or example from the Scriptures, for everything we do in conducting the worship of the Lord, and the affairs of the church. The divine Founder of the Christian church never designed to give a direct precept touching every case of duty that was to arise to the end of time, or in whatever locality or country where Christianity would be introduced.

Then as there is nothing in the Scriptures bearing directly upon the subject of a report, we must examine it under other aspects than those of direct Scripture precept or example. The church unquestionably has some discretionary power to regulate its affairs and business as will best promote its purity, unity and efficiency. This power it has always exercised. It has exercised it in adopting the practice of an Annual Council to settle questions that are considered of importance to the general membership. We find no direct law for, nor example of an Annual Council in the gospel. The council of which we have an account in the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, was not an Annual Council. It was a council called for a special purpose, and we have no reason to believe it was continued every year.—It was held A. D. 53. The history of the church is continued in the Acts until A. D. 62. We have no account within those ten years of another council similar to the one of which we have an account in the 15th chapter. And it is doubtful whether that council was a general one. It seems to have been composed of delegates from the church at Antioch, the church at Jerusalem, and the Apostles. It does not appear that there was a general representation of all the churches in that council. It is said that the first general or Ecumenical council was the Council of Nice, in A. D. 325, called by the emperor Constantine to suppress Arianism.

It was not for some time after the reorganization of the church by our ancient brethren that a general council was held. In the account that brother Henry Kurtz has given us of the origin of the A. M. in the Brethren's Encyclopedia, it is stated that the first council meeting held by the Brethren was the council meeting before their first lovefeast; that they had no general council meeting but the one before the lovefeast for a number of years; that it was not until thirty or forty years after the arrival of the Brethren in America that they commenced holding what is called an Annual Meeting; and that the Annual Council was held when the multiplication of the churches and the increase of business required it, and not simply because the apostolic church had a council somewhat similar. That is, the church recognized in itself discretionary power to appoint such council meetings as it judged conducive to its peace and prosperity, and first appointed the council meeting before the lovefeast, and when occasion required it, it appointed the general annual council.

With the same propriety can the church admit of a full report, should it appear that such a report will be to the edification of its members. Now it appears that a large number of the brethren are edified in reading a full report of the proceedings of our Annual Council, and ask for such a report. They desire to know the reasons, especially in some cases, which lead the brethren to adopt the decisions at the A. M. which they do, feeling that it is more satisfactory to have the reasons for the decisions than to have the decisions without any information showing the reasons for them, especially to those to whom the correctness of the decisions sometimes does not seem so plain. The arguments used in obtaining such decisions may reconcile brethren to them, that otherwise might not be so well satisfied. In this age of the church, it cannot wonder that its members should want to know sometimes the grounds and reasons for the orders and rules which they are to observe. To ask the members of the church to submit to rules the propriety of which they cannot at first perceive, simply because they are decisions of A. M., may not always be the most judicious way to pursue. We are commanded to be always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of our hope. 1 Peter iii. 15. So it may often be well to be able to give the reason of our order as adopted by our A. M. If some friendly alien should ask some of our brethren for the reason of some order he has noticed among us, it would hardly be satisfactory to him to simply say, "Our A. M. has so decided." It would be more satisfactory if he could show the propriety or utility of the order.

Looking, then, at the subject of a report in the conciliatory and charitable spirit of the gospel, and there being no apparent evil likely to grow out of it, might not the church with safety grant a report if it appears that a large number of the brethren want it? It is said that the request for a report causes strife and trouble, since many of the brethren think it best to have no report. But it should produce no strife or unkind feelings among us. If it is made to appear that a large number of the brethren desire a report, while comparatively but few are opposed to it, it would seem that it should be granted. On the other hand, should there be but a small number of the brotherhood that desires a report, and should it be thought best not to grant it, the decision of the meeting should be cheerfully acquiesced in. There should be no strife. There are things in our congregations about which the members differ, but that difference does not necessarily lead to strife.

It is also said that this reporting question is something new, and some doubt the propriety of admitting it for this reason. But can we consistently object to it on this ground after we have admitted so many new things in connection with our A. M., such as printing the minutes, which for many years was not done, authorizing the churches to send delegates, which was not formerly done, and the erection of a tent, which was not done until within the last few years? And has not the church from the beginning acted on the principle that it has some discretionary power to adapt its labors in some respects to the circumstances by which it is surrounded, both in respect to the promotion of its own edification and also in its efforts to convert sinners? It surely has.

In regard to the names of the speakers being given in the report, we shall say but little. It has been ascertained that a report without the names of the speakers is not at all satisfactory. And we hope that if a report is published, the names of the speakers will likewise be published. We know of no good reason why they should not be. We are all responsible for what we speak on such occasions, and our speech should "be always with grace seasoned with salt," (Col. iv. 6.) whether our speech and name be reported and printed or not.

We have felt like offering some remarks on the Reporting Question, and have offered the foregoing. We do sincerely hope and pray that the subject may be disposed of at the proper time, in the spirit of "brotherly kindness."

ENCOURAGEMENT TO HUMBLE SERVICE.

"She hath done what she could." Mark 14: 8.

Such is the eulogy pronounced by our Lord upon the woman that poured "an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious upon him in the house of Simon the leper in Bethany. The Saviour knowing the real character of all service that was rendered to him, and perceiving so much imperfection connected with all, he praised but few. He surely found more to condemn than to praise. But he was by no means wanting in a disposition to put a proper value upon every act that was prompted by a right motive, and that was in harmony with the great principles of truth. For the scales of truth which he held in his hand, and with which he weighed the actions of men, and with which all human actions will be weighed in the day of judgment, were so nicely and correctly balanced, that the real weight of all character could be correctly ascertained.

"She hath done what she could"—she did her best. Was not this written for our encouragement as well as for Mary's honor? We think it was. Our Divine Master knows the limitation of our opportunities and our ability. And when we have done what we can, we have reached that limitation, and stand approved before our Master. The work that Mary did, was not a great work in itself. Neither was it great in the estimation of the Pharisees who spoke derisively of it, and said, "Why was this waste of the ointment made." But it was great in the sight of our Lord. And it would be well or us all to notice the different judgment passed on the same action by the Pharisees and our Lord. They pronounced Mary's service "waste," while he declared it "a good work." "Let God be true, but every man a liar." What men may ridicule, God may accept; and what men may value and boast of, God may reject.

Let us do what we can, and though it may not be much, it will be enough to commend us to our Lord's gracious approval. And if we have not even an "alabaster box of spikenard" to break and to offer to the Lord, we all may have a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and this is the sacrifice which God will not despise."

A CORRECTION.

We are sorry there was a mistake made in the obituary of OLIVE ELIZA ROYER, which was published in our issue of March 14th. Brother M. Workwan informs us of the mistake, and we willingly correct it. The age of the little girl was 10 years and 2 days, instead of 19 years and 2 days.

THE BRETHREN'S MESSENGER.

The German paper started by brother L. A. Plate, but since purchased by brother J. T. Meyers, is changed from a monthly to a semi-monthly journal, and it is published in both the English and the German language. It is an eight-page paper, and four pages are printed in English and four in German. The patronage for a paper exclusively German seems not to have been sufficient to sustain it. We had fears it would be so, but as there seemed to be a number of brethren who wanted a German paper, the attempt to publish one was made, and we are sorry it did not obtain a supporting patronage. It seems, that the German readers in our fraternity are not sufficient to sustain a German paper. And whether there are English readers enough to support the number of English periodicals we are getting among us, time will show. We wish the "Messenger" success. The price is one dollar a year.

Address, J. T. MEYERS,
Germantown, Pa.

THE INFORMER.

This is the title of a new paper published in Elgin, Ills. It professes to be devoted to Religion, Health, Temperance, Peace, Agriculture, and whatever is promotive of both the temporal and spiritual welfare of its readers. Its editorial corps consists of a number of able men, prominent in their respective fields of labor. Amasa Lord is the publisher and managing editor. The first number contains a variety of interesting articles upon subjects comprised within the various departments of the paper. It is a small eight-page paper, published monthly, at 65 cents per year. Address, AMASA LORD, Publisher of "The Informer," Elgin, Ills.

THE MONTREAL WITNESS.

This is a daily paper published in Montreal, Canada. It is a bold advocate of civil and religious liberty. Its influence which is considerable, owing to its large circulation, has always been on the side of Sabbath observance, temperance and religion. And though the Roman Catholic influence which surrounds it is great, it sustains the principles of Protestantism. Its influence for good is appreciated by many in the community in which it is published, and a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the city of Montreal on the 27th of February, for the purpose of giving some testimonial in favor of the Witness. The following resolution was passed unanimously: "Resolved, That the testimonial shall assume the form of a commodious and substantial building, to be used as the offices of the Montreal Witness, and to become the property of Mr. John Dougal and Mr. John Redpath Dougal." It was proposed to put up a building worth $100,000. It is a gratification to the philanthropist to see that the journalism of a moral tendency is appreciated. The New York Daily Witness, another journal of a high moral character, has called our attention to the Montreal Witness, by a marked article, and we therefore notice it as we have done.

Cleanings and Gittings.

We are sorry to learn from a letter from brother Isaac Killhefer of Ashland Co., O., dated March 18th, that Elder D. M. Wither of the church in Ashland is very low with throat or lung disease, and that he nor his friends have much hope of his recovery.

BROTHER J. R. Replogle, of LaPlace, Ills., in a letter of March 17th, says:—"Isaac Bilhimer is here holding meetings. We commenced in our new meeting-house. And although the weather was bad, we sometimes had large crowds. A few have come out on the Lord's side. Three were baptized to day, and more talk of coming. Our meetings are still going on, and will continue over Sunday. Many good impressions have been made by brother Bilhimer. I hope the good Lord will give the increase to the preached word."

A BROTHER from Wabash, Ind., writing March 17th, says: "I am a reader of your most valuable paper, and am well pleased with its contents, and my desire is that all who wish to have it may have the privilege of reading it. So I enclose fifty cents to be added to the poor fund. We have at present nearly as much snow as at any time this winter."

Bro. Landon West, of Sinking Springs, Ohio, appends the following striking remarks to an article he sends us, though they were not intended as a part of the article to which they were attached:

"Parents, if you want your hearts softened, talk to your little children about the resurrection of the dead. Their earnest queries after the truth will kindle flames which are well-nigh expired."

A SISTER says: "In your useful paper we see several articles on sending tracts and books to the poor. We believe it is right to send them. I suggest that we save our religious papers and send them to others to read after we have read them. Would not this be making good use of our papers? True, some may say, 'They can send their old papers to us.' Well, if they are old, is not the Bible an old book, and we love to read it? I would think it a good present to those who are not able to take the paper and are far from preaching. Oh, how interesting to peruse a package of religious reading! Then let us save our papers. There are some who would be thankful for them and the good reading they contain. Enclosed you will please find 25 cents for the poor fund."

We like the feeling that prompted the above suggestion; it is a commendable feeling. The sister thought of the wants and desires of others and seems to have been exercised to know how these wants and desires might be met, and thought of the idea she suggests. And where brethren do not preserve their papers but permit them to be torn up and wasted, rather than have them thus disposed of, they had much better, after they have read them themselves, give or send them to others, as their usefulness in this way could be greatly increased, and other readers be edified. But we have recommended and we do still recommend to subscribers to preserve their papers and have them bound. We feel assured if many would see what a handsome volume the numbers in a year make when neatly bound, they would preserve their papers and have them bound. In this way they may be useful for future reference, and be read with interest and profit by those who may come after us.

We think that those who properly appreciate a volume of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, would rather pay for an extra copy to lend or give away, than to spare their own, if they could afford to do so. But when means are wanting to procure an extra copy for the use of others, and when we have reason to think the paper would be read with interest, perhaps the spirit of self-denial would require us to let ours be used, but it might be used and returned, and still be kept for binding.

FROM data found in the Scientific American, and taken by that journal from the New York Times, the conclusion arrived at is, that wages are at this time over 33 per cent. less than they were in 1872 in the city of New York. In 1872 there was a strike among the workmen of New York city, and 61,050 men joined the strike. What was demanded by the men who made the strike was, that their wages should continue the same, and the length of time they worked be eight hours instead of ten. Had they obtained their object, which they did not, they would have received what would have been equivalent to 20 per cent. more wages. But now, instead of getting what they then wanted, they are getting 33 per cent. less than what they then received. So great is the decline in wages.

According to the same authority, there is a great decline in property as well as wages in New York city. It is said that in 1869 real property would sell for fully one fourth more than it will at this time, and that rents have declined in the same proportion. This decline is probably general throughout the country.

Bro. John E. Metzger, writing from Edna Mills, Ind., March 7th, says: "I have one subscriber more to send you.—I will also send you some church news. I live in what is called the Middle Fork church, Clinton county, Ind. We had a series of meetings the latter part of October and the first part of November.—Brethren Daniel Neher, of Ills., and Stephen Bashore, of Mo., and J. Calvert of the northern part of this State, were with us and preached with power, and there were some twenty-eight baptized, more than have been baptized here for years.—We hope and pray the good work may go on."

Bro. M. Myers of Madison Co., Iowa, in a letter dated March 6th, alludes to the state of health in his neighborhood, and says that the measles with some other diseases were prevailing. He also says, "The largest fall of snow we had this winter fell last week but it is all gone." His letter contains the following:

"I feel to say I am well pleased with the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. It makes its weekly visits containing much that is both interesting and instructing. I was particularly led to reflect and meditate upon the question of brother E. K. Beuchly in No. 8 page 117, in regard to the manner in which Brethren should direct their communications one to another,—that it should be done in Brotherly kindness and Christian forbearance." Cannot we all say amen to this? Then see with what meekness and humility, as if he felt the power and spirit of the most High, deep in the inner man, he goes on to say, "Such are my feelings, and with the assisting grace of God shall try and do so. God grant that the same spirit may be manifested by all our brethren. All speaking the same thing and being of one mind, that the God of Peace and consolation may be with us in all our deliberations and consultations for the good of one another, for the good of the church, for the good of those who are inquiring the way of the Lord more perfectly, and for the good of the many millions who have never heard the truth in that primitive simplicity which characterized it when delivered by our Lord, and confirmed unto us by them that heard him. 'Who when she was reviled, reviled not again.' So may we manifest the same humble spirit of our Redeemer, and though we may be evilly spoken of falsely, let us bear it patiently, that we 'may be the children of our Father in heaven,' and approbated as 'well done good and faithful servant; enter into the joys of thy Lord.'"

Under this head we acknowledge what is donated to assist in sending the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN to the poor.

The Devil, the Fiery Abyss, and Immortality.

That the devil is a mighty Samson, brother J. C. Peck is ready to acknowledge; but his abode and work and associates perplex him. They need not perplex any body who reads the Bible intelligently.

I am asked to answer three questions having reference to the intermediate state. One would have been sufficient, and one answer covers the whole ground. I am requested to point out "what part of the Bible I get my information from?" I reply, From the whole Bible.

If all the literature on soul-sleeping and annihilation and kindred heresies, were converted into an Ephesian bon-fire, and the memory of them burned out of the soul, and nothing were known but Jesus Christ and him crucified, and nothing studied but the Bible and what legitimately relates thereto, and grows therefrom, such questions would never be asked.

Let us call Jesus Christ and the Apostle Peter to the witness stand. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."

"I AM TORMENTED IN THIS FLAME." This was spoken by one who was out of the body, who had "fared sumptuously every day," and who had still "five brethren in his fathers house," to whom he earnestly entreated that a messenger might be sent to "testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment." Sit down, Jesus: your testimony is to direct and unambiguous to admit of cross-examination.

Simon Peter, what has the Holy Ghost given thee to say in this case?

"God spared not the angels that sinned, BUT CAST THEM DOWN TO HELL, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." A judgment in form yet to come, does not disprove a judgment in fact already past. A reservation unto judgment, and a finality of decision still future, leave the testimony of these two unimpeachable witnesses intact.

"May the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your heart and mind through Jesus Christ." The study and spiritual apprehension of this passage will prove an effectual antidote to the errors involved in your questions.—The peace of God, the conditions of this peace, even to himself; the keeping of the heart and mind through Jesus Christ, constitute a periscope of the entire economy of grace, leaving no room for the fatal misconceptions which possess the popular mind, and which are infecting the church to an alarming degree. May this divine keeping of heart and mind be ours.

Plumcreek Normal School.

Brethren Editors:

Please say in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN for us that we desire the attention of your readers to the fact that we are endowing this school. (See No. 3, PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.)

The season of quiet has been improved. We feel encouraged. We see success crowning our labors. Let each one who desires a school established among us, send in postal card or letter, as we wish to know all the friends of education.—Should any feel they could not now subscribe, still write us. The church membership is liberal—it has its millions, and we ask for only $25,000 to endow. Shall it not be subscribed speedily? It should. A good brother writes to us: "Can you carry out the 'appeal' in school?" Yes, we believe we can; for it is very reasonable. The holders of scholarships need not fear that they will be imposed upon, for they have one year to pay if they desire, and then pay only as per the articles of the "Appeal."

The school ought to go on under the endowment next term. And should the work go on a short time as well as it has, it will be completed.

Brethren, let us finish this work as soon as we can, as there is more work to do in the good cause. For other particulars ask agents, or write to

A Letter.

The following letter was written to me shortly before I joined the church of the Brethren, by a brother in the flesh. I wrote to him concerning the death of an old sister, and quoted part of the beautiful poem,

"Death is a melancholy call," etc.

In reply he wrote the following letter to me, and as it prompted me to an action of duty, believing it might do the same in the case of others that are standing in the same way that I was, I send it for publication.

DAVID D. SELL.

Dear Brother David:

I received your letter and read it with care. You quoted a few lines from that beautiful poem,

"Death is a melancholy call—
A solemn warning to us all."

And now I wish to say a few words in reference to this.

In a former letter you said that you were almost persuaded to become a Christian. Paul's words, "I know that thou believest," will apply to you. Then, as you are illuminated with that light which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world"—made sensible of your condition, why tarry? why delay? why stand in jeopardy every hour? It is very evident that God's spirit is moving upon your heart, inviting you to be good, just so that you may be everlastingly happy. There also is a danger of growing old in sin, and hardened by our crimes. Watts says: "When divine revelation shines and blazes in the face of men with glorious evidence, and they wink their eyes against it, the god of this world is suffered to blind them even in the most obvious, common, and sensible things. The great God of heaven, for this cause, sends them strong delusions that they should believe a lie. 2 Thess. ii. 10, 11." Probably you may think you cannot hold out. Ask yourself how long you will be able to hold out in your present situation. Do you fear the yoke that you must take upon you? It is not a galling yoke, if we take it right on us. The Savior said, "It is easy," he has gone through every class of our wilderness school. He will fit the yoke to the shoulder, and the shoulder to the yoke. He will temper the winds to the shorn lamb. Death truly is "a solemn warning to us all." But did you ever consider now far it reaches. You know when death is in the neighborhood executing his mission, we feel very solemn. We cannot avoid the feeling even when we look upon the lifeless form of an enemy, much more when it is a friend. Every ungrateful or unkind act or word to them will come thronging back to the memory in the shape of a warning to be more affectionate in the discharge of our duties to the living. A still more solemn warning is that it teaches us that we, too, must die. Scripture teaches that it is appointed unto all men once to die and after that the judgment. So, the solemn warning is the judgment, that great day at the end of the world and of time, when Christ shall sit as judge over all the universe, and when every individual of the human race will be judged and recompensed according to his works, whether they be good or evil. The time of its coming and duration are known only to God. It will break upon the world suddenly, and with a glorious and awful majesty. It will witness a perfect vindication of all the ways of God. The revelation of his justice, appalling but unstained, will fill the universe with approving wonder; but the revelation of his yet more amazing goodness will crown him with unutterable glory. The redeemed especially will then receive his reward, and he be glorified in his saints, who shall be raised from the dead in his likeness. He will divide all mankind into two classes; all the righteous will be in one, and all the wicked in the other. All that patiently believed in Christ while they lived, in the one, and all that died impatient and unbelieving, in the other. And this judgment and separation will be eternal.

Thus death around us brings vividly to our minds that we, too, must die; and as we know not when, it is a solemn warning to us all. Again what is a warning worth unless we improve it. It will do us but little good when the pale messenger brings the summons to us that we must depart, and we struggle in the agony unprepared, and remember that we were often warned; it will only aggravate our case. On the other hand, if we heed the warning and prepare for the issue,

"In the Valley of Death we can triumphantly cry,

If this be called dying 't is pleasant to die!"

The Christian's death-bed is like the deep, calm repose of a summer evening's sky when all nature is hushed to rest; the departing soul, like the vanishing sun, peacefully disappearing only to shine in another and brighter hemisphere.

Leave not the making of your peace with God to a dying hour. It will be a hard thing to smooth the death pillow if peace be left unsought till then.

Reflections on my "Treatise on Trine Immersion."

Since the above "Treatise" has been printed, and having read it very carefully, I have come to the conclusion that some might not get the ideas intended to be conveyed. In consequence of printing being very expensive, I was compelled to write briefly—perhaps too briefly—but the substance is there. The intelligent reader will receive the ideas,

The first point I want to notice is, the Preface. I have there stated the object to be to prove from the New Testament Scriptures and the established rules and principles of the English language that baptism by trine immersion is the only valid baptism, or Christian baptism.—This is true. It is the object of the "Treatise" within itself. But there is one chief object that has given rise to the publication of this tract, which is merely hinted at in this preface. It is this: The abuse of the Holy Scriptures, also of those rules and principles of language, which so called ministers of the gospel make use of in trying to prove out their unscriptural and unwarranted notions, which they call "Doctrines of the Bible," pretending to be honest. Transforming themselves into "angels of light," they induce their hearers to receive their perversions as the unadulterated Word. Therefore, the object is to dispossess those ministers of their elaborate and nice illustrations and expositions—to show them that they have no right to them—according to consistency.

Here is where the world is now drifting—too much of what "our preacher" says is gospel. Nearly all the ministers of the popular denominations are educated, or, are somewhat under the influence of education. This fact is known to their charges of course. They are looked up to as being almost God. Whatever the preacher says is gospel. Whatever construction he puts on the Scriptures must be consistent, because, they say, "Our preacher is an educated man—he knows what he is talking about, although I did not understand his constructions which he put on those passages to-day; but he understands them. He is right. I will pin myself to him. He will be my 'Moses' or my 'Christ.' I shall be safe."

O, what perversions of the word of God do we behold at the present day! Is there no remedy for it? It seems there is none. All that we can say is: "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheeps' clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes from thorns or figs from thistles? Matt. vi. 15, 16. For thorns to bring forth grapes or thistles to bring forth figs, would be a perversion of nature. So it is with the false prophets. "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," regardless of the outward appearance. No minister need say that the Scriptures are of such great antiquity that they have become obsolete. Neither need they say that King James' or Luther's translation is so imperfect that there must be some other system of rules and principles, besides those now in use, by which to ascertain the meaning of the Scriptures. It is not the case. We therefore wish to hold them to those rules and principles which those very ministers are using in their common conversation. What a grand inconsistency they have to labor under! making use of those rules and principles in common conversation which the best speakers and writers make use of and acknowledge, but no sooner do they come to the Bible than they must have, what? not a system, neither a regular set of rules and principles, but a promiscuous mass of anything and everything that will clog the mind of the earnest truth-seeker, stop the ears of him who is longing to hear the oracles of God, and blindfold his eyes, to get him into a condition that he is able to discern truth from falsehood.

Secondly: Knowing that my pamphlet might fall into the hands of some who do not understand those rules and principles, I have tried to make it complete within itself, defining nearly all those terms which I thought some might not understand. If any can—and no doubt some can—point out where improvements could be made, I would like to have some private correspondence with them.

A Letter from Kentucky.

BREMEN, Kentucky, }
March 4, Y876. }

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—

I promised to let you hear from us through the Pilgrim and PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I will again comply with my promise. I have not written as often as I wished. But the duties of missionary work, preaching almost every night and day, trying to instruct from house to house, leaves but little time to write for our papers.

We left Henderson county on the 25th of January. By railroad and wagon I arrived near Bremen that evening about dark. Next evening commenced meeting, continued every night and Sunday, except a few nights that were too rainy, up to the 23rd of February. I preached at different points and places as openings presented themselves. Since the 23rd I have not been able to do much preaching, as I have taken a severe cold, which has settled on my lungs. I more than ever see and feel the importance of two ministering brethren traveling together and helping to do the work. There was once a church here, but their candlestick has been removed, and it seems hard to light the ashes when once the candle is burned out. We can count fourteen of the old members yet living. Some have gone to one church, some to another, and some have become so cold and dead that they don't care and have become a dead weight on the wheels. So it becomes necessary to dismiss twelve from the obligations they were under to the brotherhood. I believe that good can be done here and a church started; but we cannot build a substantial house out of decayed material, yet if the brethren could have ministers here good could be done, judging from the interest that seems to be manifesting itself. Many are reading and searching to see whether these things are so. Two were baptized on Sunday, the 20th of February. There may be more yet, but we expect to leave soon and go farther south.

It may be of some interest to the general brotherhood to know why the church ran down so. From what information I can gather there were several causes combined. First, in the first settling of this country they took but little interest in education; many did not even learn to read. In the next place, they allowed the young members to follow the fashions, so when the old members were gone the order was gone. Pride came in and the true spirit of the Lord went out. Right there they switched off and took the broad road and down they went, "spewed out," twice dead, plucked up by the roots.

Brethren and sisters, beware, lest by following the same course we shipwreck. The same rocks are not far ahead of many of our little barks, and some are pleading, "O let the young do as they please." Brethren, if you let the devil have the young, sure he will soon have the flock. "Feed my lambs." Let us do all what we can to guard them from the snares of the wicked one. Inch by inch is he gaining on us, and yet we slumber at our post.—Remember Jesus said, "What I say unto one, I say unto all, watch." More when convenient. Our love to all.

JAMES R. GISH.

Delegates to the Annual Meeting.

As our last Annual Meeting has decided that it is the duty of the delegates representing the different districts of the brotherhood in our Annual Councils to represent the sentiments of their districts, if I understand this decision, it defines the duty of a delegate in disposing of all questions and business that may come before the Annual Meeting, either from his own district, or from any other district in the brotherhood.

And if this view of the matter is correct, then I conclude that the desire of brethren was and is, that the mind or sentiment of the general brotherhood be represented, as far as possible, in our General Council.

Now, it is not likely that the delegates generally will be able to represent the sentiment of their districts upon every subject or matter that comes before the Annual Meeting, as there will be questions to be decided, upon which many of the districts have never expressed an opinion or sentiment, and therefore the sentiment cannot be represented. Now, then, if it is the duty of the delegate to represent the sentiment of his district, is it not also the duty of the district to give its sentiment? And upon the subject of representation, we would naturally conclude that it is the duty of the home delegates, who represent the different churches at district meetings, to represent the sentiment of the church from which they were sent; but unless the church expresses a sentiment, the delegate will be unprepared to represent its sentiment.

Now, we do not expect the churches generally to take such steps that their delegates could represent their sentiment upon every subject that comes up. But I do think that when it is generally known that a question is to come up before the District or Annual Meeting, the several churches and districts should consider the matter, and instruct their delegates accordingly. For instance, the reporting question was before the Annual Meeting last year, but for want of unanimity it was deferred till next Annual Meeting. Now, would it not be well for the churches all to take this matter into consideration, as well as all other matters that we know will come before the Annual Meeting. I do not mean that the churches should vote upon these things, but simply talk or consult about them, and then the delegate can represent the sentiment, whatever it may be. Thus the general sentiment of the brotherhood would be represented both in District and Annual Meeting. And I have thought in this way we might expedite business, and, perhaps, get along with more unanimity.

I submit these thoughts to the brethren.

ren and sisters, and if I have taken a wrong view of this matter, then I hope to be corrected, as I have tried to write for the good of us all, for the strengthening of the walls of Zion, that we might labor together in the good cause, being knit in the strongest ties of gospel love and affection. PAREWELL.

DANIEL B. ARNOLD.

Burlington, W. Va.

BONSACKS, Va., March 15, 1876.

Brother James:

We have been enjoying a pleasant and we think a mutually profitable season among our very dear brethren and sisters and kind old friends in this part of Virginia.

We do not know exactly yet what time we will leave for the West, but if home affairs and the interests of our little church at home suit, we may stay East until the A. M.

A recent letter from our much beloved brother and pastor, Christian Harader, informed me that nine additions have recently been made to our little number by baptism, four in our neighborhood, and five some 18 or 20 miles away. A letter some time back from brother J. T. Mason, one of our deacons, informed me of one baptism, so that the little flock at Nesho has grown from about 17 to 22 since we left home, while a number have been added to the other arm. So you see that the cause there moves not so much by the force of my humble efforts, but that the truth once well planted will produce fruit.

Affectionately,

J. W. STEIN.

In Response.

Brother C. H. Balsbaugh:

In PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, page 164, you say, "When saints like Moses Miller, John G. Glock, William Hartzler, George and Cyrus Bucher, and other Peters of the church," etc. Had this come in an unguarded hour, it would no doubt have made me feel proud to be thus praised side by side with the dear brethren who have spent the greater part of a lifetime for the cause of Jesus, while I am just over the threshold; but as I had just recovered from a blow (received on account of my writings) which knocked me quite under the bench, it seemed to me I look rather awkward when brother Balsbaugh comes along and lifts me on the table. I doubt whether using personalities is safe. God judges us, and though one calls me saint and another sinner, I am still what I am, in his sight. I therefore only ask for the present, if worthy, to be called Terrible Railroad Disaster.

Brother Quinter:

Below we give you a brief notice of a disaster which occurred recently in our midst. On Monday night of the 6th inst. and mixed train, consisting of twenty freight cars heavily loaded with stock a produce, and two passenger cars, containing a number of passengers, while passing over the Valley Branch of the B. & O. R. R., broke through the bridge at Narrow Passage, precipitating the whole train in a chasm over one hundred feet deep. Eleven persons were instantly killed, seven severely wounded. The passengers were mostly asleep when the disaster occurred. The freight cars were mostly loaded with cattle, sheep, and hogs, which were nearly all killed or crippled. The whole wreck settled in a body, composed of dead and dying men and beasts. The cars were broken to atoms. The whole wreck piled up to a height of about thirty feet. The scene was witnessed by a gentleman standing near by.

How rending must have been the scene, how terrible the disaster! How important it is to heed the injunction of Christ "watch and pray."

Yours fraternally

S. F. SANGER

Bridgewater, Va., March 1st.

Editor Primitive Christian:

Please allow a word of explanation. In No. 11 there is a letter from our old brother Geo. Keever of White Co., Ind., in which occurs an expression not quite right. The brother after stating that he lives among the New Dunkards says, "They, (the New Dunkards) have their communion meetings on the second Sabbath of February. Bro. McClure will be with us on that day and preach for them at 11 A. M." The expression "preach for them," is what I take exception to. I have no idea at all that brother Keever meant what he really says, but others may be led to think there was an affiliation between these New Dunkards and myself, and it is to prevent such an impression, that I write. The real truth is I had no personal knowledge, and but little oral knowledge, of this sect prior to my visit to White Co., which occurred in answer to an invitation from the Brethren of the Monticello District. When I arrived at that place the Brethren put me in the New Dunkard meeting-house in Idaville on Wednesday evening and left me there day and evening until Saturday forenoon, when in consequence of the New Dunkard communion I was moved to Burnettsville. In regard to the kind of doctrine I preached while there, the Brethren at that place may tell all who want to know. I will only say that, upon personal acquaintance with the sect referred to, I was not persuaded to apostatize in their favor, although I formed acquaintance with several of their members, who inspired me with a considerable degree of respect and interest.

Now, while I am writing, I desire to call the attention of the Brethren to an editorial that appears in the Feb. number of the Vindicator. In that editorial it is asserted that the practice of a number of the different Districts of Church, in having the supper on the table at the time of feet washing is "unauthorized by the gospel of the A. M." The editor of the Vindicator does not vouchsafe a single passage of Scripture in support of the negative of this question; but makes this sweeping assertion entirely upon the strength of what he calls the "old order." He also says that this "innovation" upon the "old order" was carried by some brethren, from Pennsylvania over into Virginia.

Now, if my information is correct, it was brother D. P. Saylor who "carried" this "innovation" into Boetourt Co., Va., and I may be pardoned for being a little slow to believe that Bro. Saylor, or such as he, would "carry" doctrines entirely unauthorized by Scripture into any arm of the church. How is it brethren?

Fraternally,

MARTIN J. McCLURE.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Departed this life in the Norristown church, Montgomery county, Pa., Jan. 30th, 1876, of consumption, our beloved sister, ELIZABETH PRICE. She suffered intensely, but without a murmur. She was resigned to the will of her heavenly Father, and we believe our loss is her eternal gain. She was conveyed to the Green Tree burying-ground. The occasion was improved by brethren John Gotwals and Jacob Gotwals, from 2 Cor. v. 1; also from Rev. xiv. 13.

(Pilgrim please copy.)

Also in the same church, Feb. 13th, sister RACHEL DAY, in the 76th year of her age. Disease, cancer of the breast, which she bore with Christian resignation. She was truly a mother in Israel, and loved by all who knew her. She was a very consistent member of the church of Brethren for 40 years. We are assured that our loss is her eternal gain. The funeral occasion was improved by brother John Gotwals from Job. xiv. 14 (later clause).

WM. N. CLEMMER.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

At Bard, Bedford county, Pa., March 3, 1876, Mrs. ANNA ELDER, daughter of brother Andrew and sister Hannah Miller, deceased, aged about 34 years. Disease, consumption.

She was left an orphan when a young girl; afterward she married James Elder of this county, and moved to northern Illinois, where she lived some time and then buried her kind husband and one of her children. Two years ago she came East with her two little girls, and was here only several months when her only sister here died. Last summer her youngest little daughter was suddenly taken from her.—She leaves one little girl without father or mother, brother or sister. However, she is well cared for. Truly, she has drunk of the cup of sorrow. With all this affliction it seems strange that she did not long ago seek for comfort and consolation in Christ, who is our refuge in every trial. During the last conversation I had with her, which was last summer, I learned that she had a desire to unite with our church. She had then just returned from her sister's, near Berlin, where she had attended the lovefeast and the Brethren's meeting regularly, and told me she enjoyed herself so much. Having a weak mind, and easily influenced by surrounding circumstances, she put this matter off, thinking that her end was not so near, like all persons with this disease. She spoke of being baptized, to a minister who visited her, but was told to wait till spring; that she was too weak to go into the cold water now. However, she seemed willing to die, and her spirit has gone to him who gave it, and who doeth all things well. Funeral preached by Michael Miller, of the Christian church, from the words, "And the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. When she was placed in the grave by the side of her little daughter, her parents at the other side, and next to them my father and a little brother, and farther on a long row of friends, I wondered who next would be placed in the row.

E. A. MILLER.

Near Nevada, Vernon county, Mo., on the 2nd of March, 1876, of pluro pneumonia, sister LYDIA COLYER, consort of brother Jonathan Cleyer (deceased), and daughter of brother David and Elizabeth Miller, who lived and died near Goshen, Elkhart county, Ind., aged 57 years, 6 months and 20 days. She has left a sorrowing husband and seven grown and married children to mourn their loss, though not without a living hope. Sister Lydia was one of our most consistent members and mothers in Israel. Her walk and conversation truly adorned her profession in Christ Jesus, and spoke louder than words can. She was loved by all who knew her, and we truly feel that we have sufficient cause to believe that our loss will be her eternal gain. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. xxii. 14, selected by the bereaved husband. J. D. YODER.

In Frederick county, Md., Feb. 17th, 1876, ELIZABETH FROUZ, aged 64 years, 9 months and 7 days.

Feb. 27th, 1876, near Bristol, Elkhart Co., Ind., LAURA MAY, daughter of friends John and Sarah Cleppinger, aged 8 years and 8 days. Disease, dropsy. Funeral services by brother Gabriel Frame, from St. John xi. 25.

Also, in Elkhart congregation, Ind., March 8th, 1876, JENNIE, infant daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Miller, aged 18 months, less one day. Funeral services by Elder John Kniesly, from Matt. xviii. 5.

J. C. LEHMAN.

In New Enterprise, Pa., March 9th, of consumption, JOHN S. BEAR, aged 69 years and 22 days. He was a member of the Seventh Day Baptist church, and the husband of sister Polly Bear. Funeral services by D. C. Long and Jacob Miller. Text, Isaiah xxxviii 1-4, to a large congregation. NOAH B. BLOUGH.

In the Beazer congregation, Elkhart county, Ind., April 4th, 1875, sister CLEMENTINE CRULL, aged 54 years, 11 months and 16 days. She was not able to walk for some years. She endured much suffering, but she bore it all patiently, and often expressed a desire to depart and be at rest. Funeral services by Elder C. Winger. M. FRAME.

A Few Words to Feeble and Delicate Women.

By R. V. PIERCE, M. D., of the World's Dispensary, Buffalo, N. Y., Author of 'The People's Common-Sense Medical Adviser,' etc., etc.

Knowing that you are subject to a great amount of suffering, that delicacy on your part has a strong tendency to prolong it, and the longer it is neglected the more you have to endure and the more difficult of cure your case becomes, I, as a physician, who am daily consulted by scores of your sex, desire to say to you, that I am constantly meeting with those who have been treated for their ailments for months without being benefited in the least, until they have become perfectly discouraged and have almost made up their mind never to take another dose of medicine, or be tortured by any further treatment. They had rather die and have their sufferings ended, than to live and suffer as they have. They say they are worn out by suffering, and are only made worse by treatment. Of anything more discouraging we certainly cannot conceive, and were there no more successful mode of treating such difficulties than that, the principles of which teach the reducing and depleting of the vital forces of the system, when the indications dictate a treatment directly the reverse of the one adopted for them, their case would be deplorable indeed. But, lady sufferers, there is a better and far more successful plan of treatment for you; one more in harmony with the laws and requirements of your system. A harsh, irritating, caustic treatment and strong medicines will never cure you. If you would use rational means, such as common sense should dictate to every intelligent lady, take such medicines as embody the very best invigorating tonics and nervines, compounded with special reference to your delicate system. Such a happy combination you will find in my Favorite Prescription, which has received the highest praise from thousands of your sex. Those languid, tiresome sensations, causing you to be scarcely able to be on your feet or ascend a flight of stairs; that continual drain that is sapping from your system all your former elasticity, and driving the bloom from your cheeks; that continual strain upon your vital forces that renders you irritable and fretful,—may all be overcome and subdued by a persevering use of that marvelous remedy. Irregularities and obstructions to the proper working of your system are relieved by this mild and safe means, while periodical pains, the existence of which is a sure indication of the existence of serious disease which should not be neglected, readily yield to it, and if its use be kept up for a reasonable length of time, the special cause of these pains is permanently removed.—Further light on these subjects may be obtained from 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser,' in which I have devoted a large space to the consideration of all forms of diseases peculiar to your sex. This work will be sent (postpaid) to any address on receipt of $1.50. My Favorite Prescription is sold by druggists.

Dear Friend:—I notice your "ad." in the Pilgrim where you offer a clock to any one who will establish an agent for the sale of your medicine in a place where there is none. Now you have none here, and I think I can establish one, and not only establish an agency, but recommend and sell a great deal of it myself in my practice. Knowing the merits of it, I can recommend it freely.

Now if you think it best you can inform me of your terms of agency, &c., and I will see what can be done. We have two Drug Stores in town and a number others—Dry Goods, and Groceries, &c. Hoping to hear from you I remain,

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord. As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

AT LAST
I CAN OFFER
SOMETHING
TO MY
NUMEROUS FRIENDS!

The Waterbury eight-day Clock, over two feet high, is warranted for three years, retails at from $8 to $8. Any dealer in clocks will recommend it as standard goods. I buy these from the Factory, in Connecticut, at inside prices. They are warranted to me, and I can warrant them to others. I will give you the names of the best parlor Clocks to any one who will be the means of establishing an agency for me in any locality where the Fabrency Medicine is yet unknown. I often, very often, receive letters asking why I do not establish an agency in every post-office district. Moreover, the way and whereabouts of this would require me to dilate on the inside workings of such a business. Perhaps if I were to hire, at a big salary, a big good gentleman to go into the different States of the great Northwest, I might be able to comply with the request of my friends, but even then, when you look on the map, you can see what a stupendous work it is to establish an agency in every post-office district. Moreover, the best medicine—like the best religion—is not always the most popular. Hence the difficulty of introducing Fabrency's Peppermint Cure without the cooperation of those who know and have known its great merits for more than half a century. Indeed I cannot but desire to express my thanks to those who have volunteered their services free of any charge, in the past, and were the means of introducing this Blood Cleanser where it might to this day be known only for their influence. Many of them claim they have been rewarded by witnessing the results following the use of the Fabrency Medicines. But there are all others who might speak to their store-keeper or grocer (not druggist), with whom they have more influence than all the advertising matter I could send to such business men. To each I offer this Clock, provided the order is sent during the month of March, for an agent who begins in February or March will sell more during a year than has a dozen who begin in July or August. Any one can take an agency who means business, and get a clock. At any rate, send your name and address, for full particulars. Do not be uncharitable, and say "it is all for speculation," for my most intimate friends and acquaintances will not say so, and who has had a dozen of this offer is made in good faith, and I trust it will be so received.

MOTHER.

When she undid her hair at night,
About the time of lying down,
She came and knelt; I was so small
There in my bed, her curls did fall
All over me, bright golden brown.
I fell asleep amid her prayers,
Her fair young face (far off it seems),
Her girlish voice, her kisses sweet,
The patter of her busy feet
Possed with me into charming dreams.
And when I woke at merry morn,
Through her gold hair I saw the sun
Flame strong, shine glad, and glorify
The great, good world. Oh ne'er can I Forget the words, "My darling one!"
Ah! checkered years since then have crept
Past her sad me, and we have known
Some sorrow and much tempered joy;
Far into manhood stands her boy,
And her hair snow white is grown.
The world has changed by slow degrees;
And as old days recede, alas!
So much of trouble have the new.
Those rare, far joys grow dim seen through
Sad times as through a darkened glass.
But just this morning when I woke
How lovingly my lips were kissed!
How chaste and clear the sunlight shone
On mother's hair, like gold-dust thrown Athwart thin clouds of silver mist!

Seeing with the Eyes Shut.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Quite recently I was reading of a little girl, who, speaking of the imagination, said, "I can see anything I want to see, when I shut my eyes and think." I was most forcibly struck with the quaint remark. I read it and reread it, and then fell to musing over the reality of the remark.

How many people these days, like the little girl, shut their eyes, go to thinking, and see anything they want to see; that is, anything to suit their fancy or imagination. Take the religious world, for instance, and this seeing with the eyes shut, is the key that unlocks the mystery of so many different spirits. Let anyone shut his eyes to the truths of the gospel, and by his imagination picture out a way to heaven "on flowery beds of ease," and how readily they see it is all right—just to their suiting. The idea of shutting the eyes so as to see anything desirable is, that the light of day may not hinder the eye of the mind from seeing the things we want to see. So it is in spiritual matters; if the adversary can get us to turn from the illuminating rays of the gospel, that they shine not into the mind, it is an easy matter to see salvation in diversified pictures as held up by the creeds of men.

With our natural eyes open, we can only see the realities of nature in the universe; but the moment we shut our eyes and think,—let imagination have free scope, we are off in fairy lands, beholding the ever changing and livid beauties painted by the pen of imagery. By the power of the will, glorious worlds seem to roll before us, and we people them with creatures of our imagination. In our wakeful dreams, we become lost to all the real objects around us; we seem to be walking through the pleasant bowers of other spheres; mingling with the busy throng; drinking at the sparkling fountains that gush from the cool and shady glees. The more and more we think, the more we seem to be carried higher and higher, to glorified realms of ethereal bliss. But alas! when we open our eyes, those pictures vanish, and we are conscious of the fact; all is vanity, and our lot is in a world of toil and trouble, sin and sorrow. Thus the mind that turns from the realities of God's written word, is carried by the imagination of the heart—which is wicked to the religious fancies, most congenial to the carnal mind, or proud heart, and soon visionary scenes flit across the pathway, the soul becomes entranced, and seems to live in a new world.

The cross of Christ is ignored, the commands of God trampled under foot, and in the hasty flight to reach the banqueting halls of peace and pleasure, the ordinances of the church are thrown over, and Christ crucified is driven out of the temple, and the place He should reign and rule in, is turned into a den of thieves, that Moloch may be crowned king of kings, and Mammon worshipped as God. Loud anthems are sung in honor to heart felt experience. Erroneous convictions rivet the heart to its idols. The glories of the imagination outshine the lamp of life burning in the "narrow way;" the sun of righteousness is eclipsed by the veil self conceit, and thus the soul is lulled to sleep and dreams of heaven, while the heart is a slave to lust and the world. But alas! the day cometh when the sober, solemn truths of God's word will loom up before the mind, and the thunders of Mount Sinai penetrate through the soul that has long been at ease upon its dreary bed.

Awake, thou that sleepest! and hear the voice of the Son of God! hear now the voice of real truth—truth unmasked, untrammelled by the fancies of science or imagination. Heed no longer the visions of thought, or the things you see with eyes closed. Open wide your eyes and heart, that light and joy may fill the soul to the brim. Blessed is the soul that trusts and looks to the realities of Jesus crucified, and as he is held up to views in the gospel, and is willing to be led by that light that is the light of the world.

There are those who have once made a good profession of faith, but owing to the fascinating influences of the world, seem to have gotten sleepy, and with half closed eyes try to serve God and the world at the same time. While listening to the syren song of the mockingbird—the voice that mocketh at God's truths—they see things just as they want to see them. With eyes closed to the good and consistent principles of the church, they see by the force of imagination all manner of faults. The enchanting lull a-by of self hath put them to sleep in the cradle of carnal security, and they scorn to walk the narrow way or conform to the adapting principles of the gospel. They would rather stir up strife than make concessions favorable to peace, or a harmonious union in the body.

How natural and common for those who have been overtaken in a fault, to close their eyes to their own faults, and see great faults in others, just as they want to see them, in order that they may justify themselves. With closed eyes, self-justification can picture out in glowing colors, wonderful things, so that the result often is a falling away from the love of God; they become cast-aways, and with eyes closed to the horrors of apostasy, plunge headlong into the surging stream of popular religion, or world worship. Or perchance, like the swine returning to her wallowing in the mire, they feast at the table of sin and iniquity, with a relish that puts to shame incarnate fiends. Where else can be found such abominations, as the manifestations of those who once were so very precise and professedly scrupulous while members of the church, now that they have, like dead branches, been cut off from the body, at once lock arms with the world and dance to the music of devils? Truly, the pent up flood of hypocrisy, when it finds vent, comes with terrible rottenness.

In contemplating the dangers of passing through this life with eyes closed, to the beauties of redeeming love—of following the illusions of the imagination, science or self-will, oh! let us be aroused, and with steadfast view, look to the sun of righteousness and the heavenly constellations of God's moral universe. A thousand times better shut our eyes to the wisdom and vanity of the world, than to the blessed truths of the Bible. Better become "fools!" and be saved in Eternity, than to be wise in the world, and at last go down to Hell.

***
For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Christ's Heroes.

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God; and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name." Rev. iii. 12.

Our text is a part of the address to the church at Philadelphia.

"Him that overcometh," or has come off victorious. Victory implies previous conflict. The moment we become Christians, that moment we become soldiers. As soon as we enlist under the banner of Jesus Christ, and the heart becomes the seat of his grace and his Spirit, that moment we have arrayed against us all the powers of earth and hell. The Prince of darkness has vowed eternal enmity to Christ, and to the glorious principles that govern his kingdom. He therefore ever has, and ever will wage an unrelenting warfare against him, and against all those who join his standard. Christ could crush this arch foe at once, with his omnipotent power, but he chooses not to do this. He wills that every one who would share his glory, shall first share his contests with the power of evil. He wills that each saint shall be victor, that we shall come up through great tribulation.

Our glorious Leader has made ample provisions for this war, his arsenal is well stored with all the armor that the Christian warrior needs, and in view of the terrible conflict that awaits him, he is exhorted to take unto him the whole armor of God, that he may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. That he may be strengthened, and prepared for the awful onset of the foe, he is advised to gird his loins with the girdle of truth, place over his heart the breastplate of righteousness, have his feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, his head incased in the helmet of salvation, and the broad shield of faith spread out before him, and having for his offensive weapon the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. Thus equipped, and protected by the armor of God he need not fear the furious charges of the embattled hosts of hell. No arrow from the enemy's quiver can pierce his shield of faith, and no power can bear him down if he is strengthened with the girdle of truth.

If only all who enlist in this service would strengthen themselves with the girdle of truth, there would be fewer deserters, and fewer wounded and taken captive by the enemy. Alas! so many have such a mixture of truth and error in their creed that it produces in them a vacillating state of mind. They are wholly void of firmness. They hold the shield of faith with a trembling nervous hand, and when the enemy charges down upon them, they have no strength to stand before the furious onset, and either forsake their colors, or are trampled beneath the iron hoofs of their assailants, and are then led captive by Satan at his will. A successful soldier must not be effeminate he must brave dangers, and inure himself to hardships. The life of a soldier in active service is a life of exposure, deprivation and great physical exertion. He must make rapid marches over rough and miry roads, he must ford swollen streams, and when he seeks a few hours repose he can only wrap himself in his cloak and throw himself upon the cold damp ground. He can only stay the cravings of hunger with a dry crust from his knapsack. He must be constantly on the alert, ever ready to meet the enemy at any place, or under any circumstances. These qualities of courage and patient endurance are not less necessary to the Christian hero. Therefore Paul exhorts his son Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, for says he, "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier." The full and complete consecration of himself to his calling is another important requisite in a good soldier. The apostle says he doth not entangle himself with the affairs of this life. This abstraction is equally necessary in the Christian soldier. Our great Captain has told us that we cannot serve two masters, that if we engage in his service we must do so with all our might, with all the powers that we are in possession of. Implicit confidence in the leader, and obedience to his commands, are also requisites to success. The most successful chieftains have been those who have secured the most confidence in their troops. The wonderful success of Napoleon as a warrior was greatly owing to this fact. His troops reposed the utmost confidence in him. It mattered not where he would lead they would follow, what he would command they would do, or at least make the utmost effort to do. They were frequently ignorant of his designs, but they would follow not knowing or caring where he was leading them. When he fitted out his expedition to Egypt, very few of the forty six thousand men who accompanied him on that expedition had any idea of his whereabouts, but they enthusiastically followed his standard, not caring where they would go if only he would lead them.

The whole responsibility of a campaign falls upon the commander-in-chief. He plans and arranges everything. The under officers and privates have only to obey his orders. If the campaign proves successful, to him the honor accrues; if unsuccessful, he must bear the blame. Sometimes the least failure on the part of an under officer in carrying out some plan of his chief is accompanied with the most disastrous results. The failure on the part of Admiral Brueys in obeying the emphatic orders of Napoleon to remove the ships, immediately after landing the army, from the Bay of Aboukir, into the harbor of Alexandria, resulted in the entire destruction of the French naval force, a disaster which proved fatal to Bonaparte's eastern expedition. The failure on the part of Marshal Ney promptly to execute Napoleon's orders to advance and take possession of Quatre Bras resulted in the sanguinary conflict at Waterloo.

If such complete obedience is important to success in carnal warfare, and the least lack of obedience will frequently result most disastrously, how all important is it, that the commands of our glorious Leader be fully carried out. He has laid out all the plans, and arranged the whole campaign. He sees the end from the beginning. He knows just what combination of means is necessary to produce certain effects. If his plans are fully carried out, if his orders are promptly obeyed, victory must, and will be the result. Not one mistake can he make. He is fully competent for the responsible position which he occupies. But as it is his to plan, and to command, it is ours to carry out those plans, to promptly and fully obey. We might want to regard some of his injunctions as not of such vital importance, or we may at times permit a feeling of despondency, or even of murmuring to arise in our hearts, because of the heavy burdens he lays upon us, or the restrictions he imposes. Could we but see the importance of all these, could we but see the glorious results which they are designed to produce, our despondency would be changed into joy, our murmuring into thanksgiving.

Again what prodigious exploit a soldier will often make if the eye of his commander is upon him. He will brave every danger to gain his approval. But do the soldiers of the cross remember that the eye of their chief is always upon them? To the soldiers of Smyrna, he issued this proclamation. "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich)." Should not this knowledge that we are fighting under the eye of Jesus, nerve us to the utmost exertion? Should it not prompt us to faithfulness? How sweet to hear Jesus saying, "I know thy works." Not one act that we do however humble, but Jesus sees it. He knows every sacrifice that we make for him. Much that we do may escape the notice of the world, but Jesus marks it all. Despondent Christian take courage, thy sphere of action may be circumscribed, but do what you can in your circumstances, and though thy name may never be published abroad, yet Jesus knows thy works, he takes cognizance of thee in thy lowly lot, he saw thee ministering at the bedside of affliction, he witnessed thy vigils at the couch of suffering, he heard thee speak that word of cheer to that oppressed soul, he sees that sweet tear of sympathy which glistened in thine eye, at the recital of every tale of woe. Ah he sees thy modesty, thy humility, and meekness, how like an angel of kindness thou art every where.

But he not only knows our works but our tribulation also. But how does he know our tribulations? He knows it inasmuch as he permits or directly sends it for high, holy, wise, and beneficent purposes. He not only knows our tribulation, but he knows also the necessity of it. In every affliction there is "a need be." Whatever be the affliction, its nature, weight, bitterness, or poignancy, there is a necessity in it, without this particular affliction we could not be made perfect. Every sorrow, every trial, every disappointment, every bereavement, is an essential link in that chain which lifts us from our ruin, and elevates us to that exalted position which it is promised the victor shall occupy. Afflicted saint dost thou realize this? then dry thy tears, cease thy repinings; the least change in thy life programme would result most disastrously to thee. So perfect is the plan of salvation, so wisely is every thing arranged, that it will not admit of the least change. Then afflicted brother and sister, accept of thy lot in life just as it comes to thee, take thy cup and drink its contents no matter how bitter it may be. Christ requires a passive obedience, no less than an active, a full acquiescence in all his dealings with thee. A spirit of murmuring is no less offensive, than actual disobedience.

"And I knew thy poverty." It is perhaps the very climax of human misery, to be both afflicted and poor either one of these calamities would seem to be enough to bear. But Christ in his wisdom sees fit to press every bitter ingredient into the cup of some of his saints. Whatever may be his motive it is comforting to know that He does it, and that He cannot err. It consolet us to know that the hand that smiles is the hand of love, for says he, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten."

My dear brother, it was Christ, thy precious Savior, who overthrew all thy plans which thou didst make to accumulate wealth. It was he, who permitted the besom of destruction to pass over thy property and sweep it all away. It was he who deprived thee of thy property and of thy health. But thou now standest forth as a beautiful monument of his grace. The scattering fires which have passed over thee, have only brought out the divine image, which was engraven on thy soul in more perfect relieve. Christ is peculiarly polishing some stones which he designs to occupy some prominent place in his glorious temple. Hast thou been called to pass through a peculiar painful ordeal? Take this as a particular mark of his favor. A glorious niche awaits thee in that celestial temple.

We will now make a few remarks upon the glorious promises which are contained in our text, and then we will close. Him that overcometh, who nobly triumphs over all the ills, sorrows, afflictions, and temptations of life. "Him will I make a pillar in the temple of my God; and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name." But what is meant by the promise, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God? In the 22 verse of the 21 chapter of the Apocalypse, the Seer of Patmos tells us he saw no temple in heaven, for the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb are the temple of it." How then can this promise be ever realized in the believer's experience? There will be no temple in heaven in the sense of a material temple; all places there will be equally holy; God and the Lamb will be equally present everywhere. When our Lord therefore says, "I will make him a pillar" etc, he means that he will raise him to the greatest honor and dignity. The word pillar both in the Hebrew and Greek languages seems to be the root of a word expressive of great power and dignity. For instance the word Basileus the Greek word for king is derived from basis a foundation or pillar, and laos the people. Pillars were used as supports in a temple or palaces, and they were also used as monuments on which were written inscriptions commemorative of great events or illustrious worth. Now, says our Lord, "I will make the victor a pillar in the temple of my God, he shall be a monument of my grace, he shall have inscribed upon him the means by which he was elevated, so that all who behold him in that glorious state may read in him the grace that selected him, and the glory that crowned him." This new vision of our Savior's love and mercy will call forth a reverberating peal of thanksgiving from the blood-washed throng, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and has made us kings and priests unto God." The echoing sound will touch a sympathetic cord in every redeemed soul, and oh the ever-increasing and ravishing experiences of his grace, what imagination can conceive!

"He shall no more go out." All the pillars and monuments that have been, or that will be erected to commemorate human greatness, or human worth will pass away, will crumble into dust. But those pillars which Christ is polishing and erecting, as monuments of his grace, will never crumble to decay. When millions upon millions of ages shall have passed away, they will only shine more beautifully in the ever unfolding light of God's eternal love. I will write upon him the name of my God. The sculptor engraves his own name upon the beautiful statue which his genius and skill have created. It is thus made to celebrate, not its own praise, but the praise of him who formed and erected it. So Christ shall inscribe upon these monuments of his love the name of the great Triune God, the name of that glorious Being to whom all praise belongs. Then will we know more fully than we now know that this salvation is not of merit, but of grace. Everything there, will celebrate his praise, will magnify his love. The joy of the redeemed will consist in a more expanding view of that transcending love which purchased his redemption. MATTIE A. LEAR.

PATIENCE.

There have been times when I longed to lay
This mask of mortality by;
Times—Lord forgive!—when life seemed so dark,
It would have been sweet to die.

Times when the torturing hand of despair
Lay heavily on my breast;
And the breath of my eager, agonized prayer,
Was for rest—a heavenly rest.

And little dreamed I as that cry went up,
From a soul so weary with strife,
How much it needed the discipline
Of a stern, self-denying life.

I stood mid the foam of the midnight sea,
Like Peter, distracted with fears,
And saw not the beacon that lit the waves,
For my eyes were blinded with tears.

But, struggling in darkness, weary and faint,
"Lord, help me!" I earnestly cried;
He heard, and the meek-eyed angel he sent Thenceforward has walked by my side.

And now though the billows of life are rough,
And crested with crosses and care,
There's light on the waves, and I lean on Him,

Who has given me patience to bear.

Trine Immersion.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother N. C. Workman, of Iowa.

Yours of the 7th inst. has just reached me, and finds me very feeble. I am sorry to say that my sufferings and debility forbid any additional labor, either mental or physical.

Last fall I prepared an article of considerable length on Trine Immersion, which was published in the Companion. By referring to it you may gain the necessary instruction as to the doctrine of the Trinity, and the corresponding trinity of actions in Baptism. Single Immersion is a modal denial of the Trinity of God. In all the writings and discussions of unitarian baptists, the conception of God dwindles down more and more to correspond with the point in controversy. The God of the Bible is a most troublesome Being for single immersionists to deal with. To fit Him into their contracted mold requires better arguments than their ingenuity can devise. It is as easy to measure the Heavens with a yard-stick, or wrap the universe in a blanket, as to represent the Divine Trinity by single immersion. Bread alone, or wine alone, is not a more defective representation of the body and blood of Jesus, than one immersion of the Three Persons in the Godhead. Single immersion is as worthless on the instrumental side of salvation, as one personality would be on the fountal side. "One dip"—as the editor of the Evangel- ist has it—represents no God of which the Gospel makes any mention. If there was neither Father, Son, nor Holy Ghost, but simply God without interior relationship, it would require no less than "one dip" to be baptized in His name. To have a revelation of Tri-Personality without a corresponding multiplication of actions beyond what would be necessary if there were no Trinity, is not the way of God. The idea is absurd, and the importance of the subject makes it fatal.

One Lord, One faith, One "dip," is a very easy argument in support of single action; and no less easy to pervert the oracles of the Holy One. When baptism is spoken of as an ordinance, to substitute "dip" is a "deceitful handling of the word of God." It is every whit as irreverent and Heaven-daring as when one God is spoken of in relation to the work of redemption, to substitute Person for God. To baptize in the name of the Father cannot be done without a dip, or baptism is not baptism. If nothing less than one dip can be baptism in either name, I would like to know how the other two names are to be disposed of so as to meet the requirements of the Divinely-authorized baptismal formula. To fill out the trinity of the commission with one action is as impossible as to write the Three Names with one stroke of the pen. Consistency requires single immersionists to fall back on the socinian heresy and square their doctrine of God with their doctrine of baptism.

Pray and read and study and labor to convert as many as you can from "the error of their ways." Christianity is better than Campbellism.

Bible Wines.

The following article on the subject of Bible Wines was sent for publication by brother Isaac Secrist, Home, Indiana Co., Pa. It is from the pen of E. D. Fitts, and was originally published in the Congregationalist. This question, it will be remembered was discussed at our last A. M., and it is not to be supposed that it is all over; and hence we give room for such articles as throw light upon the subject. The more we think of it, the more importance we attach to the subject, and the more are we convinced that the Scriptures nowhere authorize the use of fermented wine. B.

The question whether our Saviour sanctioned the use of fermented or intoxicating wine, by making it miraculously at the marriage at Cana, and used it at the institution of the supper, is a most vital one to our churches, as affecting their duty in regard to the use of it, and on the right solution of it depends the weal or woe, the salvation or perdition, of many of their members. For it is a fearful fact that there are members of our churches who cannot put the intoxicating cup to their lips, but at their imminent peril.

They have been reclaimed from the misery and degradation of intemperance, through the mercy of God, and gathered into the church, and shall the church to which they have fled for refuge, by carelessly or ignorantly putting again the intoxicating cup to their lips, be the means of their betrayal and ruin? God forbid! yet such cases have not been rare.

I wish to refer to two points, (1) It is clear that the Bible speaks of two kinds of wine, the one a blessing, the other a curse; the one to be received with gratitude and joy (Isa. lxxv : 8; Prov. iii: 10), the other to be shunned as the bite of the serpent and the sting of the adder (Prov. xxiii: 59—35); and (2) that our Saviour did not violate these solemn prohibitions of his own word at the marriage at Cana; and that at the institution of the supper he could not use fermented wine, as everything fermented was put away from their houses at the feast of the passover.

I. I will cite a few of the great mass of authorities which go to show that unfermented wine was a common and nutritious beverage in Bible times and Bible lands, and that its preparation and use continues to the present day! and as peculiarly pertinent to this first point of inquiry, they show that this unfermented wine was universally esteemed the best.

Rev. B. Parsons says: "I have unfermented wine in my possession which is now sixteen months old, which I have made according to the receipt of Collumella—a receipt written about the time that our Lord lived in Judea." (Anti-Bacchus, p. 82).

Genesius says: "That the honey sent by Jacob to Joseph (Gen. xliii: 11) was wine boiled down to the consistency of syrup." If this were so, it must have been boiled before fermentation, as it is impossible to thicken fermented wine by boiling.

Dr. Smith (Bib. Dic., art. Wine) says: "It may at once be conceded, that the Hebrew terms translated wine, refer occasionally to an unfermented liquor."

Dr. Adam Clark says: "The Hebrew, Greek and Latin words which are rendered wine, mean simply the expressed juice of the grape."

Prof. Stuart says: "Facts show that the ancients not only preserved wine unfermented, but regarded it as of higher flavor, and finer quality, than fermented wine."

Pres. Nott says: "That un-intoxicating wines existed from remote antiquity, and were held in high estimation by the wise and good, there can be no reasonable doubt. The evidence is unequivocal and plenary." (Bib. Tem., p. 50).

Polybius, Pliny, Aristotle, Plutarch, Cato, and other ancient writers, give similar testimony. Calmet says:

"The ancients had the secret of preserving wine sweet throughout the year."

Dr. Eli Smith (Bib. Sac., Vol. 3, p. 234) says: "The juice of the grape is boiled down before fermentation."

Smith's Bib. Dic., article on Wine, says: "A certain amount of juice exuded from the ripe fruit, from its own pressure, before the treading commenced. This appears to have been kept separate from the rest of the juice, and to have formed the gleukos, or sweet wine noticed in Acts ii: 13." . . . . "Sometimes it was preserved in its unfermented state, and drank as must."

Bagster (Com. Bible) remarks on Gen. xi: 11: "From this we find that wine anciently was the mere expressed juice of the grape without fermentation."

Bishop Lowth (Notes on Isa., chap. v.) remarks: "Wine from the vine, means a wine similar to that drunk by Pharaoh, and was unfermented, for it was only the fresh juice pressed from the grape, and was called vinos ampelinos."

Rev. Henry Homes, Missionary to Constantinople (Bib. Sac., May, 48), describes the process of boiling the fresh grape juice to preserve it, and adds: "It ordinarily has not a particle of intoxicating quality, being used freely by both Mohammedans and Christians."

Capt. Treat, traveling in Italy and Sicily in 1845, wrote: "When on the south coast of Italy last Christmas, I inquired particularly about the wines in common use, and found that those esteemed the best were sweet and un-intoxicating. The boiled juice of the grape is in common use in Sicily. . . . From inquiries I found that unfermented wines were esteemed the most. It was drunk, mixed with water."

Prof. Stuart says: "We have seen that these substances were employed by the Hebrews, in two different states, the one was a fermented state, the other an unfermented one. Is there any serious difficulty now, in acquiring the Scripture of contradiction in respect to this subject? I do not find any. I can only say that to me it seems plain—so plain that no wayfaring man need to mistake it."

I have thus from many writers of different ages and countries proved that unfermented wine has been in use from very ancient times, and I might from the same authorities prove, were it necessary, that there was a wine which cursed mankind, demoralized their characters, and brought desolation, woe and death to all who indulged in its use.

2. There was, then, in Bible times and lands, a wine which was a mock-er, and there was a wine which was a blessing, and there is abundant proof that this unfermented wine was esteemed the best; and having settled this point, I might rest the case without argument, and assume that the Bible approves of the best, and that our Saviour, at least on such a joyous occasion as a marriage feast, would furnish the guests with the same, and so the master of the feast declared it to be.

Pres. Nott says: "That the wine declared by the master of the feast to be 'good wine,' was good wine in the sense that Pliny, Collumella, or Theophrastus, would have used the term 'good' when applied to wine! good because nutritious and un-intoxicating, wine which, though it would refresh and cheer, would not derange, demoralize or intoxicate." (Bib. Tem. p. 53.)

Barnes, commenting on the passage, says: "As wine was a common beverage among the people, he drank it; it was the pure juice of the grape, and for anything that can be proved, it was without fermentation."

Rev. Wm. M. Thayer (Corn, Wine and Oil, Tem. p. 56) says: "Did Christ make such a beverage as Almighty God declared to be a 'mock-er' and said we must not look upon! The supposition creates such a conflict between God the Father and Christ, as mortals cannot settle."

We need be in no doubt as to the character of the wine which the unerring pen of inspiration describes as a "mock-er," as "the cup of astonishment and desolation," as the "wine cup of his fury," as the "poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps,"—and the experience of the entire race, from the shameful fall of Noah and the more shameful and disgraceful conduct of Lot, "who erred through wine," down through all the generations of men, to the wine-drinkers of the present day, most abundantly justify the truth of the description given of it in the Scriptures. It is the prolific source of crime, misery, degradation and ruin to everyone who indulges in the use of it. And yet Rev. Thos. Laurie, D. D., of Providence, R. I., stoutly maintains that "Christ made use of this mocker and deceiver, in the institution of the supper, and that the ordinance cannot be properly observed without it." This, to my mind, is little short of blasphemy.

II. What, then, did Christ make use of at the institution of the supper? 1. He made use of that which he has designated in terms so plain and unmistakable that no honest mind need to err. We have his language recorded there several times, and in each case he uses the same words, "fruit of the vine," as though he would guard against any mistake. But fermented wine is in no strict and proper sense "the fruit of the vine," it has passed through a chemical change and become alcoholic, and therefore deleterious. The constituents of the fruit of the vine are almost entirely gluten and sugar, which are highly nutritious; but after passing the vinous fermentation these constituents are changed into an alcoholic, intoxicating and poisonous liquid, and it is no more the fruit of the vine than is vinegar, which is the product of the third stage of fermentation, or than the product of the fourth stage, when the whole becomes a mass of rottenness and putrefaction. Every chemist knows that the whole process of fermentation, is a process of decay and putrefaction; therefore, after passing through these chemical changes, it is no more the "fruit of the vine."

We have seen from the testimonies which have been quoted that this nutritious unfermented wine, this tirosh, which was everywhere esteemed the best, was grape juice boiled down to the consistency of syrup for preservation, and when used for drink, was diluted with water; and in the following quotations we have good proof, though incidental, that this was the kind spoken of.

Smith (Bib. Dic., article Wine) says: "The wine was mixed with warm water on these occasions, as implied in the notice of the warming kettle (Pesuch. 7, sec. 13). Hence in the early Christian church it was usual to mix the sacramental wine with water, a custom as old, at all events, as Justin Martyr's time" (Apol. i: 65).

Donovans (Domestic Economy, pg. 24) says: "Many of the wines described by the ancients seem to have been rather the stock from which wine was to be made, than the wine itself. They were often so thick as to require solution in hot water, and filtration before they were fit for drinking, as appears from the statements of Pliny and Aristotle."

2. Fermented wine was excluded from the Jewish passover; and would Christ violate this prohibition in the institution of that ordinance which took its place? Rabbi Manasseh Ben Israel says: "Here at this feast-passover every confection ought to be so pure as not to admit of any ferment or anything that may fermentate." M. M. Noah, a leading Jew of New York, states, "that the use of wine prepared from steeped raisins in order to avoid fermented wine, was general among American Jews at the passover."

Gesenius says, that "The prohibition of leaven at the passover, applied to the wine as well as to the bread."

Dr. Cunningham, the learned Hebraist, says: "What is now chiefly used by the Jews at the passover for wine, is a drink made of an infusion of raisins in water . . . No Jew with whom I have conversed, of whatever class or nation, ever used any other kind."

Horne (Intro. to Scrip.) says: "The modern Jews are forbidden to drink any fermented liquor at the Passover. . . . It is not known when the Jewish custom began, but it is very ancient, and is now almost universal."

Prof. Stuart (Bib. Sac, Vol. I.) says: "I cannot doubt that khamatz (any fermented substance) in its widest sense was excluded from the Jewish passover, when the Lord's supper was first instituted. . . . That this custom is very ancient, that is now almost universal, and that it has been so from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, I take to be facts that cannot fully be controverted."

3. The unfermented fruit of the vine, not only answers the description given it by the Saviour, but it far more truly symbolizes the blood which he shed for the sins of men; it is called (Gen. xlix: 11) the blood of grapes; (Deut. xxxii: 14) the pure blood of the grape. It is used also to symbolize the blessings of the gospel.

From all these facts, arguments and considerations, I think all Christians are warranted in maintaining, most earnestly, that Christ, did not make, use, or sanction the use of intoxicating drinks.—The Congregationalist.

HAPPY is he who grows old with Christ as his portion, for he is ever renewing his youth. He lives like Moses upon the mount in full view of the promised land.

Discussion—Miller and Walker.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Proposition 5. The teaching and practice of the Disciples on the subject of the Lord's Supper are strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

Proposition 6. The teaching and practice of the German Baptists on the subject of the Lord's Supper are strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

EDITORS PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN:

Esteemed Brethren:—By your permission I will give your readers a brief synopsis of the discussion on the subject of the Lord's Supper. Walker, as you notice was in the affirmative on the 5th proposition, and I wish to notice the arguments he presented to sustain or rather affirm the teaching and practice of his church scriptural—strictly scriptural. I must, however, again say that I find it difficult to give a synopsis of his arguments, as he did not number them; neither did he call the attention of the audience to them in a manner that enabled me to get the points in the arguments as clearly as I would have desired. I have thought, while engaged in trying to get the points, that in his arguments the points must have been so sharp that I could not see them, or else they had none. The former would argue that I was too dull to see the points; this I do not like to acknowledge. The latter argues that he presented arguments without points: this I do not like to say of a man who engages in a work as energetically as Mr. Walker did. Let the fault be where it may, I am obliged to proceed, as best I can.

1. He started out on the fifth proposition, by saying that the original term for supper as used by Paul (1 Cor. 11.) did not really mean an evening meal; and that it was scriptural to eat not to satisfy hunger.

2. He based an argument on the object for which the disciples assembled, (Acts 20) viz: to break bread; and called up Paul's language to the Hebrew brethren, "not forsaking the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some is," to prove that they were to come together to break bread on the first day of the week.

3. The bread and cup are the only food belonging to the Lord, imperatively commanded by Him; and in 1 Cor. 10, where Paul speaks of the Lord's cup and table, the cup is the Lord's cup, and the bread beautifully denotes the Lord's table.

4. The bread and cup constitute a great spiritual feast, and are to be used in their beautiful, lawful sense.

In examining elder Walker's arguments, brother Miller found three distinct points of difference, between his teaching and that of the brethren.

1. Elder Walker says, that the communion is the Lord's Supper. We say it is not.

2. He says it is to be observed only on the first day of the week. We teach that it may be observed on other days of the week, as well as on the first.

3. He teaches that it may be observed at any hour of the day. We teach that it can be eaten only in the evening. With reference to the first, brother Miller proved to him (1 Cor. 10: 16) that the bread and cup constituted the communion, and not the Lord's Supper—that supper, (Deipnon) was a specific term applied to an evening meal; and was the principal meal of the Hebrews. In looking at the second point of difference, brother Miller argued, that the coming together was more particularly on the first day of the week, and not the breaking of bread, and hence Paul's admonition to his brethren, "not forsaking the assembling of themselves together, as the manner of some is,"—That if Paul meant the breaking of bread, he would have said, "not forsaking the breaking of bread, &c.," instead of "not forsaking the assembling, &c." That if they came together on the first day of the week according to the Jewish time, (whose day commenced at sunset,) they assembled after sunset, and so broke bread in the night, which is contrary to Walker's practice. If they assembled next morning, or after the night of the first day was past, they remained together until after sunset; for they did not break bread until after night, (Acts 20: 11.) and that will put it into the second day of the week, which would again be contrary to elder Walker's practice. Therefore, Acts 20: 11, will not do to prove his teaching and practice scriptural; but proves that in either case they broke bread in the evening, and therefore proves the teaching and practice of the Brethren (which is to break bread in the evening,) strictly scriptural. Other topics came up in the discussion of the fifth proposition, but I shall not notice more here, but will give you some of the arguments brought forward by brother Miller in affirming the sixth proposition.

We affirm, 1st, that the Scriptures teach that the Lord's Supper is a meal taken in the evening, and not the communion.

2. That the Lord's Supper with its attendants may be observed on other days beside the first day of the week.

1st argument. We begin with Jesus, because his example and practice is eternal safety. If we inquire how he gave the communion to the church, we find that he gave it in connection with a meal, (Luke 22) which several inspired writers tell us, he commanded them to make ready or prepare. We know it is conceded by many that this meal eaten by the Savior and his disciples, in connection with which he gave them the bread and cup, was the Jews' passover; but we find Luke, John and Paul speaking of it as a supper—calling it a supper, and Paul says he delivered that which he also received of the Lord.

2. If it were the passover, it alone would not prevent it from being an institution under the Christian dispensation; for we find "bapto" under the Jewish law, and the unleavened bread used for the communion. They therefore were brought over, and the passover cannot be rejected simply because it existed under the Jewish law; but

3. It was not the passover; in proof of which we call up Mark (15: 42), Luke (23: 54), and John (18: 28, and 19: 31). From these Scriptures we learn that the time to eat the passover had not yet come, the next morning following the evening on which Jesus ate a supper with his disciples, and gave them the communion. The time to eat the passover was as strictly specified in the law, as the manner of preparing it, and eating it. The Savior did not eat it at the proper time, nor in the specified manner; therefore the supper he ate with his disciples, when he washed their feet, and delivered to them the communion, was not the Jews' passover.

4. My opponent calls the communion the Lord's Supper. I do not. There is a supper, but it is not the communion. The Scriptures speak of a Lord's table, and a Lord's Supper. On inquiring when and where the Lord had a table and a supper, we find that he had a table and a supper in Jerusalem, in a large upper room, where he had commanded his disciples to prepare, and where he and his disciples gathered around the table and he ate a supper with them, and gave them the communion.

5. Apostolic churches had a feast—a feast of charity in the church, and that feast was a meal. Feast (agape) is a generic term, and may denote a meal taken at any time of the day. If it be asked what kind of a feast they had in the church, we answer, such a feast as Jesus instituted in the church in connection with the communion, in Jerusalem, when he had a table around which he and his disciples gathered in the evening and ate supper. This feast being instituted by the Lord, in the evening, is very properly called the Lord's Supper. (Deipnon.)

6. The literal meaning of the word supper (deipnon) forbids us to call the bread and wine a supper. If we cut down the word supper to mean a wafer of bread and a sip of wine, we must allow pedo-baptists the same privilege of cutting down "bapto" to mean a few drops of water, and acknowledge it baptism. To this my opponent will not consent any more than I will; yet this is his logic when he cuts down supper to mean a little bread and wine. He must allow them the same privilege in baptism, that he asks in cutting down the supper. I say his logic is wrong—is not scriptural. I am here to defend the teaching of my brethren on this subject, which is to call things by their right names, in the Bible as well as out of it—baptism, immersion—supper, an evening meal. Therefore the teaching of the Brethren is scriptural—strictly scriptural.

I must close the present communication, other arguments were introduced which I cannot notice here. Elder Walker of course made an effort to overturn brother Miller's arguments, but I think he failed to do so in the minds of many in that large audience which gave undivided attention to the discussion of this subject.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Love--Its Effects.

BY JOHN BENNETT.

There are many true Christian principles, or graces, that every one who belongs to the church of God should be in possession of; but I think that true Christian love is greater than and above all others. Jesus says: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 15: 34, 35. Before that we had the ten commandments in the law, and in them we were commanded, to love the Lord our God with all our heart, mind, and strength; and to love our neighbors as ourselves. But Christ gave us another, which he calls "a new commandment;" that we love one another, even as he loved us. Again he says: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14: 15) And again: "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." (John 15: 12.) Surely we will all acknowledge that this is a command; and, hence, must be observed by the followers of Christ.

Now "Its Effects." If we love our brethren and sisters, as we ought to love them, and as we are commanded to love them, we will speak to them as to those we love; and in talking about them, we will speak as of those we love, and let no harsh tones be heard.

Now, brethren, if the above be true in regard to our conversation, is it not equally true with regard to writing articles for publication in our papers? It certainly is. We sometimes see articles in our papers that cause us to feel bad; because the writers in speaking of other brethren, use such harsh language—such as does not (to us) seem to manifest the love that we should have one for another. We ought to remember our Savior's commands, and our own baptismal vow, "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Surely we ought not to publish his fault in the paper where hundreds of our brethren, and many of those of the world see it. Would it not be much better, brethren, for us all, if we would write more "conciliatories," and not so many "vindictories." I believe we would feel better to yield ourselves, and "be subject one to another"—to "leave off contention before it be meddled with." Now, brethren, what I have said is not intended as a censure to any one. I deem the subject an important one, and well worthy our serious consideration. If I am wrong in anything, I am willing to be corrected.

The Endless Rest.

There are no weary heads or weary hearts on the other side of Jordan. The rest of heaven will be the sweeter for the toils of earth. The value of eternal rest will be enhanced by the troubles of time. Jesus now allows us to rest upon his bosom. He will soon bring us to rest in his Father's house. His rest will be glorious. A rest from sin; a rest from suffering; a rest from sorrow—the very rest that Jesus himself enjoys. We shall rest, not only with him but like him. Thanks be unto God for the rest we now enjoy. Ten thousand thanks to God for the rest we shall enjoy with Christ! Weared one, look away from the cause of thy present suffering, and remember there is rest remaining for thee. A while and thou shalt enter into rest.

—The habit of virtue cannot be formed in a closet. Habits are formed by acts of reason in a persevering struggle through temptation.

For The Young.

Child's Morning Prayer.

Now I study, work, and play,
Keep me, Lord, from wrong to-day;
Let me be thy loving child,
Faithful, truthful, kind, and mild.

"I have laid me down, and slept,
By my God in safety kept:
Now to Him my heart I'll raise,
In a morning hymn of praise:
Lord, for Jesus' sake, I pray,
Bless and keep me all this day."

Courtesies to Parents.

Parents lean upon their children, and especially their sons, much earlier than either of them imagine. Their love is a constant inspiration, a perennial fountain of delight, from which our lips may quaff and be comforted thereby. It may be that the mother has been left a widow, depending on her only son for support. He gives her a comfortable home, sees that she is well clad, and allows no debts to accumulate, and that is all. It is considerable, more even than many sons do; but there is a lack. He seldom thinks it worth while to give her a caress; he has forgotten all those affectionate ways that kept the wrinkles from her face, and make her look so much younger than her years; he is ready to put his hand in his pocket to gratify her slightest request; but to give of the abundance of his heart is another thing entirely. He loves his mother? Of course he does! Are there not proofs enough of his filial regard? Is he not continually making sacrifices for her benefit? What more could any reasonable woman ask?

Ah! but it is the mother-heart that craves an occasional kiss, the support of your youthful arm, the little attentions and kindly courtesies of life, that smooth down so many of its asperities, and make the journey less wearisome. Material aid is good so far as it goes, but it has not that sustaining power which the loving, sympathetic heart bestows upon its object. You think she has outgrown these weaknesses and follies, and is content with the crust that is left; but you are mistaken. Every little offer of attention, your escort to church or concert, or for a quiet walk, brings back the youth of her heart; her cheeks glow, and her eyes sparkle with pleasure, and, oh! how proud she is of her son.

Even the father, occupied and absorbed as he may be, is not wholly indifferent to these filial expressions of devoted love. He may pretend to care very little for them, but having faith in their sincerity, it would give him serious pains were they entirely withheld. Fathers need their sons quite as much as the sons need their fathers; but in how many deplorable instances do they fail to find in them a staff for their declining years!

Begin early to cultivate a habit of thoughtfulness and consideration for others, especially for those whom you are commanded to honor. Can you begrudge a few extra steps for the mother who never stopped to number those you demanded during your helpless infancy? Have you the heart to slight her requests or treat her remarks with indifference, when you cannot begin to measure the patient devotion with which she bore with your peculiarities? Anticipate her wants, invite her confidence, be prompt to offer assistance, express your affection as you did when a child, that the mother may never grieve in secret for her son she has lost.—Rural New Yorker.

The Old Cap.

"Toss it in the air!" said one. "Hurrah! there it goes! Catch it, and have it up again!" said a well-dressed boy, with a smart new cap on his head.

There were so many boys that I could not at first see what they were playing so merrily with. At last the wind blew toward me a little cloth cap, not made, to be sure, in the fashion, but it was done very neatly, and was good enough to be worn by any boy of sense. A little boy ran after the cap, and tried to get it from the rest of the boys. His head was bare; so I thought that the cap must be his.

"Oh, Charles," said he, "give me my cap! it will be all dirty."

But the rash and cruel Charles only kicked it up in the air again, and cried, "Hurrah for the Dutchman's cap!"

This stroke of wit, as they all seemed to think it, caused a loud laugh, and they went on with their cruel sport. The little owner of the cap could scarcely keep from tears; and the boys, having had sport enough, at last gave him his cap.

For boys or girls to plague or make sport of their comrades because they are poorly-dressed, is very sinful. It was no more to the credit of Charles that he was well-dressed, and had a nice cap, than it was to the discredit of the little boy that he had poorer clothes, and a cheaper hat, made by his mother's hands. Boys and girls deserve our love and regard, not by reason of the clothes they wear, but because of their own qualities as boys and girls. May we all learn thus to regard each other.—Young Pilgrim.

Not to be Trusted.

A young man desired a certain situation in the city, which he seemed in a fair way to obtain. He was agreeable in his manners, and the firm were pleased with him. He was highly recommended by friends of the different partners and it was thought he would soon rise to the position of partner himself.

Meanwhile, the firm desired a friend who lived in the same town with the young man, to privately take a note of the manner in which he spent his evenings, and report them.

The answer came in due time. The young man spent several evenings in the week in a billiard saloon, and on Sunday drove out with a span of hired horses in company with two or three "fast young men." He did not hear from the firm. They did not need his services. He was not the sort of a young man wanted in honest business. Even men who have no religious principles themselves know how to value it in others. They feel safe in trusting a clerk who is punctual at church and Sunday-school, who is interested in the doings of the "Young Men's Christian Associations," rather than in the last new star at the theatre.

"When I see a clerk of mine driving for pleasure on Sunday," said a man engaged in a large business, "I dismiss him on Monday." He had learned by experience that he did not belong to the trusty class.

Straws tell the direction of the wind, and things you little dream of do more than letters of recommendation to influence the opinion of others from you. They are taking notes of your words and ways even when you think yourself most unobserved.

If you would have the name of being honest and upright, there is but one way to win it. Be what you wish to seem. A man may wear a mask successfully for a time, but a slight thing may loosen it and expose to view his true face. Besides, men of business have remarkably sharp eyes, which pierce right through masks. It is not worth a boy's while to try and wear one to deceive them.

THE whole truth earnestly preached cannot fail to make an immediate impression. It is said of Dr. Payson that he never got up on a Monday morning, that he did not know of some poor awakened souls that he must visit as soon as possible, and endeavor to persuade them to come to Christ without delay.

THE LOVEFEAST AMONG THE BAPTISTS.

Dr. Hague, an eminent Baptist minister of this country, is traveling in Europe. His letters are published in the Examiner and Chronicle of New York. One of his letters is written from Berlin in Prussia. There is a Baptist church here of some four hundred members. He spent a Sabbath with his brethren in Berlin, and describes his interview with the church. In addition to the ordinary service of the Sabbath, the communion was taken and baptism was administered. In reference to the baptism, Dr. Hague remarks, "The candidates came forth from a side-room, robed in white; and we may safely say, perhaps, that the ordinance of baptism was never administered in presence of an assembly more attentive, or more responsive to the words spoken and to the spirit of the service." In reference to the communion, or rather to the close of it, he has the following: "Having returned to the table, the pastor administered the ordinance as we have usually witnessed it at home, except that it was terminated by all rising, and joining hands, as they united in a closing song." This exercise seems somewhat similar to an order the Brethren observe at their communion. We join hands, and in addition to the joining of our hands, we give each other the salutation of the holy kiss, or kiss of charity, the kiss being necessary to complete the form of Christian salutation. We join hands before the communion, while our Baptist brethren in Berlin did it after the communion.

But it was the doctor's remarks on the Lovefeast of his brethren in Berlin, that more particularly arrested our attention in reading his letter. Under the head of "The Love Feast" he says:

"In addition to the privilege of participating in the sacramental communion with the Baptist church in Berlin, I had the happiness of being present with them on another Sunday evening at the really primitive church festival known, of old, as the Agape or Love feast. The celebration of the birth-day of the younger pastor furnished the special occasion. Of this feast the chief women were the administrators, and every part of the building, chapel, reception-room and kitchen, was occupied. It might be safely said that no two men in Berlin were happier that evening than the two ministers, father and son, amid this family gathering, moving about much of the time in all parts of the room, conversing with all as opportunity offered, with perfect freedom. Here was an example, certainly, of successful collegueship; no scope for chafing rivalry. Every countenance was lighted up with the expression of enjoyment.— In thought we were transported to the scenes of the first century, reminded constantly of the impressions which the reunions of the early churches made on many a passing heathen observer, calling forth the exclamation that has been so long historical, and repeated so often during the intervening ages, 'Behold how these Christians love one another!'"

There surely was a "primitive church festival known of old as the Agape or Love Feast," as the doctor declares. This church festival is plainly alluded to by the Apostle Jude, in the 12th verse of his epistle, where in speaking of "ungodly men" who had crept in unawares among the brethren, he says: "These are spots in your feasts of charity." This Love Feast was observed by the primitive Christians with much interest and profit. Waddington, in his history of the church says: "The celebration of the sacrament of the eucharist was originally accompanied by meetings which somewhat partook of a hospitable, or at least of a charitable character, and were called Agape or Feasts of Love. . . . Undoubtedly, those assemblies acted not only as excitements to ardent piety, but also as bonds of strict religious union and mutual devotion, during the dark days of terror and persecution. It was probably on those occasions, more than any other, that the sufferers rallied their scattered ranks, and encouraged each other by one solemn act of brotherly communion, to constancy in one faith and association in the same afflictions." (p. 27). These Love Feasts are precious seasons indeed, to disciples of Jesus, when they meet as the children of God, and are bound together in that "sweetest, dearest tie, that binds our glowing hearts in one." This festival of the apostolical and primitive church, our own fraternity observes with edification and profit. The Love Feast at Berlin seems to have had a happy effect upon the Doctor's mind. He says, "In thought we were transported to the scenes of the first century, reminded constantly of the impressions which the reunions of the early churches made on many a passing heathen observer, calling forth the exclamation which has so long been historical, and repeated so often during the intervening ages, 'Behold, how these Christians love one another.'" And if the Love Feast, and the other practices of primitive church were still observed in the true spirit of gospel obedience, an observing world would still say, "Behold how these Christians love one another." But with the loss of much of the faith and practice of the primitive church, much also of its love, which was the admiration of the world, has been lost.

As Dr. Hague enjoyed himself so well with his Baptist brethren in Berlin, "at the really primitive church festival, known of old, as the Agape or Love Feast," he should, we think, recommend to, and endeavor to introduce this "primitive church festival" among his Baptist brethren at home in America, that they might have the advantages of its hallowed associations and benefits.

THE FOLLY OF PROCRASTINATION.

There is a large class of people in the world who want to go to heaven, and who are ready to acknowledge, according to the teaching of the Scriptures, "without holiness" or some preparation, they cannot reach the position they desire in another world. But with their desires for heaven they are very reluctant to leave the world. And hence the preparation for heaven is put off till the latest hour in life. They want to enjoy the world as long as they possibly can, and hence live with the world and as it lives, until they come near to the gates of death. How unwise, how ungrateful, how deluded are such! They do not understand or appreciate their danger. Should death overtake them in their ungodly and disobedient and ungodly course, heaven is lost, and they will have to regret their folly in deferring their return to God so long.—They are ungrateful to their heavenly Benefactor, in giving their lives to the service of Satan, and only when they can serve him no longer, do they give themselves to God. Surely the God that preserved and redeemed them, and to whom they look for comfort in death and joy forever in heaven, should not be treated thus. They "treat no other friend so ill." But they are greatly deluded. Death may come upon them suddenly; and they may have no time to prepare to meet God.—Their habitual postponement of their religious duties may grieve the Spirit of God and so harden their hearts that they may throw obstacles in the way of their return, which may render that return difficult, and wanting perhaps in faith and energy in their diseased and enfeebled condition, they may die in despair. They are also deluded in imagining that they are more happy in the enjoyments of the pleasures of the world, than they would be if they were to come to Christ and take his yoke upon them. "But godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." 1 Tim. iv. 8.

"Then what my thoughts design to do,
My hands, with all your might pursue;
Since no device nor work is found,
Nor faith nor hope, beneath the ground."

The principles upon which we publish the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, will require us to stop sending the paper to subscribers at the close of the term for which they have subscribed, unless we are informed that they want the paper continued.

We therefore hope those of our subscribers whose term will close within the year will continue their subscriptions, and renew them in good time. We solicit a continuance of their patronage. If any fail to get the paper up to the time for which they have subscribed, they will please inform us.

VISIT TO PHILADELPHIA AND GERMANTOWN.

On the morning of March 16th, about half an hour after midnight, in company with brother U. M. Beachly, M. D., and his little daughters Gracie and Annie, we left Meyersdale to spend some time in the city of Brotherly Love. We reached the city safely about 2 o'clock, p. m., and found most of our brethren and friends enjoying good health, though a few were reported as being sick. It is not our purpose to make a lengthy report of our visit, and hence will proceed to notice what may, perhaps, be most interesting to the brotherhood in general.

Our readers will remember that, some weeks ago, a number of brethren in the city of Philadelphia, prompted by a feeling of the necessity of a Publishing House among us, extended an invitation to all feeling an interest in such an establishment and desiring to assist in making it a success, to meet with them on the 16th of March, for the purpose of organization. Accordingly, at 3 o'clock, p. m., we resorted to the Brethren's meeting-house, on Marshall street, where we found a number of brethren, from different parts. The meeting was duly opened by singing, and the reading of a part of the 12th chapter of Romans, and prayer by Elder Isaac Price, of Schuylkill, Pa. The meeting was organized by electing the proper officers, and then proceeded to business.

The chairman, brother J. P. Hetric, of Philadelphia, stated the object of the meeting. Addresses were delivered by J. P. Hetric, Elder I. Price, Elder J. K. Riner, Jacob Spanogle, Elder Lewis Kimmel, and others, and a number of letters were read from brethren not present, and there was a remarkable unanimity of sentiment, all agreeing that we have need of such an establishment, and that the time has come for us to organize and work by all suitable means, to establish a publishing house under the control of brethren, at as early a day as possible.

A permanent organization was then effected by electing Jesse P. Hetric, Philadelphia, Pa., President; J. W. Beer, Meyersdale, Pa., Secretary; U. M. Beachly, Meyersdale, Pa., Corresponding Secretary; and Jacob Spanogle, of Philadelphia, Pa., Treasurer.

The following brethren were appointed as a finance committee: J. T. Meyers, Germantown, Pa., U. M. Beachly, Meyersdale, Pa., and I. G. Harley, 1414 N. 13th st., Philadelphia, Pa.

J. P. Hetric, J. W. Beer, L. Kimmel, (Elderton, Pa.), J. T. Meyers, and U. M. Beachly were appointed a committee to communicate with the church at large to enlist as many as possible to unite in this work.

This is about all that was done in relation to a publishing house. No place was agreed upon, and no definite plans adopted. All who feel an interest in the establishment of such a house, for the purpose of supplying our members and Sabbath schools with wholesome literature, are invited to correspond with Dr. U. M. Beachly, Meyersdale, Somerset Co., Pa. The names and addresses of those who express themselves as favorable to the enterprise will be entered and they will be kept posted in the progress of the work. Any suggestions that the friends of the enterprise might feel to offer, will be gladly received.

We were pleased to meet with brother Kimmel, from Elderton, Armstrong Co., Pa. The unexpected meeting with one with whom we in former years enjoyed many pleasant and profitable seasons, brought forward many pleasant reminiscences. He was in the city to manifest his interest in a publishing house, and also to work for the Plumcreek Normal School, of which he is the principal and founder. He feels very much encouraged in his efforts, and is quite sanguine that the $23,000 endowment, which he is working for, can and will be raised. We wish him abundant success, as we feel that he deserves it.

It was also our privilege to meet with brother Simon Kelso, who has spent the greater part of the last year in the city of New York. His object was to meet with the brethren and to look for a situation in Philadelphia. After a few days' prospecting, he went to New York to make his arrangements to leave that city and return to Philadelphia, which he has now done. Brother Kelso was a few years ago called to the ministry, but for some cause he has not exercised in his office and calling. We are glad to learn from him that he feels his responsibility, and hope he will at once go to work earnestly. There is a great field open before him, and, no doubt, his earnest efforts would result in great good.

We met our aged and well-beloved elders, I. Price and J. K. Riner, and formed a little farther acquaintance with them. They have been faithful and effective workers, and are yet quite active in their age. We had but little opportunity to be in their company, but the little was enjoyed and left a desire for more.

We spent ten days in Philadelphia and Germantown, during which time we were permitted to attend a number of meetings in both places. It was our privilege to meet with a number of members in their families, where we were kindly and hospitably entertained. We were sorry that we could not visit more of the members in both churches. They seem to have their troubles, in common with others, but we feel hopeful for their future.

The church at Germantown, it is well-known, is the mother church in this country, and hence is more than 150 years old. The meeting-house in which they now worship is 130 years old. It has lately been repaired, and now presents quite a neat appearance. It is small when compared with some of the massive structures of other denominations. Still, it seems to be sufficiently large to accommodate the present congregation. When we go into the Brethren's graveyard near by, and look at the graves of our departed brethren and sisters who organized the first church of the Brethren in America, and when we think of their self-sacrificing spirits and their arduous labors, and then consider the fact that until within a few years even the house which they built stood as they left it, and that the once flourishing congregation has dwindled down to the comparatively small number of about 50 members—we say, when we take all these things into consideration, we spontaneously beseech God to revive his work there. May the few who yet remain be earnest and united in their efforts to revive the work. Brother J. T. Meyers has been laboring very acceptably in this congregation for the last few years; but since he is engaged in publishing the Messenger he has more labor than he can possibly perform. We may be allowed to suggest to the members at Germantown, that their most effective and, perhaps, the only successful way for them to succeed now is to labor much from house to house; visiting, talking with, and praying for, not only members and their children, but others who may be interested in their welfare. A great field is open, and, with God's blessing, a great work may be accomplished; but it cannot be accomplished without great labor and sacrifice.

We arrived at home safely on the evening of the 27th ult., and were thankful to find our families in ordinary health. With many thanks to our brethren, sisters, and friends for their kindness and liberality, and to God for his protection and guidance, we will close abruptly. B.

BY MAIL OR EXPRESS.

For the information of such as order hymn books from us, we say, that sometimes it is cheaper to have books sent by mail, and at others it is cheaper to have them sent by express. This depends on the number of books and on the distance they are to be sent. For instance, one dozen Morocco Hymn books, sent by mail to any part of the United States, will cost $11.00. Sent by express, at Pittsburgh Pa., or Cumberland Md., they would cost about $10.25; but at Waterloo, Iowa, they would cost more by express than by mail. But three dozen would be cheaper at Waterloo, by express than by mail. Postage is the same throughout the United States, but express companies charge for every change of line. Those who order books would do well to ascertain which would be the cheaper, and then order accordingly. B.

FROM NORWAY.—Brother M. M. Eshelman writes:

"By recent intelligence from Norway, Europe, we learn that four hundred and fifty persons withdrew from the State (Lutheran) church, and have determined to follow "the word of truth," and it alone. They teach in many respects the doctrine of the Brethren, rigidly maintaining the doctrine of non-conformity to the world. These facts, together with the name of the place, will at once be communicated to our beloved brother Christian Hope, who, no doubt, will visit them. That the Lord (who alone can) will open the way for the spread of his holy word among the people of Europe, we have never doubted. That the good work already begun may be carried forward to the honor and glory of God, let us all humbly pray."

We are requested to state that Hetric and Masters, whose advertisement will be found on the last page of this issue, have dissolved partnership. Brother Hetric withdraws and friend Masters continues in the business. We are glad that brother Hetric is now free from the cares and perplexities of business; and that there is a prospect that in the future he can devote his time to his pastoral duties. He is expected to do a great deal of labor in the church, and we believe he is fully competent for the work; but it is important that the members stand by him and afford him the encouragement and help which he needs. Friend Masters is fully competent to carry on the commission business; and we trust he may have the patronage of which he is worthy. B.

Bro. J. A. Studebaker of Greenfield, Kansas, writing on the 19th of March says:

"The snow is about six inches deep on the level. We have had some cold weather for the past few days. The peach crop is all killed. We have a fine prospect for a wheat crop. Before the present cold weather, farmers had commenced sowing oats. We have commenced a series of meetings, and expect to conduct them by our home speakers. Our prayer is that some precious souls may become willing to take upon them (the cross of Christ, and follow him in all his appointed ways. There has been a great deal of preaching of the faith alone doctrine, done at the same place."

Bro. Martin Neher, of La Place, Ills., writing on the 21st of March says:

"We had fifteen meetings in succession, commencing on Saturday evening before the second Sunday of the present month, and held two meetings each day except one. We had good meetings, and three additions. Elder Isaac Billhimer did the principle preaching. Many more are counting the cost.

Bro. Samuel Murray of Majenica, Ind., writing March 23rd, says:

"We have had very bad weather here for a couple of weeks. The roads are almost impassable. There have been several small snows, and there is snow on the ground at this time. The ground is frozen so hard that it will bear up teams, but the snow is now getting soft. There is some sickness, and it is generally lung fever. Nelson Bennet will be buried this afternoon, and sister Bennet is down with lung fever."

Bro. E. Brumbaugh, of New Baltimore, O., writing March 22nd says:

"If we will have a full report of our next Annual Meeting I think I can obtain more subscribers for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN as the brethren here would be pleased with a full report. When we held counsel here in regard to assisting in supporting the next Annual Meeting the question of a full report was raised, and I think there was no dissenting voice to a full report. We had a very mild winter so far and on Monday last the heaviest snow of the season fell, which I think is about 10 or 12 inches deep and to day we have excellent sleighing with the thermometer indicating 8° above zero at sun rise and at this writing it has raised to 28° at 10 a. m."

BROTHER Landon West, Sinking Springs, Ohio, Mar. 24th, says:

"We had thought winter was gone, but it has returned again. On the 20th inst. the snow fell without intermission for 17 hours, and to the depth of nine inches on a level. As a result sleds and sleighs are in great demand, for the last few days. The mercury stood 2° below zero on the morning of the 22nd inst. and we fear that the peaches are injured, if not all killed. The snow is going off now very fast. The prospect for wheat, in some fields, is quite favorable; in others it is not good. Death has been quite common, and especially among the aged."

Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

BONSAKCS, Va., March 16, 1876.

Editors Primitive Christian :

In the order of God's providence the winter is past, and the benignant influence of the genial rays of the sun, and the refreshing showers are causing vegetation to put forth and spread the green mantle of spring over the fields. But owing to the extreme mildness of the winter the peach-bloom came out in advance of time, and thus exposed to the recent frost the crop of peaches is mainly destroyed.

The health of our community is only moderate—quite a number of cases of pneumonia and a good many deaths.

We have for the past several weeks enjoyed quite a feast of good things from the ministerial labors of brother Stejn, who has been preaching in this and adjoining counties during this period; he is surely an able and active worker for Jesus. Though so lately inducted into the science of true evangelical and primitive Christianity he is certainly and purely orthodox in his views, and eminently qualified to impress and maintain the truth, not wanting in ability, independence nor courage to declare the truth and expose error, and while his method is not so much calculated to excite the passions and hurry unconverted persons into the church, he meets the wants of intelligence, sobers the mind and convinces the judgment, and thereby forms in the soul the true principles of our blessed Christianity. He has put a number of his old Baptist friends to thinking seriously upon the baptismal question, as well as obedience in general. May the Lord comfort and sustain him.

Yours fraternally,

B. F. MOOMAW.

To Brother Christian Hope.

Grace, peace, love, and comfort be multiplied to you and yours, by God, our Father, and his "beloved Son, our Redeemer.

Since your departure, I have often meditated over our hours of prayer togetherness, and the seasons of Bible study and heavenly conversation. Nor have I forgotten the weeping and exhortations. The midnight joys and talks of the Great Crucified—the stream that issued from Calvary—the I lessness of the meek and the reward of the lowly, are still as fresh to my mind as when we were side by side and dwelt upon them. May you always have the grace to manifest that patience under trial and affliction as when we knelt side by side in praise to him who has called us from darkness to eternal light.

I write you to comfort you in your severe trials. I know you felt, before starting, that you would have to endure much. You will find mountains within and without. Have faith; and if it is no larger than a mustard seed the mountains will disappear. While you will have ignorance, superstition, and priest craft, to combat in Denmark, you will be called upon to endure such stripes from those "of us" as see fit to apply them. But I am assured that "none of these things" will move you. What if you shall "five times" receive "forty stripes save one?" You are no better than he who was "thrice beaten with rods, once stoned, thrice suffered shipwreck." The same God that succored Paul in his perils, will succor you if you live near the Redeemer.

True, it is not at all pleasant after being "set for the defense of the gospel" to have those also who have been baptized into Christ to make your pathway rough by unjust comparisons and criticisms. But then you know man's ways of things that touch eternal salvation are always sure to make the Christian's pathway rough. Jesus' way is easy and smooth; it is only rough when poor man heaps obstructions thereon. Climb over all these, and you will come off "more than conqueror," through him that died for you. The "buffetings" are for your good, if you receive them in all patience. Do not despair, therefore, when the mission to Denmark is tortured. It also must receive its scourgings, that it may be made manifest. But above all things do the work faithfully to which God hath chosen you, that you "may out of occasion from them that desire occasion," and the God of peace will finally give you an inheritance with the called in Christ Jesus our Lord. Be faithful, meek and lowly, always patterning after our blessed Savior. This much I thought good to send you through the medium in which your mission of love and self-denial is being severely criticized. May God help you in every sore trial.

Your brother as ever,

M. M. ESHELMAN.

CRESTON, Iowa.

Brother Quinter:—

I receive both the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and Pilgrim, which afford me a great deal of news. I truly love to hear from my dear brethren and sisters throughout the brotherhood. Though I am no subscriber to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, brother Lewis takes it and I take the Pilgrim, and I think they ought both to be patronized by the brethren in general. I see some write only to one paper. I have heard some say, "Why don't you and such one write for my paper now?" I think one is just as good as the other. I will not hesitate to say that I am so well pleased with both papers that double the amount would not deprive me of either one, though I often see things that I would a little rather not see published; but I make no complaint, for they answer for preaching where preachers are hard to get, as the case seems to be here. I have written several articles recommending this country, and urging brethren to come and make their homes with us here in this part of God's moral vineyard, and am sorry indeed to say that none as yet have appeared. I have received several letters from brethren. I received a letter from Somerset county, Pa., stating that they had eleven preachers, and I thought they could spare us some. I hope they will take an action on it and send us one or more. I am afraid brethren are getting somewhat careless about this matter. Some have written to me to know if there are any here that could be persuaded to join the Brethren. I think of course there are those that would gladly embrace the doctrine.—I know of four or five that speak very favorably of the Brethren. I am almost sure that if we had a minister here and could have regular preaching, we would soon have a church organization. I was made to rejoice when I heard of the Danish movement, and then I thought, too, that perhaps it would be as well to first preach to those in the United States, for I very frequently hear it said, "Who are the Dunkards? what is their belief?"—What more can they say in Denmark?—The cost will be small in comparison to what it will be to go to Denmark. This western country is full of people who know no more of the Brethren than they do in Denmark. Then why not wake up and scatter out? There are, however, enough to go to Denmark and also to the West.

I hope the church east will act on this all-important question, and not think it doesn't mean all, for I think it means every one who is a minister or teacher.—Just think of it! All other denominations are here, and building up large church-houses. I was told that in less than twelve miles distant there are ten churches built, and more under construction; yet I think our country is spiritually poor. I don't see that it makes better men and women; but rather, it makes them proud and haughty.

I have sent the Real Estate Journal to several brethren and would like to know whether they received it or not, and whether it gave them the desired information. If not, please let me know soon, for I shall be prepared to give you all the information that I can. I am going to do the very best I can to build a church here. I am permanently located and would like to live among my brethren.—My prayer to God is, that he will send laborers into his vineyard.

GEORGE W. KEIM.

BEATRICE, Gage Co., Neb., }
March 3, 1876. }

Brethren Editors:

By your permission I will write a few lines for the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. I left home on the 8th day of Feb. for a visit to the brethren in Gage county, Neb. Found them generally well and seemingly well pleased with their prospects both temporal and spiritual. The brethren in Gage county have meetings regularly every Lord's day and sometimes in the evenings. They are also getting a number of calls for preaching from other parts of this great western country. Their meetings are generally well attended and good order maintained. The friends seem to be very anxious to hear the Brethren preach. Henry Brubaker, a young brother, is the elder in this church.—He is zealous in his calling, earnestly contending for the order of the Brethren and the cause of Christ. Urias Shick is an active minister in the second degree, living in this arm of the church. Wm. Price was also recently ordained as a speaker. The sisters—the wives of the speakers—are also in the order of the church, being quite an example to the flock. We hope others may pattern after them.

The members are blessed with plenty to eat and feed for their stock. Last season was a plenteous one for them. The majority, however, are in limited circumstances, so far as this world's goods is concerned, but they are by no means the less charitable or sociable. One can truly feel at home among them. They live in one of the finest localities in the west.—Timber plenty for present use. Wood and fence posts can be bought for a reasonable price. Timber grows very rapidly here when planted. I have traveled over a good portion of Nebraska and other western States and Territories, and find this by far the best locality I have seen yet, so far as natural advantages are concerned, such as fine building stone, rich soil, and a smooth surface. There is quite a rush of immigration to these parts by Brethren and there is a prospect for a large church here shortly.

Would yet say to brethren and friends who wish to go west, that they will do well to stop and see this part of the country before purchasing elsewhere.

May the good Lord stand by us and enable us to go forward in our every duty, is my wish and my desire.

A. H. HAMM.

Letter to J. S. Mohler, of Missouri, and Reply.

Dear and much respected Brother in the Lord:

I have after so long a time taken my pen in hand to write a few lines to you, as I have thought of writing to some one of the members in your church, hoping by so doing that I would get to hear from them, but opportunity has not presented itself until now. I have often thought of you and the many wholesome instructions you gave us, as well as the many disadvantages, hardships, crosses, &c., that you have to labor under in preaching in that country. It is very hard to speak to a congregation that is not interested in what you are trying to say. I have often thought of the circumstance that you related to me of the first appointment you tried to fill after you were sent to that place; not very long ago it was brought very forcibly to my mind. There was an appointment on the outskirts of the church and another minister promised to go with me or meet me there; so I went, but no help came. I waited just as long as I possibly could, but all in vain. I then mustered up what little courage I had, and thinking that I would do the very best I could, and feeling that if I did that it was all that could be required of me, and also seeing that I had to make a beginning in that direction sometime, "at it I went.

I see in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that the missionary cause runs pretty high. We in the northern district of Iowa and Minnesota are going to try to have one or two missionaries to preach in the bounds of our own district wherever there is a call for preaching, to be supported by the churches in said district. Now brother John, write and tell me what progress you are making. Excuse my many mistakes and bad writing. I will try to do better.

If you prefer, answer through the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, as I think you could make it interesting to others as well as myself.

ELIHU MOORE.

ANSWER.

My Dear Brother:

I feel under many obligations to you for the sympathy you have manifested toward me in your letter. In your letter you referred to my first experience in the ministry, as related to you by me, and then you relate a little of your first experience in the ministry. Dear brother, you will discover that the life of a minister is a very complex one. Sometimes he feels encouraged, especially when he feels the help of God in administering the word to large congregations, having good order and giving good attention, with a good many brethren and sisters present, and a brother or two to assist in the ministry.— But sometimes you will feel as if the Lord had left you to your own resources, and speaking goes hard; sometimes your congregation will be small when there is no apparent cause; you wonder why brother or sister so-and-so is not there; you know that they are all well, the roads good, and the weather fair; you conclude that they are not pleased with your preaching.— This will discourage you to some extent. Sometimes the order is not good, or perhaps a brother or sister falls asleep during your discourse. You wonder, again—"What is wrong? I certainly studied my subject well, arranged it in order, and I have prayed God with his good and Holy Spirit to assist me in delivering the word of truth. Yet with all this here are some members whom I cannot interest enough to keep awake." This will try your patience.

Sometimes you have not a single brother or sister in your congregation (or at least this has been my experience), but a house full of people collected from different nations and races, African not excepted, belonging to the Methodists, Baptists, Campbellites, Presbyterians, Lutherans, or United Brethren, and a good many that profess nothing, but are as proud in their hearts as Lucifer,—all of them have come with an itching ear to hear what the "Dunkard preacher" will say, ready to criticize. This will try your courage.

Sometimes you will be left alone to fill an appointment, when the full weight of the ministry will rest with double weight upon you, and you feel a little as Jonah did, "to flee from the presence of the Lord."

Sometimes the weather is very cold and the wind cuts keen enough across the bleak prairie, and you feel that you would much rather stay at home by a warm stove; but it is meeting day and you must go, if the people do not.

Sometimes you will feel as if you are doing no good, and had about as well quit; that the people have become so hardened in sin that it would require some supernatural power to arouse these hardened sinners to a consciousness of their danger. But then we are reminded of the voice of God, to the prophet of old, "What doest thou here, Elijah? And he said, I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts, for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the swords, and I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life to take it away." But the prophet was doubtless encouraged to return again to his duties when the Lord told him that he had reserved unto him "seven thousand men who had not bowed the knee to Baal."— Thus it may be with us, my dear brother and co-laborer, in the vineyard of the Lord, amidst all our trials, difficulties, disappointments, and discouragements in reference to the hardness of the people. The Lord may yet have a large number of persons who are not willing always to bow the knee to our modern Baal, but will finally come out from "darkness unto light," and take upon them the yoke of Jesus and learn of him.

Were it not for this hope I would at once quit this field of labor, and go where

I thought my labors might be better appreciated, and the labors and trials of the ministry not so great as they are here.

The language of Ezekial is often brought to my mind where he says, "So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. If they take not warning they shall die in their sins and their blood will be required at their hands; but if thou warn them then, their blood will be required at thy hands," &c.

Now, dear brother, may God give you grace, heavenly wisdom, and moral courage to go forth in life proclaiming the truths of the everlasting gospel and be instrumental in the hands of God in bringing many others into the fold of Jesus, the great Shepherd, who will give unto us eternal life, and lead unto fountains of living water.

The ark of the Lord, I sometimes think, is in the land of the Philistines, so far as this country is concerned, but hope it will soon return. One here, and another there, is gathered into the fold of Jesus. Our congregations are larger than usual, and a good degree of interest is manifested.

Dear Brother Quinter:

As church news is desirable I herewith send a report of a series of meetings which was held in our arm of the church, commencing Feb. 29th, and closing March 10th. Our brother J. T. Meyers, of Germantown, was with us and preached eight sermons, and God blessed his efforts.— Seven precious souls were led to inquire the way to Zion's rest, and we trust that there are others who have been awakened and are counting the cost, who will yet give us their hands and the Savior their hearts. Fraternally,

AMOS S. CHAMBERLAIN.

Editors Primitive Christian:

Will you in behalf of the sufferers amongst working people in this city—who are mostly German and Scandinavian—allow me space in your columns to inform the farmers of the north west, if they need help, male or female, with or without families, who will do their work faithfully and at low wages, that Chicago is the place to get such help. As an eyewitness to their sufferings since the panic, I am prompted for their benefit to make this known.

Farmers who bring stock to the city and remain several days, can select help for a whole community. Why send missionaries to Germany or Scandinavia when natives of those countries are here by thousands, who are only too anxious to meet you at your firesides; and they are not the scum of European society, either. Dear Brother Quinter:

In the latter part of the year 1875, the brethren and sisters of Mercer county, Ohio, made an appeal through the Brethren's periodicals for some laboring brother to come and live with them and preach for them the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The appeal was not confined to ministers alone, but to brethren and friends also; all are invited to come and locate in this county and help to build up the church here. Land is cheap and good, and water is pure and pretty easily obtained. We expect to have two railroads ere long through our county. Our county seat is on the banks of the largest artificial body of water in the United States. The canal in the west part of the adjoining county is fed by said reservoir, which comprises an area of nearly 17,000 acres.

CORNELIUS DIXON,
CHRISTIAN BURK.

I can say to the many readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN that I have visited the above place and found the brethren and sisters in reasonably good health. The brethren had three appointments which we tried to fill to the best of our ability, by the grace that was given us by God, our heavenly Father. We also took special notice of some of their land, which we consider as good as we have in the greater portions of our timbered country. The timber is good, very tall and straight, and all the water we drank whilst there was good; it is lime-stone water, and limestone is found in abundance and is easily obtained.

Perhaps some persons would like to know the price of land: there are some very desirable 80-acre farms that can be bought for prices varying from $800 to $2,000, according to improvements.

The manner and appearance of the members is very similar to that of the Brethren of 25 years ago; and they can easily be distinguished from members of other denominations and outsiders. They are, generally, in good circumstances, pecuniarily. A large field is open for laboring brethren.

The society is very good; the young folks paying the strictest attention to the word of God when preached in its purity and with power. We promised the brethren that if we were spared, we would meet with them again in the near future.

HUTSONVILLE, Ills., }
March 12, 1876 }

Dear Brethren Editors:

Wishing to let the brethren—especially ministering brethren—know that there is a small band of brethren in this part of the vineyard, hence this epistle. This arm of the church—Lamotte Prairie church—is situated in Crawford county, Ills., near the line of the Paris and Danville railroad, the nearest station being at Hutsonville. The church was organized in the autumn of 1868, and if I have been correctly informed, the number of members was 9, all having certificates of membership. We now number about 40; five or six were admitted by letter, the rest by baptism. At the time of organization there were four brethren and five sisters, one, namely, Absalom Hyre, being a minister in the second degree.—An election was held at that time, for one minister and deacon; the result was that brother J. P. Horning was selected for a minister, and brother Isaac Horning for a deacon. Since then brother Hyre has been ordained elder, and brother J. P. Horning advanced to the second degree. At our lovefeast in 1873, a choice was held for one minister and two deacons. The lot fell upon brother Jacob Swinger, for the ministry, and brothers Daniel and Henry Stoner, deacons, yet our ministerial force is not adequate, from the fact, that the field is so large, and our elder has the oversight of a little church in an adjoining county (Lawrence), and twenty five miles south of us. If ministers, while passing to and fro through the country, would give us a call, it would cheer our hearts, help us on our way to Zion, and perhaps induce some sinner to leave the broad way and consent to walk in the narrow one.

Brother Quinter:

I will give a little church news from this arm of the church (Pine Creek).—Monday evening, Feb. 7th, brethren David Ruppel and David Hosteler commenced holding meetings near Davis' Station, in the west part of the district, and continued until Friday evening. Thirteen were added to the church by baptism.—March 12th, Elder Ruppel held meeting there again, and baptized one more.

On Friday, Feb. 18th, brother Jeremiah Gump and David Miller came to us and held meetings in the brick meeting house near North Liberty, evening and morning, until Tuesday night. The meetings were well attended, and good attention was given to the word preached. Good impressions were made at this place. The members were much edified and encouraged, while others were almost ready to join in with the people of God.

On Wednesday evening we met in the new meeting-house, near Tyler City, in the south part of the district, and continued evening and morning until Friday night; meeting again on Sunday. During these meetings at this place 16 were added to the church by baptism. Since that time, one more was added to the number. Among them was an old lady 67 years old. This was truly a season of rejoicing. Parents were made glad to see their children added to the number of believers. Good impressions are made upon the minds of others that will soon follow. Brethren Gump and Appelman were the principal speakers. May the Lord bless their labors of love.

The different churches composing the Southern District of Indiana are requested to send in at as early a period as is convenient their respective quotas toward defraying the expenses of the delegates to the Annual Meeting.

Also, it is desired that the churches that have done nothing toward defraying the expenses of the brethren appointed by the District Meeting to go on a mission to the brethren in the southern part of the State, would do something as soon as convenient, as the brethren are contemplating another trip shortly, and I find that I have paid out $8 05 more money than I have received for this mission. Now, dear brethren, this certainly is a good work, and no doubt will be instrumental in bringing many precious souls into the fold of Christ; hence you are requested to be prompt and liberal in what you do in the matter. Send the money to Nettle Creek, Wayne county, Indiana, to

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Sundry congregation, Ohio, October 28th, 1875, MARGARET SMOUFFER, aged 57 years, 7 months and 3 days. Friend Stouffer has lost a bosom friend, the children a kind mother, and the neighbors a kind and beloved friend. Funeral occasion improved by brother J. A. Cleumant, D. Barton, and the writer.

LEWIS GLASS.

March 3rd, 1876, near Richland, Keokuk Co, Iowa, DANIEL H. WONDERLICH, son of elder Charles and sister Mary Wonderlich, aged 26 years, 3 months and 2 days. Disease, typhoid fever. Friend Daniel was a young man of sterling worth, and the large congregation of weeping and sympathizing friends and neighbors showed the high esteem in which he was held. Occasion improved by the writer from 1 Cor. xv. 22, 23.

JOHN THOMAS.

In the White Rock arm of the church in Jewell county, Kansas, Feb. 22nd, 1876, sister SUSAN, consort of brother Caleb Kinsey, aged 30 years, 3 months and 17 days. Sister Kinsey was an exemplary member for many years. She leaves a sorrowing husband and seven children to mourn the loss of a kind companion and mother. In her Christian example proves to all who knew her that our loss is her eternal gain. Not long before her death she called for the elders of the church and was anointed; she engaged in singing and devotional exercises when apparently she appeared to all around to weak to speak. Funeral occasion improved by brethren Allen Ives, P. B. Porter, and James M. Bailly, from Rev. xiv. 13.

HENRY P. BRINKWORTH.

(Pilgrim and Vindicator please copy.)

In the Sakio congregation, Montgomery Co, Ohio, Feb. 7th, 1876, sister SALLENBERGER, aged 52 years, and 3 months. Sister Sallenberger was confined to her bed about ten weeks. She bore her affliction with patience and Christian fortitude; though she suffered much, she was resigned to the will of the Lord. The writer of this obituary was by her bedside frequently during her sickness, but had her the last farewell nearly two weeks before she died, as he had to go to Kentucky. The church has lost a faithful member. She was the wife of brother John Sallenberger, who is a minister. She had eight children and one grandchild. She leaves a large number of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services in the Brethren's meeting-house, conducted by Samuel Garber and Jesse Stinson.

is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

AT LAST
I CAN OFFER
SOMETHING
TO MY
NUMEROUS FRIENDS!

The Waterbury eight-day Clock, over two feet high, is warranted for three years from $6 to $8. A dealer in clocks will recommend it as standard goods. I buy these from the Factory, in Connecticut, at inside prices. They are warranted to me, and I can warrant them to others. I will give one of these beautiful parlor Clocks to any one who will be the means of establishing an agency for me in any locality where the Fabrency Medicine is yet unknown. I often, very often, receive letters asking why I do not establish an agency in certain places they name. To show up the way and wherefore of this would require me to dilate on the inside workings of such a business. Perhaps if I were to hire at a big salary, kid gloved gentlemen to go into the different States of the great Northwest, I might be able to comply with the request of my friends; but even then, when you look on the map, you can see what an stupor it would be to establish an agency in every post-office district. Moreover, the best medicine—like the best religion—is not always the most popular. Hence the ability of my producing Fabrency's Parasoa without the cooperation of those who know and have known its great merits for more than half a century. Indeed I cannot find words to express my thanks to those who have volunteered their services free of any work in the past, and were thus the means of introducing the Blood-Cleanser where it might to this day be unknown only for their influence. Many of them claim they have been rewarded by witnessing the results following the use of the Fabrency Medicines. But there are still others who claim to be their love-keeper or grocer (not druggists), with whom they have more influence than all the advertising matter I could send to such business men. To such I offer this Clock, provided the order is sent during the month of March, for an agent who begins in February or March will sell more during a year than half a dozen who begin in July or August. Any one can take an agency who means business, and get a clock. At any time send your name and address, for full particulars. Do not be uncharitable, but let it all go for speculation, for my most intimate friends and acquaintances will not say so; and why should others. This offer is made in good faith, and it trusts it will be accepted.

EVERGREEN MOUNTAINS OF LIFE.

There's a land far away 'mid the stars we are told,
Where they know not the sorrows of time,
Where the pure waters flow, thro' the valleys of gold,
And where life is a treasure sublime.
'Tis the land of our God—'tis the home of the soul,
Where the ages of splendor eternally roll,
Where the way-wearied traveler reaches his goal
On the evergreen mountains of life.

Here our gaze cannot soar to that beautiful land,
But our visions have told of its bliss;
And our souls by the gale from its gardens are fanned
When we faint in the deserts of this.

And we sometimes have longed for its holy repose,
When our hearts have been rent with temptations and woes;
And we've drank from the tide of the river that flows
From the evergreen mountains of life.

Oh, the stars never tread the blue heavens at night,
But we think where the ransomed have trod:
And the day never smiles from his palace of light,
But we feel the bright smile of our God.

We are traveling home thro' earth's changes and gloom,
To a region where pleasures unchangingly bloom,
And our guide is the glory that shines thro' the tomb,
From the evergreen mountains of life.

Filthy Lucre.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

"And they were astonished out of measure." Mark 10: 26. So was I when informed that brethren are making arrangements to preserve their butter, and take or send it to the Centennial Fair with the expectation of getting an exorbitant price. "Let the dead bury their dead," and let those who are alive "be about their Father's business." If we read the placard of our Lord and Master aright, we will find the plain inscription, HANDS OFF—"TOUCH NOT THE UNCLEAN THING; and I will receive you." No Christ-loving, Cross-honoring brother will send his butter a hundred miles in order to get a dollar a pound, while all around him are the poor, who eat their bread dry for want of means to meet

Centennial prices. "Ye have the poor with you always, and whosoever ye will ye may do them good." Mark 14: 7. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord; and that which he hath given WILL HE PAY HIM AGAIN." Prov. 19: 17. Who would want a higher percentage of interest on his money, or ask for better security? Instead of raising market prices, and grinding the poor still more, keep your butter for the needy, and while worldings line their pockets and purses with unholly gain, sell what you have at old prices, and thus show "pity to the poor" and put money on interest with the Banker of Eternity. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." A pound of butter bestowed to some poverty-stricken fellow-mortal, will count more in the Ledger of God; than a hundred pounds at double price in your account book. No member will carry or send a pound of butter, or any other article, to Philadelphia with such a motive, printed with the sign of the Cross, unless it be the impress of condemnation.

Let us witness for Jesus in this very thing that the millennium of Christ is more to us than the Centennial of America. We can do our country no greater honor and no greater service than by being "the light of the world, and the salt of the earth,"—"a peculiar people zealous of good works." Who will put his butter and eggs in the calendar of Calvary during this Centennial year? God asks, who? and Eternity will answer.

God's Wisdom Unsearchable.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" Job 11: 7.

If there is a time in the life or history of man, in which he studies God or his attributes, it is during prolonged and sore affliction. It is then that he dives deep into the very recesses of his soul to search the divine nature of his Maker. Job was a man stricken with sore afflictions; and while he was thus tried, he did not waver in his faith toward God. He acknowledged the justice of God and his perfect nature.

He said, "If he contend with God, he cannot answer him one of a thousand;" thus showing to us, that, after all his searching and acquaintance with God, he acknowledges his superiority, and that to contend with, or to contradict him, would be vain.

The Psalmist David, who was a man of large Christian experience, of whom it is said that he was "a man after God's own heart," acknowledges the superiority of the perfection of God—acknowledges the great attributes of omnipresence and omniscience, which alone belong to God. He acknowledges the all seeing providence of God, in the words, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

The apostle Paul, in all his wisdom, in all his experience with God in his wonderful works to the children of men, exclaims that God's judgments are unsearchable and his wisdom past finding out. "Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" God's wisdom is higher than the heavens. Though we may look up into the ethereal regions, and attempt to measure the distances of the sun, moon, and stars, estimate their magnitude, and ascertain their courses in the ethereal dome, yet all this is mere conjecture in comparison with the wisdom of God who placed them there. "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Yea; his wisdom is higher than the heavens. Should we descend into the regions of the wicked, who suffer endless punishment, the knowledge of their misery is known to God; and if we go to the uttermost parts of the earth, his hand is there, all is under his observation, all is known to God. God is perfect in all his attributes—perfect in love, perfect in holiness. "Canst thou find out God?" God is perfect. Canst thou imitate him in his natural perfections? Oh, no! "High as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?" Though the Christian cannot attain to that state of God's natural perfections, yet in his "measure and degree" he can imitate God in his perfections. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." "Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" Canst thou? No; but all must acknowledge his omnipresence, his power and his justice. Knowing that God is all and in all, who would dare to sin? Can the sinner hide from God? No; whatsoever thou doest in darkness is daylight to him; what thou doest in secret, is open and naked before his eyes. O sinner, stop; thou canst not hide from him who sitteth upon the throne. Thou mayest rely upon his mercy; thou hast found out God to be merciful; but remember that he is also just, and unless thou turn from the error of thy ways, thou shalt find out God in his justice and judgment, when it is forever too late. Learn to know God while in this life. Search him and peradventure you may find him in peace, so that when life shall end it may be said, "Come up higher and enjoy a higher state of perfection around the throne of God."

My Grief and Sorrow.

By F. P. LEHR.

That which is pleasant and agreeable is readily communicated, and it causeth pleasant sensations; but the opposite produceth the reverse feelings; consequently your readers advise, (and I say, properly and justly,) not to take up into your columns anything of that description. But as our lives are made up of varieties and changes, and in the whole creation of God everything hath its opposite, and I believe all—yes, ALL for the benefit of man, and, finally, for the glory of the great Creator of all things, you and your readers will not object if I give you a scrap—only a scrap—of church news, somewhat in disguise; for I will not give names nor place, except my own as a guarantee of good faith.

Some years ago we left a pleasant home and pleasant surroundings, a prosperous, united church, and settled among a small number of partially starved lambs of the flock, whose lamb-like nature had suffered much among the rapacious animals of the forest, among whom they had to live. It required much patience and prudence to get them disentangled from the meshes and claws of their enemies. The situation caused the poor shepherd many sleepless hours of study and prayer. Success, however, followed his enterprise. The doctrine and church discipline were approved of, and a desire to hear and learn had the effect to multiply the number of the little band, which produced a fear that "If we let these go, the Romans will come and take our land and nation." Consequently the enemy was aroused to open warfare, attacking the city on all sides, throwing their shells and missiles into our midst; but they exploded and broke to pieces without doing us any harm. When all failed, it seemed that a council of war must have been held, for a wooden horse was introduced (who has not read of that horse in profane history?) into our midst. Who would have suspected enemies concealed in the hollow of the horse? But so it turned out. From their concealed or dark abode they cast their missiles, chiefly at the men of the guard. In this state of things some became wearied down and fled to other cities and camps, and the remaining ones were so much weakened that from time to time mutinies broke out, which caused distress and sorrow. Sad state of affairs! But as captains and generals did not think it prudent, sometimes, to lessen their small number of men, they took a course to save even the guilty, and thereby make them more effective. So also we desire without disclosing their names to make them true and faithful, and therefore pray, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." It seems pretty hard to say that there are brethren seemingly actuated by the evil one; but what other conclusion can there be formed if a brother is above taking advice, and never admits himself to be in the wrong, much less acknowledge his wrong truthfully, and is backbiting and exposing his brethren continually without ever coming to them once to ask of them, how is this or that, which is reported of you in the world, but carries reports to defame and belittle those for whom his sympathy should be called forth if even they should be guilty? His joy seems to be to put his brethren's failings on the big bell to be sounded abroad.—This is my grief!!!

It is said, if a woman wishes to be honored and respected, let her honor and respect her husband. In like manner, dear brother of the church you cannot climb over the ruins of thy brethren, trampling them under thy feet, and thereby become exalted and esteemed; remember Haman of old. Now dear reader, I have presented facts and truths in disguise. Ours is not the only case of the kind, I would have kept silent and buried it in my heart, but there are cases of this description here and there, (I trust not many.) My desire is that all may look into the mirror that reflects the deformity of their hearts, and discloses these out-workings of the same, and if this, my humble scribbling shall be the means of reformation, it may also give relief to my grief and sorrow.

Ready.

Under this caption we find the following from the pen of THEODORE L. CUYLER. It certainly is worthy of careful perusal. The first two questions refer to our temporal affairs, but who would say that they are not important? If a person habitually and wilfully neglects his temporal duties, is it not likely that he is not as watchful and diligent in spiritual things as he should be? The third and fourth questions lap a little, as only regenerate persons have forgiveness through the mediation of Christ, but by keeping this fact before the mind no harm can result. B.

"When Death calls the roll, always be ready to answer Here!" was the everyday motto of Cooper's famous trapper of the Prairie. There is a world of wisdom in the pithy maxim. It was the shrewd backwoodsman's paraphrase of a still wiser and holier maxim, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." This is one of our Savior's aphorisms that will be always timely to the end of time. Every one will admit the necessity of preparation for death. And yet there may be many a reader of these columns, who is within a few months, or even a few weeks of the eternal world, and yet has a very indistinct idea of what constitutes a fit preparation for death. Perhaps the following brief questions may aid those who are sincerely desirous not to be found wanting when the grim messenger—in the trapper's expressive phrase—"calls the roll."

1. Is your business in the right state to be left? We do not mean, is every honest debt paid? for it is hardly possible for even the most careful merchant or mechanic to so manage his affairs as to be entirely free from even the smallest obligations. But we do mean that every man should endeavor, as a matter of conscience, to keep his affairs in such a well ordered state, that if death should meet him in a rail car, or smite him from a summer cloud, his creditors should not suffer the unjust loss of a single farthing. Nor should his executors be obliged to wade through a quagmire of confusion in order to arrive at an accurate knowledge of his estate, and its indebtedness. It is no more honest to cheat our fellow-men from our coffins than to cheat them while we are alive. The debt I bequeath to my family or my executors is just as binding as the note that to-day lies in the bank with my signature on its face. It is hardly worthy of a Christian manhood to "take the benefit of the act" by creeping into one's sepulchre. Let us see to it that no reproaches of the wronged and the defrauded are ever heard above our sleeping dust.

2. Have you made your will? Some men are absolutely afraid to make their wills, lest death should overhear the scratch of the pen, and be the sooner in his summons to them to lay down the pen for ever. This is a strange and yet a very common superstition. Many a man dreads to draw up a will as if it were the signing of his own death-warrant. We will waste no words on such preposterous folly. Make a will, my friend! if you have no more property to devise than had that poor minister of Christ who sat down and wrote, "I bequeath to my darling wife my Bible and my sermons and my few books; to my dear children I bequeath these words, I have been young and now I am old, yet have I never seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread." The first provision in a good man's will should be for those whom God has made fairly dependent on him. Healthy and well-educated children do not always, of necessity, belong to this class. But infirm parents and bedridden kinsfolk commonly do. When we have provided for all who have an honest claim on our posthumous support, then it is wisest to make Christ our largest legatee. Whatever you leave to your children may be squandered; and in such a way too as to squander their moral character. But whatever you give to Jesus Christ, for the support of his enterprises of heaven-born charity, never can be lost. Christians—ay, and impenitent worldlings too—ought to remember that their wills are not only to be recorded in the surrogate's office, but in those books which will be opened on the day of judgment. Give everything you can spare to the Lord while you live; and leave him the rest when you die. It will be a blessed thing to have some well-trained orphan, or liberated slave, or Christianized outcast, come and plant roses on our tomb, and say with grateful tears, "Here lies one who cared for my soul."

3. Are you forgiven?

We do not refer now to such unhappy griefs or injuries as you may have thoughtlessly or intentionally inflicted on your fellow-men. Let not the sun of life go down on such wrongs unatoned. Let no injuries or harsh words unrepaired be buried with you in your coffin. It will be enough to make the nettles grow out of the greensward that covers your ashes.

But we refer especially at present to that forgiveness that you are to seek through the mediation of the Savior. Friend! you need forgiveness. That long, hideous catalogue of sins; not mere mistakes, not mere slips of the hand and tongue, not mere infirmities, but sins black as midnight in God's view, they must be forgiven or you are lost. Those evil words that ought to have blistered the mouth that uttered them—those ungrateful deeds flung back into the face of heavenly love—those breakings of God's holy law—those profaned Sabbaths, and lost opportunities for saving souls—those woundings of Christ and grievings of the Spirit—those sins so exceeding sinful, have they been blotted out? The path of pardon you probably know. It leads to the cross of Christ. "Through his name who ever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins." In the pages of my Bible I read, "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Have you made honest confession of your offenses against God? Have you clenched the sincerity of your confession by abandoning all discovered sin, and by refusing any quarter to your dearest lusts? Have you earnestly and believingly sought pardon through the atoning Savior? Then do not distress yourself about any "unpardonable sin." There will be none such standing against you on God's book. For he has pledged himself to forgive every sin that you repent of in the name of Christ, and which you abandon to please your Redeemer. Blessed is the man whose transgressions are covered! Blessed is the man to whom God imputeth not sin!

4. Our last test question is, Are you regenerate? Have you a new heart? Have you had a new spiritual disposition implanted within you by the Holy Ghost? To the troubled Nicodemus Jesus said, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The new birth is an event of which a man is conscious. The very hour in which divine grace wrought the great change may not be always a well-defined date in the memory. But the change itself, the transfer of the affections from the things of earth to God, the incoming of new feelings, new aims, and new hopes, are quite as distinct matters of consciousness as the joy of meeting a returning child or the pang of parting from a parent. If you are a child of God, you ought to know it. And from your character and conduct, other people too ought to recognize the fact. Are you thus regenerate? Do not deem us impertinent or intrusive in pressing the question. For "except a man be converted, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

Many other important questions might be started. But if you can give a prompt unhesitating Yes to the above-named interrogations, then fear not to hear your own name in the fatal roll call. You are ready to answer "Here!" You need not to be either ashamed or afraid to make your appearance at the door of your Father's house. That door will open to you with an "abundant entrance." You will need to shed no tears on your dying bed. In view of parting with life you may say, with one of England's sweet singers:

"Life! we have been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather.
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear,
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Sly not good-night; but in that happier clime,
Bid me good-morning!"

MENTAL prayer, when our spirits wander, is like a watch standing still, because the spring is down; wind it up again, and it goes on regularly. But in vocal prayer, if the words run on and the spirit wanders, the clock strikes false, the hands point not to the right hour, because something is in disorder, and the striking is nothing but noise. In mental prayers we confess God's omniscience; in vocal prayer we call angels to witness. In the first our spirits rejoice in God, in the second the angels rejoice in us. Mental prayer is the best remedy against lightness and indifference of affections, but vocal prayer is the aptest instrument of communion. That is more angelical, but yet is fittest for the state of separation and glory; this is but human, but it is apter for our present constitution. They have their distinct proprieties, and may be used according to several accidents, occasions or dispositions.—Jeremy Taylor.

As when two wrestle together, if the one can lift the other's feet from the ground, he will easily give him a fall, so the devil, if he by pride can lift our feet from the ground, will easily give us a fall.

HIS OPEN SIDE.

BY JAS. Y. BECKLER.

When the Lord created Adam,
Of mankind the first, alone,
Then he placed him in a garden
For to keep it as his own.
And he gave the man dominion
Over all created things,
That he might demand subjection,
Like the oriental kings.

Then he made the man somnolent;
In his sleep he pierced his side,
Took a bone and made a woman,
And presented him his bride.
Oh, they were a loving couple
In each other's fond embrace,
To the blissful laud of Eden!
For it was a holy place.

Then they came into temptation,
To the state of Paradise;
Did not keep but lost the garden—
Lost it, too, with open eyes.
And the tempter took his kingdom,
Took the garden for his own;
Took it all by usurpation,
Driving Adam from his throne.

Then was sin-polluted Adam
Driven out to till the soil,
And to labor for his living,
Sorrowing in sweat and toil.
And on all his generation
Came the curse of sin and death;
Though the woman's seed was promised,
Loag they looked for him in faith.

Then there came the second Adam,
The incarnate Son of God,
Who, to ransom every sinner,
Interposed his precious blood.
Him the wicked people hated,
And condemned and crucified,
And they mocked him and derided—
And the sinners pierced his side.

Now his bleeding side is open,
For it has not yet been healed,
But his bride is soaking ready
In due time to be revealed.
When his bride has been presented,
Will be closed his open side,
And the marriage celebrated,
By the Bridegroom and the Bride.

Such a marriage celebration
Ne'er was held in all the land,
With unrivalled ceremonies,
So imposing and so grand:
Kings and priests will be attendants
Wearing diadems of gold;
And the glory and the splendor,
Will be more than can be told.

Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist; but by ascending a little you may look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement; we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which would have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.

Close of the Discussion Between Miller and Walker.

I shall now give you a brief sketch of the discussion of the last two propositions.

7. The teaching and practice of the German Baptists, on the subject of the salutation of the Holy Kiss is strictly scriptural. Miller affirms.

8. The teaching and practice of the Disciples, on the subject of the salutation of the Holy Kiss is strictly scriptural. Walker affirms.

The discussion of these two propositions occupied only one day; brother Miller, as noticed above, being in the affirmative on the first, and elder Walker, on the second.

Brother Miller presented as his first general argument, that God, in organizing his church upon the earth, had the right to make laws for its government. He had wisdom and power enough to contrive and execute means necessary to preserve and save his children; and it has always been safe to follow God's law, and unsafe and dangerous to disregard it.

2. We teach that the salutation of the holy kiss should be observed, because it is imperatively commanded in the teachings of the apostles; Rom. 16: 16; 1 Cor. 16: 20; 2 Cor. 13: 12; 1 Thess. 5: 26; 1 Peter 5: 14. There are many ways or modes of saluting in use in the world, and always have been; such as, firing cannon, cheering, waving the hand, waving a handkerchief, bowing to the earth; but God selected as his salutation that of the kiss, and commanded his children to salute one another with a "holy kiss." He might have selected some other form of salutation and commanded his disciples to salute one another by it; or he might have commanded them to salute one another without pointing out the manner in which they were to do so, leaving his children to select from the various forms of salutation in use in the world, and adopt that which they preferred; but he did not do so. He did not only command his children to salute one another, but told them how, by specifying the form of salutation which they shall use—the kiss.

3. This form of salutation has always been considered the one most expressive of love, and in selecting the form so expressive of love, he adds holiness to that of love or charity, of which this form is so expressive, and commands his children to salute one another with the "holy kiss of charity." It must be holy, for God makes it such; and he has therefore given to his children, in the salutation commanded by him, the two most sacred principles in the church—holiness and charity.

This makes it truly a salutation to the child of God—a salutation around which clusters much that to the Christian is important and sacred—a salutation or command which he is not only willing to observe whenever a proper opportunity is offered, but one which he is unwilling to pass by as unimportant or non-essential.

4. It is commanded to be practiced in the church. The church must practice the salutation in some way, or it fails to be apostolic. When and where it is to be observed, the church must ascertain by looking over the Scriptures, and determine from their general teachings when and where it is proper to observe it, the same as with singing and prayer. Christians are commanded to sing and to pray; but it is nowhere taught where they must sing, and where they must not sing. We are commanded to sing and pray with the Spirit and with the understanding also. So we are commanded to salute one another with the holy kiss of charity; but are left to judge when and where it is proper and appropriate to do so. The Savior teaches, "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" and the child of God who loves his commandments, will obey or observe them whenever an opportunity is offered where it is deemed prudent and edifying.

To sustain his part in the discussion of the above proposition, and to affirm the teaching and practice of his church on the above subject, strictly scriptural, elder Walker just brought forward a copy of the Pilgrim containing the discussion upon the salutation at the last Annual Meeting. In this he seemed to think he had all that was necessary to overthrow brother Miller's arguments. He occupied nearly one half hour's speech in reading from the Pilgrim, and ridiculing the brethren, or rather the salutation of the kiss. He seemed to be quite successful with that part of the audience, who were inclined to be interested in anything bordering on mirthfulness; and I could not fault them so much, for he proved himself more successful in ridiculing the truth, than in bringing forward tangible arguments to overthrow it.

He dwelled at length upon the difference Annual Meeting made in the salutation with reference to colored members, and said that here the practice of the salutation was the cause of a trouble, of which we could not rid ourselves until we abandoned it—that in Christ there was neither male or female and yet we made a difference by not permitting the brethren and the sisters to salute each other with the "holy kiss;" and said he would not object to the practice, if he were allowed to kiss the sisters. Thus he went on, imagining, I think, that he had found that with which he could overturn brother Miller's broad platform laid down in his first speech, on the sure foundation of truth.

Brother Miller, having listened to all the ridicule that could be brought against the truth, and heaped upon him and his brethren, without any visible mark of being irritated or chagrined, appeared before that anxious audience, in his usual cool, pleasant and Christ-like manner, evidently not surprised at the treatment the truth received from his opponent in his last speech, and at once pointed the audience to the fact, that because there were some in the church who were unwilling to accept the commandments of their blessed Master, and yield implicit obedience to them, irrespective of person, and so caused trouble, that, that did not remove the imperative command of inspiration, nor make it null and void; but that the command stood there as it did before, and that because men did not want to obey it, was no argument that it was not commanded, but was a very strong proof that it is a divine command, since it was treated just as many of the other commandments of our Lord are treated by men who are unwilling to yield their wills to the simple teachings of the inspired writers. The divisions in the church have all come in the same way, by men who would have their own way instead of following God's ways. The only way for the church to be in union, is to teach and practice now, what was taught and practiced eighteen hundred years ago.

When elder Walker found that by the course pursued in his first speech he failed to carry the point; but that brother Miller used it advantageously in support of his affirmative, he went to Psalms 2: 10, and read, "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed ye judges of the earth. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little." He took from this, "kiss the son," and turned "quaker" on the subject of the salutation, by making it a spiritual something, separate and apart from the literal, and tried to hold the little Miller at bay, by quoting Paul's language to 1 Thess., "Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss." He dwelled upon the word all, and insisted that Paul's teaching was that all the brethren, living and dead, present and absent, must be saluted, and that it was impossible to do so in a literal way, but that it could be done, and that Paul meant that it should be done by a spiritual salutation—that this was the only way in which we could "kiss the Son." This he advanced as the teaching and practice of his church in affirming the eight proposition.

Brother Miller found his teaching with reference to the spiritual salutation separate and apart from the literal conflicting with his teaching and practice upon other commandments; and told him that he would consider him more consistent, and respect him more for spiritualizing all the commandments, than to obey some literally in order to realize the spiritual part, and in others separate the literal and spiritual part, and take the spiritual alone, simply because he did not like to observe the literal part, or because it made trouble.

At this juncture, Walker argued that he had no objections to practicing the literal part, when he felt like doing so, and that there was something good in it, and related his own practice and experience in having literally saluted Peter Russel, one of their prominent preachers, because he felt like doing so; and would have his brethren do so whenever they felt like doing so. In this way he managed to unite the spiritual and the literal before he got through, and spoiled the spiritual fabric which he had built; and permitted brother Miller to wind up this point of difference like the others, standing in defense of what Jesus and the apostles taught and practiced, against one who was defending his teaching and practice by resorting to Scripture renderings that to intelligent minds were not unfrequently questionable; and rid himself of brother Miller's arguments in a manner that to some bore the appearance of misrepresentation. Thus the seven days discussion at Pipe Creek closed.

When the discussion opened Walker, with his able assistants, was early at the place, ready to enter upon the work, with all confidence. Miller, detained by missing connections, and being obliged to walk half a dozen miles over rough roads, came late; and when he did arrive was much fatigued; and finding those brethren whom he expected to be by his side during the discussion, not there, he was obliged to call to his assistance, such as chanced to be next to him when he arrived. These reverses taken into consideration, contrasted very strikingly in elder Walker's favor; and, of course against brother Miller. Both, however, entered upon their work with very good feelings, and a zeal that was praise-worthy. The audience, too, manifested a remarkable degree of interest. The roads were almost impassable for teams, yet the people assembled, day after day, and the brethren and friends living in the neighborhood very kindly opened their houses, and loaded their tables with the bounties of earth, for those who came from a distance; so that no one in attendance had anything to detract his mind from the subjects under consideration.

The disputants seemed to realize that they had a work to perform, and threw their energies into it; and while they were engaged in doing their best, (as they repeatedly avowed,) they gave every student of human nature a favorable opportunity to contrast their widely different temperaments, and compare the degree of Christian refinement in character as exhibited during the discussion. Elder Walker, a man of ordinary height, and, judging from what I saw and heard, ordinary attainments, called into use his spacious lungs, his skill to press home his arguments by explosive vociferations and repeated gesticulations. Brother Miller, in his calm, earnest, inviting, yet pointed mode of delivery, framed and set up to full view his own arguments, and held up for criticism those of his opponent in such a manner, that forced the conviction home to the heart of every sober thinker, that he was honestly seeking to defend the truth. This straight forward, unassuming, truth-crowned manner of meeting the issue, and his unwillingness to compromise with error, won many friends for brother Miller, and, we trust, many more for the truth. When the final negative was closed, a very solemn feeling prevailed throughout the assembly, and not a few tears stole their way over the cheeks of many present. May the Lord cause much good to grow out of this effort in defense of the truth, to whom be all the praise now and evermore. Amen.

Fraternally yours,

BEYOND the partition that bounds the depository of our needs in this life, is found the "place" which Jesus went to "prepare;" "the many mansions;" the "thrones" and "dominions," "principalities" and "powers." There are the "crowns," and "harps," and "songs." There is the reunion with "loved ones gone before." There is the exemption from all the ills of earth—which are the results of sin. There is the resurrection of the dead—the Christian's complete triumph. There is Christ Jesus, by whom all our needs are supplied, "according to His—(the Father's)—riches in glory," around whose throne we shall gaze on the glorious vision, and the ever-growing rapture of an endless heaven.

Self-Righteousness.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

In consideration that the righteous be scarcely saved: how desperately contemptible must a self-righteous man appear in the sight of Him who cannot be deceived! His boasting is mockery, and his self-righteousness a garment that hides no nakedness. The Almighty holds him in derision and sees him as he is. The cloak of self-righteousness is filthy, it is ragged and full of holes, mending it makes it worse; it cannot be washed in the blood of Christ, neither can it be cleansed in any way. It is an old, tattered and dirty garment that the devil had on when he fell, and after his fall brought along into the world and hung on the bushes for Adam to hide in.

How disagreeable in the eyes of a meek and lowly Christian, is a puffed up, self-righteous, self-deceived, fault-finding deceiver: though an humble cross-bearer is seldom deceived by hypocrites. Hepties them yet he cannot help them, and dares not cast his pearls before them lest like swine they turn and rend him. Every soul that is pressing into the kingdom of heaven must be divested of all self-righteousness, and all arrogance, and all superfluity and naughtiness: "because, strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Seest thou a man who needs no repentance, no conversion, who does no evil, but is righteous in his own eyes, there is more hope for a fool than for such a man. The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before he does. Just hear such a one talk! His words are like oil. He is certain that God is very merciful, and that he will not be cast off; or he may profess to be converted, (aye converted on his own conditions) and, to have experienced the forgiveness of his sins; and if he is one of that class, he will have much to boast of what he has felt in his heart, and how certain he is that he is enjoying the benefit of great grace from God, when, at the time he is vauntingly relating his own good deeds, he may be heard sneering and tauntingly abusing the meek and lowly followers of Jesus.

Deluded people! you refer them to the commandments of Christ, and what is their answer? Why, they will tell you the commandments are only ceremonies, and that they are not essential to salvation, they put great stress on having religion in the heart, rejecting Christ when he says "He that loveth me keepeth my commandments." And so it is. There is no commandment too small or insignificant for those who love him. People who wrap themselves up in that old, musty garment of self-righteousness, have never come to a knowledge of the truth, "being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." And let me tell you dear reader, they are more pernicious, more injurious to the cause of Christ and his kingdom than thieves and robbers. How presumptuous is that man who worships himself, and fancies himself spiritually in the kingdom of Christ, when he is openly at war with the church, hostile to its members, opposed to its ordinances, at variance with its government, picking at flaws, trying to stigmatize and calumniate its members. How ignorant, how blinded, how self-deceived, how depraved and how desperately wicked is that man! His morality is corrupted, it is profaned, it is rotten to the core, and the truth is not in him.

How disappointed and utterly defeated will those self-righteous, self-justifying, self-worshipping, self-deceiving hypocrites appear, standing before the Judge of all the earth, boasting of their service in the promotion of Christ's kingdom, but hearing the denunciation, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."

[The following is clipped from the Vindicator, by request of elder Isaac Price, of Schuylkill, Pa., who, in reference to it, says: "Excellent—with Full Report added. * * * Add to it for me, 'If full report is assured, we will stay at home.' Then only delegates and overseers need go. The number would then be comparatively few. We feel that we are entitled to know by what process of reasoning the conclusions are reached." B]

To the Committee—Annual Meeting.

In the January number of the Vindicator (this year) we see a notice of place and arrangements for next Annual Meeting, and that it is understood that no boarding-tent be erected on the grounds, nor allow trafficking of any kind. From this we infer that it is meant not to feed a mixed multitude, with which arrangements I do most heartily concur, and have reason to hope will be approved of by the masses of the church. It is a step in the right direction; and now, if it could be arranged also that none but the church shall be present in the council, the arrangement will be still nearer complete, and more in harmony with the manner of doing our church business at home; and, above all, with Matthew xviii.

Could we but unite upon a plan of this kind, we can not help but think the business of such meetings would be very much accelerated, and thus the church would enjoy a full, free, and untrammelled immunity—being freed from the great throngs who are ever present upon such occasions.

Trusting you will give this subject prayerful consideration, and believing the good Lord will so order and control all things to the best and highest interests of the church, and the well-being of all, I am yours, in love.

Baptism.

BY JOHN H. PECK.

Though the different modes of baptism have been discussed and agitated for centuries, each particular mode continues to have its adherents, and points that seem plain to some are obscure to others. Sometimes we are inclined to believe that it is more on account of lack of willingness to obey, than of ability to understand the true Bible import of the one baptism spoken of by Paul in Eph. 4:5. But be that as it may, it is evident that there are some very strange assertions made use of in order to defeat that most repugnant of all modes of baptism, namely, trine immersion; and though this method of baptism has been thoroughly investigated by the brethren, and to me satisfactorily demonstrated, that it was the baptism believed in and practiced by the apostles and their successors, and hence is the only method recognized by inspiration as baptism, yet it is too true that many of the brethren and sisters are still wholly unprepared to defend themselves when attacked by some of our captious opponents.

It is admitted by many, that baptizo means to dip or plunge, to cover up, to overwhelm; but they claim that one immersion is one baptism, and that is all the gospel demands. Recently a brother came to me and said, that a certain member of the Christian church, (who believes in single immersion,) told him that in order to be consistent with or theory, we ought to take the candidate clear out of the water every time; because, he argued we do not baptize the whole person three times, but only the upper part, while the lower part receives but one immersion. This is considered strong argument, and many of the brethren are often puzzled with this groundless assertion. Upon the same hypothesis we might argue that the advocates of single immersion should not let any part of the candidate get into the water, until they have said, "I baptize thee" &c. then plunge him all in at once; or else they should be careful not to use the pronoun thee, which means the whole person; but should be particular to designate to the bystanders as well as the candidate, that the upper part of the body,—or that which has not already been baptized by entering the stream—is now to be baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This class of reasoners does not recognize that any part of the candidate is baptized until he is entirely immersed under water; and upon the same ground we claim that going into the water, and being in the water half way up, is no part of the ceremony of baptism; but every time the candidate is wholly submerged, he is once baptized; and as the sacred record gives us no authority to baptize in the names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, we cannot see how one baptism taken in the sense of one immersion can fill the bill. Our single immersionists must admit, that, if they would baptize a person in the name of the Father only, they would have to do exactly what they now do; and likewise in the name of the Son, or of the Holy Ghost. Then how in the name of all that is reasonable can they baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," and only baptize once. But I claim they do not do it. They say, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father," but they do not do it; "and of the Son," still they do not do it; "and of the Holy Ghost," then they for the first and only time baptize. Now their candidate is either only baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost, or else one-third baptized in each of the three names. The objection that we only baptize part of the candidate in the three names is easily obviated when we take into consideration that the person is not baptized at all until he is entirely covered over with water; hence we are particular that the candidate is placed entirely under water, in honor of each name; and there can be no valid argument produced against its being a complete baptism in each of the three holy names, the combination of which constitutes the one baptism of the gospel.

Man of God vs. Jeroboam.

BY LEVI HOFFERD.

Jeroboam was the first king of Israel after the ten tribes revolted. He caused Israel to sin against the Lord, by making "two golden calves, and building high places." And while the king was standing by the altar to offer burnt incense unto his gods, "behold, there came a man of God out of Juda by the word of the Lord unto Bethel." And he cried against the proceedings of the wicked king and gave a sign; wherefore the king cried, "Lay hold on him." And his hand which he put forth against the man of God, dried up so that he could not pull it to him again. What takes place now? Why the sign comes to pass viz., "The altar was rent, and the ashes poured out." 1 Kings 13:5 But how does the proud king feel—seeing the power of the "living God?" Hear his words, "Entreat now the face of the Lord thy God and pray for me that my hand may be restored." God is merciful to the penitent, therefore the king's hand was restored.

After this the man of God refused a reward of the king, saying, "For so was it charged me by the word of the Lord, saying, eat no bread nor drink water nor turn again by the same way that thou camest." But we find on his way back an old prophet overtook him; and by lying and deception, prevailed on the man of God to disobey a divine command. So when the man of God starts out again, he is met by a lion and slain. A man of God slain for one sin. Let us take heed; for if we disobey a command of Jesus we may also suffer death. After this the old prophet buried the man of God and mourned, saying, "Alas, my brother!" No wonder the king did not turn from his evil after these things. Therefore, let us professing Godliness not be as children of disobedience, causing the wicked to feel justified in their course.

Religion in Business.

Christian men must not attempt to separate their religion from their business. No doubt there may appear, even to an honest mind, to be some reason for trying to do it. There is a maxim that "business is business;" that is, it is not mixed with friendship or charity. So a man may perhaps be tenacious of all that is due to him in making a trade, and may abate nothing. He may choose to serve his friends, or bestow his charities, in a different manner and as part of a separate transaction.

So far, perhaps, no fault need be found. And where, exactly, the wrong begins, it may not be easy to say. But it does begin somewhere. And the beginning may be near at hand. A man must be a Christian in his business. All that this means, it is not for us now to undertake to say. But it is for him to find out if he will be a Christian. It is plain that a man may not be hard and grasping and selfish in his business transactions. Business, too, with most persons, occupies so large a share of life, that if religion and charity are kept out of it, they will have but small space left to cover. It is but a poor shift to grind the laborer in his wages, and then give him a dollar in pity. Have love for him, rather, when you hire him, and act like a Christian when you pay him. This will be more to the credit of your religion in his mind, and more pleasing, we may not doubt, in the sight of God, than much making up afterward by gifts. The gifts, withal, afterward are apt to be forgotten.

The Bible rule is, "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Certainly this must cover the doing of our regular work, which is the main thing we do. The question how the management of our business can be made to appear to be, and actually to be, thoroughly Christian in its rules and purposes, is one of some difficulty; but it is also one of indispensable practical importance; and one of the very first for each individual to lay hold of and settle.—Congregationalist.

I HAVE no sympathy with those who would make the Sabbath a day of gloom; I would have the sun to shine brighter, and the flowers to smell sweeter, and nature to look fairer on that day than on any other; I would have the very earth to put on her holiday attire on the blest morning on which the blessed Savior rose, and on this day, above all others, would like a flood of comforts to flow in on the households of our poor. It has always afforded me great satisfaction and delight to read how kindly and wisely David mingled earthly mercies with spiritual blessings. Does it teach us no lesson to read how, on the occasion of bringing up the ark, when he had made an end of offering up the burnt offerings and the peace offerings, and blessing the people, "he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, to every one a loaf of bread and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine."—Dr. Guthrie.

"Our Father."

BY D. B. MENTZER.

"To our bountiful Father above,
We will offer the tribute of praise;
For the glorious gift of His love,
And the blessings that hallow our days."

The name of an earthly father is held in honor and reverence by every dutiful son. By whatever childish title we may have addressed him in the days of our childhood, yet we have learned to love him most dearly, and esteem his presence with delight. And why? Because of the intimate associations, and loving attentions, growing out of his paternal relationship. Not only did he care for our necessities, and our frequent wants ever since our infancy, but, as a true father, tried to direct our wayward hearts in the right way; but more than this, as a pious father, he endeavored to mould our youthful spirits into the path of rectitude and knowledge of God. Such a father is a blessing of God! O what a useful and glorious life we might live in this world of ours, if our parents would train our lips to speak the language of heaven, and impress, with the power of fervent prayer, the truths of the Holy Scriptures—the historical points, the parables and illustrations given by our Lord, the many and touching incidents of His sacred and suffering life here among men, and, sacred as all these are, I would have them teach, plainly and fully, the commands and precepts of our Savior, in which is the only true way of salvation. My dear young friends, covet such a life, give your parents a chance to train you so, and don't be ashamed nor afraid to tell them you love the Bible for its Author and its blessed teachings. You are not ashamed to sing those beautiful lines:

"Tell me the old, old story,
Of unseen things above,
Of Jesus and His glory
Of Jesus and His love.
Tell me the story simply
As to a little child,
For I am weak and weary,
And helpless and defiled.

Tell me the story slowly,
That I may take it in—
That wonderful redemption
God's remedy for sin.
Tell me the story often,
For I forget so soon!
The "early dew" of morning
Has passed away at noon.

Tell me the story softly
With earnest tones and grave;
Remember! I'm the sinner
Whom Jesus came to save.
Tell me that story always,
If you would really be,
In any time of trouble,
A comforter to me."

You love to sing this, and join in its sublime melody, but the "better part" is to realize it in seeking the Lord. If you seek Him, you will find Him, and He will be to you "the chief among ten thousand, and a precious Savior."

If you don't now feel that you are lost in your sins, you know there is danger--DANGER--DANGER. Heaven is barred and securely closed against all who do not "love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," and "keep His commandments." Dreadful thought! O seek Him, seek Him early, seek Him now, and you shall find Him to your everlasting joy.

Thus a pious father would train you, and this is a better inheritance than a farm.

When your earthly father shall have run his race of life, and has given you his dying words of advice: "Seek the Lord" or "Be faithful in Christ," then you will weep over his departing form, and commit him to the God of the resurrection. Then you will remember his pious example and religious teaching, if he was such a father. If he was not such a father, I sympathize with you, and feel glad that I can refer you and invite you to read the Scriptures, to hear the preacher as he "preaches the word," to read and heed the calls and admonitions of the brethren and sisters who sincerely labor through the Primitive Christian to lead you to Christ—to a higher and better life—to be sons and daughters of our Father in Heaven.

"Our Father." What a sweet address this! Though our earthly father has departed, we have a "Father in Heaven," whose care is equal to all the wants of both soul and body. He cares for us always. And though we have a father and mother of eminent kindness and piety, and all the comforts and pleasures this world can afford, yet our spirits which are destined to live forever, need a Father for our spiritual care, and to whom we can commit ourselves in death. And why should we not commit ourselves to Him now—just now. Since He has promised to be a Father to us, and, by our obedience, make us his children, why not seek his face now, "in the days of thy youth," before you are surrounded by the cares of this life? what is in your way?

"You Came Up From Below, Did You Not?"

I had left my study for a few moments, and had gone down into the cellar, for an apple to eat. Said sister G., as I came up from the cellar into the house eating the apple, "You came up from below, did you not?" "Yes," said I, "there are good things below sometimes." All this passed at random, but how truly do "good things come up from below sometimes." Since I have entered my study, many thoughts of lowly things are before me. Only a few I will name, as my time is limited, and the reader may think of others: The grand mansions of our cities, were once the lowly clay and stone in the bowels of the earth. The most of our great and good men, who have lived in the past, who live to-day, "came up from below," i. e., from lowly boyhood, poverty, and humility; but there was something good in them while in the depths of humility and poverty; they were planted lowly in fertile soil, and grow. Why, think of the best one of all, Jesus, the name high over all. True, God sent him from heaven above, but he sent him through the lowly stable as his birth-place, and the manger his cradle. He came through lowly Nazareth. Where is He now? At the right hand of God, after his passage through the lowly grave, exalted forevermore, pleading for sinners. No sinner can become a Christian, which "is the highest style of man," until he passes through the depths of humility and repentance toward God.

In the last day it shall be said of all God's children: "these are they that came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Despair not, afflicted, lowly and humble child of God! He will say, after a while, "It is enough, come up higher.—F. H. M. in Golden Censer."

From Christ comes the lesson that ill-will, anger, self-worship, are only painful blemishes upon the soul, and that until man can deal in perfect kindness with those who differ from him, he is yet far down in the depths of barbarism. One of our public men, who had lived a long and serene public life, confessed lately that from early manhood he had felt that he could not afford to get angry at an opponent, because anger seemed such a disgrace to the soul.—Prof. Swing.

SEED-TRUTHS.

One of the comparisons used by our Lord to illustrate the truth which he taught, was that in which he compared it to seed. "The seed is the word of God," said he in one of his parables.—And while the word of God is the seed, the "fruits of righteousness" are the productions of that seed when it is planted in good ground, and when the plants which grow from it reach maturity. But there is another view of seed which we desire to present, and which illustrates another peculiarity of Christian truth; and that is the vital power which is in seed by which it multiplies itself. It is more or less so with all kinds of truth, but especially is it the case with Christian truth. "The words that I speak unto you," said Jesus, "they are spirit, and they are life."

Our writers who have written on the mind, and who have endeavored to explain the different powers of the mind and their various operations, say that simple ideas, which constitute the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnished to the mind by sensation and reflection. Much of our knowledge, no doubt, is furnished us by sensation, or comes through the senses. But this is not the case with all our knowledge.—Some of the thoughts or ideas of which the mind becomes possessed, are obtained without the aid of the senses, and by what is called suggestion. The mind by its own activity and vigor gives rise to certain thoughts, and the power by which this is done is called suggestion. It often happens that when the mind is conscious, or brought to reflect on one thing, some other thing, bearing some relation to the first, but not before thought of, is suggested to the mind by the power of suggestion. This is a very important power or operation of the mind. And when the mind is in a healthy state, or in a favorable condition for action, and live and stimulating truth is brought to bear upon it, the happy result will be the production of new thoughts and ideas, which will be refreshing and entertaining to the mind. And where persons are religiously exercised in their minds, and have Christian truth presented to them, and suffer that truth, or rather desire it, to have free course to their minds, the consequence will be not only an increase of divine knowledge, but also an increase of spiritual edification and joy.

All our readers who have cultivated the habit of reflection, and have obtained a sufficient control over their minds to concentrate them at times upon one subject, or upon some thought of the author whose book they are reading, or of the speaker to whose discourse they are listening, and who have carefully watched the working of their minds under these circumstances, have experienced the result of the power of suggestion, and have had their minds enriched, not only by the ideas which they have received from others, but also by those produced or generated by the free and vigorous action of their own minds, these ideas bearing some relation to and suggested by what they have read or heard from others. We often hear it said by persons after they have heard or read something, that such and such ideas were suggested to their minds in hearing and reading. And they do not mean by this, that these ideas were the ideas of the speaker that they heard, or the author that they read, but additional ideas—ideas which were produced in their minds by those seed truths which were received from the written or spoken discourse under the influence of which they had been brought.

The value of a book or discourse is not to be estimated simply from what ideas it contains, but rather from its power to awaken thought, and to suggest new ideas to the mind. Some books and sermons possess this power to awaken thought and produce new ideas in the mind much more than others. This has been noticed by the most of careful and attentive readers. And that is the kind of reading that is the most profitable. It is true, much depends upon the state of the reader's mind, in regard to the amount of ideas which seed truths produce, as much depends upon the quality of the soil in regard to the amount produced by vegetable seed. Nevertheless, much depends also upon the vitality that the seed truths possess, and the manner in which they are presented, in making them productive. And this fact should not be lost sight of by speakers and writers.

There is no book so suggestive of thoughts and ideas as the Bible. It is indeed to the mind in love with truth, "ever charming, ever new." What sermons have been preached, and what books have been written upon it! And still to the future humble student how many grand and practical ideas will be suggested by a faithful study of it, of which former ones felt not the thrilling joy nor saw the divine beauty.

Practical to make books and sermons as profound and profitable as possible, we should look upon the truths which they contain as seed truths, and plant them in our own minds, that they may produce a crop of new thoughts and ideas for our own and other's edification and improvement. We have met with some ministers whose language seemed to imply that they did not want to read any sermons, fearing apparently that it might be thought that they preached other men's sermons. Now to preach other men's sermons, especially without giving them credit for them, is not by any means a commendable practice. It is neither doing justice, by those who do it, to themselves, nor to those whose sermons they thus use. We should use our own minds in producing ideas, and in making applications of truth, if we would improve them and prepare them for useful labor.

But to preach the sermons of others as our own, and to take the truths we may gather from sermons and make them seed truths suggestive of other truths, or to take them and use them in other connections, or with new applications, and with some improvement in suiting them to the occasion upon which we use them, are two very different things. The latter course is justifiable and commendable, while the former is neither. In the former course we are doing as the manufacturer does. He takes the raw material, and works it into such goods as his customers need. The Christian philanthropist and reformer will take the raw material of Christian truth wherever he finds it, whether in the Bible, in Christian literature, or anywhere else, and they will put it in such a form as will best subserve their noble purpose to promote the present and eternal interests of the needy, wretched and lost, who come within the limits of their influence, and the field of their labors. And so should every person do, who would make the best use of truth, and desire the most advantage from it. One truth should become the seed-truth to other truths, and thus, in time, we may become "full of grace and truth."

"THE DOCTRINE OF THE BROTHERS DEFENDED."

Such is the title of Bro. R. H. Miller's book which has been promised for some time, and recently issued from the press. It discusses at considerable length, a number of the subjects peculiar to our Christian Fraternity; or, if not confined altogether to our Fraternity, they are not all observed by the more popular religious denominations of the present time, as the brethren observe them. The author discusses his subjects principally in the light of the Bible, and does it in the spirit of moderation and apparent candor. His language is plain and his reasoning generally good and his conclusions commonly just.

Under the head of Non-conformity, a delicate and difficult subject is treated judiciously. He draws his arguments from the Bible, and none who accept that book as the proper standard of Christian faith and practice, constantly object to his general conclusions. The plan of his work is somewhat peculiar. After stating the arguments to prove his positions in regard to the subjects discussed, the author under the head of "Reply" answers what he considers the more prominent arguments advanced against his positions. Brother Miller having discussed the most of the subjects treated of in his book in public discussions, has introduced the method of treating both the positive and negative side of the subject, into his work.

Without giving our unqualified sanction, with our present acquaintance with this book, to every idea advanced, we are happy to say there is as far as we have examined the book, a very general agreement between the author's views and our own upon the subjects discussed.

There are some typographical errors in the work that are to be regretted, especially those occurring in proper names. The name of Meane occurs instead of Moore, as the author of a life of Wesley, on page 175. We think the work is calculated to do good, and hope it will prove remunerative to the author, who no doubt, has given it much thought and labor, and blessing to the church and to the world.

The book is for sale at this office, at $1.60 a copy by mail postage prepaid.

BRO. L. W. TEETER of Hagerstown, Ind., has published a small tract on Trine Immersion, basing his arguments principally upon an analysis of the baptismal formula contained in the great commission. As the arguments generally are an appeal to grammar, it is desirable that the reader should have some knowledge of grammar to fully appreciate the work. To the attentive and inquiring reader however, we think the arguments and illustrations used by the author may be suggestive of profitable thought. We should have noticed the work at an earlier day, but it was deferred for want of time.

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom."—MATT. xvi. 27, 28.

The questions are these:

1st. What is the kingdom referred to? Is it the New Jerusalem, to be established at, or after the last judgment day? or is it something else?

2nd. What death is meant? Was it the second death?

3rd. Who were the persons spoken of who were not to taste of death? It is evident there were more than one.

Now, brother Quinter, please answer these few questions, and by doing so, you will confer a favor on a brother who is seeking after light and truth.

Yours in the faith of Christ,

G. A. VANBUREN.

Carleton, Neb.

ANSWER.—The kingdom referred to in the text we are looking at, and which is referred to in the first part of the query, is the kingdom of Christ for which he is now preparing his people, and which will be fully manifested and established at his second advent. This kingdom is connected in the Scriptures with the second coming of our Lord. Paul says to Timothy, "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 1. In this glorious state, Christians shall reign with Christ, for they shall be made "kings and priests," and shall "reign on the earth." Rev. v. 10. "The Lord shall be King over all the earth," (Zech. xiv. 9.) and his authority universally acknowledged. The many glorious events that are to characterize the reign of our Lord and his saints, we cannot now notice, neither does the subject require it.

In answer to the second question, we would say, we think it was natural death that was referred to. And in answering the third question we would say, we understand the persons alluded to are Peter, James and John, the three disciples who witnessed our Lord's transfiguration on the mountain. This transfiguration was the "coming of the Son of Man in his kingdom," to which the Savior alluded in the language of the passage we are explaining. The three disciples already named saw this transfiguration before their death, and therefore the promise of our Lord, "There be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom," was fulfilled.

We look upon the transfiguration as a partial or as one fulfillment of the prophecy of our Lord in the text concerning his coming, which we are offering some thoughts upon. From the transfiguration we can form some idea of what the coming of Christ in his kingdom will be like. His own glorious appearance, when he comes in his kingdom, will be similar to his appearance on the mountain when he was transfigured. And the two ancient servants of God, Moses and Elias, who appeared with him though they had long been dead, and the three disciples, may represent the saints that will be with the Redeemer when he appears in his kingdom; the first two may represent the risen saints, and the last three the saints that will be alive when our Lord comes, but who are to be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." 1 Cor. xv. 52. And the high degree of enjoyment which the disciples enjoyed on that occasion, and which constrained them to say, "It is good for us to be here," may represent the happiness of all believers when they enter into the joy of their Lord, in his kingdom.

The Apostle Peter in alluding to the transfiguration, applies it to the "power and coming of Christ," as if that coming was in some degree and in some sense fulfilled in what took place on the mountain. He says: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount." 2 Peter i. 16-18. In the transfiguration, then, we have a very clear and beautiful pattern of the glorious kingdom of our Lord, in which "the righteous shall shine forth as the sun," and of the promising future, "when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

Brethren, will some one of you please give an explanation of Matth. 23 : 15. How can the proselyte after he is made be two-fold more the child of hell than those who proselyted him?

UNCLE JOHN.

ANS.—As a general rule, we may suppose that the corrupter is more guilty or worse than the corrupted. But our Lord makes the proselytes which the scribes and Pharisees made by their zealous labors, worse than their teachers. This seems a deviation from the general rule noticed above, and it is not without reason that the inquiring mind asks, how can the proselyte be worse than his leader? And in answer to this question, it may be remarked, that hypocritical as the Pharisees were, they had the advantage of the Mosaic law and the institutions of that law. And though that law had but little influence over them, it is most likely that it had some. Their views of the Mosaic religion, and their teaching were upon the whole, tolerably correct. Hence the Saviour said "to the multitude and to his disciples, the Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat : all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do : but do not ye after their works : for they say, and do not." Matth. 23 : 1-3. The law then which they taught and the views of that law which they held, it is to be presumed had some little influence upon them. These spiritual advantages and helps which the Jews had, the Gentiles did not possess. And though the Gentile proselytes received the truth from their Jewish teachers, it became mixed with their own idolatrous and superstitious notions of religion, and the consequence was, their religion became a miserable compound made up of adulterated Judaism and heathenism. And this exceedingly corrupted form of religion being united to a blind zeal approaching to madness in the heathen proselyte, he became more alienated from the Divine life than the zealous Jew who had proselyted him.

It has been said, "the house of Herod afforded a striking illustration of the character of such proselytes in whom the dark elements of heathenism were blended with the dark elements of Judaism." And it appears there is some reason to think that a proselyte by the name of Poppoea, urged Nero to the persecution of the Christians.

We can still send back numbers to the beginning of the volume, but subscriptions may begin with any number. From No. 15 to the end of the year $1.15.

Gleanings and Gittings.

BROTHER David Rupel of St. Joseph Co., Ind., says, under date of March 25th :

"We have had quite an addition to the church. Since the tenth of February we baptized thirty one, in our district, called the Pipe Creek District ; and there is still a prospect of more coming to the church. May the good Lord bless his work and cause that sinners may be alarmed and brought to a knowledge of their condition while in sin, and made willing to accept salvation upon the terms of the gospel. And may Zion's watchmen be found at their posts to give the alarm while danger is near, till all the chosen of the Lord shall be gathered in at his appearing is our prayer."

BRO. I. H. Crist, Girard, Ill., March 28th, writes :

"We have had an open winter, with very little snow until March. Since we have had considerable rain and snow. Last night and to day we had a very severe snow storm. The train from Chicago to St. Louis went downward this evening with three engines to it, and was very much behind time. The cause of our Master is still moving forward. There have been 26 received by baptism since Jan; 31st, and we hope many more will soon come over into the vineyard and work for good wages, even eternal life to the faithful. Health is good here. May the grace of Jesus Christ be with you all."

SISTER M. is on hands again with her Seed Basket. On a separate slip she says :

"Brother Beer expresses a fear lest sister M. had become discouraged by reason of some remarks he made in P. C. She would just say that all her real discouragement has come from within herself. Her inability to do better, her unworthiness to work in this part of the Master's vineyard, and a doubt whether it is God's will that she should, have weighed heavy on her heart, sometimes. From without she has received much encouragement. She begs your prayers, that she may not become elated by encouragement nor sinfully depressed and doubtful by her weakness."

BRO. Lewis Kimmel, Elderton, Armstrong Co., Pa., says :

"Having been called to a church meeting at Cowanshock congregation, Mar. 4th, after divine service the church declared by a unanimous vote to advance brethren Samuel and Joseph Wilt to the second degree in the ministry. They both were duly installed. We hope the church will always stay up their hands in the great labor in the ministry with the same unanimity manifested in advancing them. Brother Joseph Wilt has since moved to the Red Bank congregation. His address now is Oakland Armstrong Co. Pa., instead of Rural Valley, Pa. I got home safely from Philadelphia. Did some good work for the school."

ELDER Samuel Mohler, Covington, Ohio, writing March 28th, says :

"At this time a good many have measles and mumps; and there have been several deaths. In the church we have peace, thank the Lord. We have had a few additions this winter, but no extra meetings which we nearly all would have liked to have had ; but it seemed we could get no one to suit us. In the Newton church they had several additions. On the eleventh there was a council in the Newton church, and a choice to put a brother to the ministry. Brother David Wine was elected and installed. Elders present, H. D. Davy, Joseph Risser, Wm. Cassel, Samuel Rairigh, and Rudolph Mohler."

MT. PLEASANT INSTITUTE.—The Middle Year Class gave an entertainment on Tuesday evening, Mar. 28th. The young men in the class delivered orations of their own composing; the young ladies read essays. The audience was large and appreciative. The following is the order of exercises.

- "Lafayette," Joseph Taylor Gallagher, Prospect.

BROTHER J. H. Garman, of Sinking Springs, Highland Co., Ohio, informs us that the brethren there are erecting a new meeting-house on his farm one mile south of Sinking Springs. They expect to complete their house during the coming summer, so as to have it ready for their fall lovefeast. He also remembers the poor and contributes to the fund to furnish them with the paper. ## Correspondence.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood.

Wine.

The Scriptures talk about wine, new wine, old wine, and sweet wine.

First, then, as to wine, Webster defines it as "the fermented juice of the grape." We know that modern definers generally define words as they convey ideas in modern times. But as the object of this investigation is, to ascertain, if possible, the meaning of the word in Scripture; and as the Scriptures (of the New Testament) were first written in Greek, I will first present the ideas of several Greek definers.

The Greek word for wine is oinos.—Greenfield merely interprets it as wine.—Liddell and Scott define it as the "fermented juice of the grape, very frequent from Homer downward: in Homer it is black; or red; and is praised as fiery or sparkling; as sweet; and fragrant."—We see, then, that there is no difference between the definition of Webster and that of Liddell and Scott. Both define it as "the fermented juice of the grape." The reader will notice, however, how Liddell and Scott qualify their definition. They say "very frequent from Homer downward." Homer was a celebrated Greek poet, and flourished 900 years before Christ. We are then to understand from the way Liddell and Scott define the word wine, that that is the idea the word conveyed "from Homer (900 years before Christ) downward."

I need not spend time to show that wine, as defined above, is intoxicating.

2. New wine. Naturally, we call that new which has just made its appearance. And habitually we call an annual crop new until another crop is in possession.—We then call an annual crop (wheat, wine, or whatever it is) new until it is a year old. However, properly, new wine would be that which was just made. "No man putteth new wine into old bottles." And this new wine (or must, as the German has it) is intoxicating according to Hosea iv. 11: "Whoredom, and wine, and new wine take away the heart."

3. Old wine. "The old wine, among the Rabbin's, was the wine of three leaves; that is, wine three years old; because from the time that the vine had produced that wine, it had put forth its leaves three times." Clarke on Luke v. 39. This passage reads as follows: "No man also having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new; for he saith, the old is better." I understand that it is better to the taste. Some, however, understand it to be better for the drunkard. And we have seen above that "new wine taketh away the heart;" and if "the old is better," then it will take away the heart, too,—consequently it is intoxicating.

4. Sweet wine. About this we read in Acts ii. 13. "These men are full of sweet wine." The common version has it new wine. The German, the Revised, and other versions have "sweet wine."—The Greek word is gleukos; it is defined by Greenfield thus: "The unfermented juice of the grapes, must; hence sweet wine, Acts ii. 3." Liddell and Scott define it as "sweet new wine."

Clarke comments on this passage:—"Rather sweet wine, for gleukos, cannot mean the mustum or new wine, as there could be none in Judea so early as Pentecost. The gleukos seems to have been a peculiar kind of wine; and is thus described by Hesychius and Suidas: "Gleukos is that which distils from the grape before it is pressed. This must be at once both the strongest and sweetest wine."

Calmet observes, that "the ancients had the secret of preserving wine sweet, through the whole year."

Clarke observes, "There could be no mustum or new wine in Judea so early as Pentecost." It is plain, therefore, that this wine was upwards of a year old.

But, as noticed before, Greenfield defines gleukos as "the unfermented juice of the grape." If it really was the unfermented juice of the grape, and if it was too early for mustum, or new wine, and if "the ancients had the secret of preserving wine sweet, then this wine was preserved unfermented."

But whatever it was, and whether we call it new wine, or sweet wine, or sweet new wine, or unfermented wine, it was intoxicating; for Peter said, "These are not drunken as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. (More of this "drunken" after a little.) It is plain, then, from Scripture, that whether wine is new, or old, or sweet, it is intoxicating."

Whatever kind of wine, then, Christ may have used when he instituted the communion, it was intoxicating. And whatever kind of wine the Corinthians made use of at the communion, it was intoxicating. The translation says, "For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper; and one is hungry and another is drunken." 1 Cor. xi. 21. The Greek word for drunken is methusko. The root word of methusko is methu. Methu is defined as "wine, originally any strong drink." Methu, then, meant any strong drink, originally. And as a rule, whatever be the meaning of a root word, the words derived from the root-word convey ideas that have a relation to the meaning of the root word. Thus, bapto, a root-word, means to dip, and all the derivative words from bapto have a meaning that is related to dip. And methu, a root word, (as stated before), means "any strong drink;" "strong drink," we know, makes drunk; therefore, words derived from methu have a meaning that is related to "strong drink."

The reader has seen above that the word in 1 Cor. 11 (translated drunken), is derived from methu. The word translated drunk in Acts ii. 13 (to which reference has been made before under the head of sweet wine) is also derived from methu. Other derivatives from methu are found in Luke xxi. 34, "overcharged with surfeiting and (methu) drunkenness;" in Rom. xiii. 13, "not in rioting and (methu) drunkenness;" in Luke xii. 45: "to eat and drink, and to be (methusko) drunken;" in 1 Thess. v. 7, "they that be (methusko) drunken, are (methusko) drunken in the night." These quotations may suffice to show that drunken in 1 Cor. means drunken; for it is plain what drunken and drunkenness mean in the passages quoted, and whatever they mean there is meant in 1 Cor. 11.

Use an intoxicating drink to represent the blood of our blessed Redeemer? Yes. "What God hath cleansed, that call thou not unclean." Some one may say, "Why, if a brother who was a drunkard will get the taste of it at communion it may bring him to drinking again." Why yes; and some men have been fascinated by women at such times. Should we not, therefore, expel all the sisters from the communion? This would also be in accordance with the first communion at Jerusalem. There was not one sister present there.

The Scriptures do not condemn the use of wine, but the abuse of it. We cannot reject a thing because it is abused by some. Everything is abused; preaching, praying, singing, baptism, feet washing, the Lord's Supper, the communion, giving of alms, Christ Jesus,—everything. We cannot reject a thing because some are fascinated by it. We dare not reject a thing because there is fascination in it. For then we had needs go out of the world. As long as we are in the flesh the temptations are about us too. Better "put on the whole armor of God" to stand against the wiles of the devil," and sing,

"If earth against my soul engage,
And fiery darts be hurled,
Then I will smile at Satan's rage,
And face a tempting world.

"Let cares like a wild deluge come,
And storms of sorrow fall—
So I but safely reach my home,
My God, my heaven, my all.

Report of Sabbath School.

Brother Quinter:—

I have concluded to send you a short report of our Sabbath school which we held here in the "Bethel church" congregation last summer. I presume that some will say that it is rather late in the day to report last summer's school, and I think so too; but I have waited long and in vain to see a report of our school, thinking our Superintendent or some of the brethren or sisters would send a report to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN; but as they have failed to do so, I will give you a short notice of it, for I desire that the brethren and sisters everywhere should know that we of Bethel church are exceedingly warm friends of the Sabbath school cause.

We had a very interesting school here, considering our inconvenient house and poor furniture, such as seats, &c. Brother James S. Flory, was Superintendent and brother Isaac Wright assistant. We had two Bible classes—one for the males, and one for the females. A good many adults took part in these classes which made them very interesting. Besides the Bible classes there were some half dozen Testament classes. A great many chapters were learned and recited by the young; but of these no very strict account was kept. Testaments were given for prizes. I think at our next school we will elect a Secretary and Treasurer. We had one last summer. Besides the Brethren there were a good many of our dear neighbors who attended regularly, some coming from a distance, and took an active part in the exercises, and kindly assisted us in purchasing singing books and Sabbath-school papers for the scholars. We sent for the Children's Paper, printed by brother H. J. Kurtz, which we think a very interesting paper for the young, and for the old, too. But now closing this subject by wishing success to Sabbath-schools everywhere, and hoping we will have a better one next summer, I will try and give a little church news.

In the first place I will say that our young ministers, who were chosen nine months ago, are doing exceedingly well, considering the short time they have been in the ministry. I believe that the only fault that is found with them is that they do not exercise their talents quite as much as they might; or, in other words, that they might preach oftener than they do. But we have great hopes for them in the future.

On the 19th of Feb., brother Wm. Lugenbeel, from Kansas, came here for the purpose of holding a series of meetings. He preached fourteen sermons, and we had very good attendance considering the weather which was quite inclement, nearly all the time. Brother L. seems very earnest and very zealous in the good cause. Brother and sister Cheesman and brother and sister Monroe, also from Kansas, were here during most of the meetings. Although these brethren were not ministers, yet they gave us some good exhortations, which will long be remembered. We held a council during the progress of our meeting, in which, I am happy to say, the spirit of humility and forbearance were manifested. Two were reclaimed and one soul made willing to repent and forsake sin and submit to the sacred rite of baptism. May she hold out faithful, as well as all who have taken upon themselves the yoke of the meek and lowly Jesus, is my prayer.

The Doctrine of the Brethren Separated.

This is the title of our book. Though we might have selected a more convenient title, we wanted one that would describe, as much as possible, the contents and object of the work, and at the same time not be too lengthy. In the work we have condensed all we thought it would bear, to get as much in a small space as possible, so as not to make our work too large. We publish it in large, plain type, and without leading, so as to get a larger amount on each page. There are some typographical errors which we could not well avoid on account of the Walker discussion and other pressing business. And the publishing has been delayed beyond our expectation and beyond our promise, which has, no doubt, been some annoyance to those who have sent for books as well as to ourself. But it is now out, and contains 416 pages, including the index. We offer at $1.50 for single copy; when it is sent by mail, $1.60, the postage being 20 cents, and we cannot afford to lose that ourselves, but feel to divide with the purchaser. As an inducement to our agents, and those who wish to get it by the dozen, we will pay the express charges, and deduct 10 per cent, which will make $16.20 per dozen. We have put the price of the book too low to give a larger percent to our agents. We feel that a work like this, devoted to the interest of our church, like our church papers, should be sold at low prices and reasonable compensation to agents. As the work is designed to establish and defend the faith and practice of our church. We hope our brethren will give it an examination and if they believe its merit sufficient, will make an effort to give it a general circulation, as far as possible, among the brethren and the world. Circulating such a work among the world may be the means of leading some to a knowledge of the truth by explaining to them the reasons for our faith. Any brother may do something in spreading the truth before the world, by giving them good books to read, especially such books as defend the faith and practice of the apostolic church.

We have got up the work in such a form that we think will be the most benefit to our brethren, and the most easily understood. As a book of reference the index makes it easy to find any point or argument or any subject. Each subject, and each side of it, is given separately, in such a manner that we think it will be more easily understood, and more convenient for reference than any work heretofore published among our brethren. We have felt for several years that our church ought to have a work defending its faith and practice, on all the leading points of its doctrine, and we have tried to get up this work for that purpose.

In this work we have discussed those subjects in which we differ from most of the denominations around us, and we have tried to do so in such a spirit and manner as would not wound the feelings of those who differ with us; but by plain and fair argument appealing to their judgment, trying to get the truth of the gospel before the mind or in the heart. Though it is very difficult on some subjects like that of secret societies to speak against them even in the mildest form, without incurring the ill feeling of some who favor them, still we feel it to be the duty of the preacher or writer to defend the truths of the gospel in a proper spirit, though he may be condemned by some for so doing.

The subjects on which we defend the doctrine of our church are The Divinity of Christ and of the Holy Spirit; Immersion as the mode of Baptism; Trine Immersion; The Forward motion in baptism; Feet-washing; The Lord's Supper; The Holy Kiss; Nonconformity, or Plainness of Dress; and Opposition to Secret Societies. These subjects should be well studied by our brethren, especially our ministers; for they are often required to speak of them.

Small sums of money may be sent by mail; larger ones, by post-office order.

From Nettle Creek, Wayne County, Indiana.

On March 13th, brother Stephen H. Bashor arrived, and on the 15th began a series of meetings at the Locust Grove meeting-house. Preached 16 discourses. The congregation was large most of the time, and the attention good. The interest increased. During this time 16 persons expressed a desire to follow Jesus, and a willingness to take up his cross, and were baptized. On Thursday night brother Bashor preached at the White Branch meeting-house. Three discourses at the brick meeting-house, at which time eight more were baptized. We have reason to believe that those 24 were truly converted, because during those meetings there was no undue excitement created that we observed. The gospel was preached with power, the saint was cheered on his way, and sinners were admonished to return, in such a manner that they could not resist it. Now while the church and angels are rejoicing at the safe return of "prodigals," the Prince of Darkness may not be very sorry, because, thinks he, "they are not yet out of my reach."—This is so in one sense. They are still exposed to his temptations, &c. But in another sense they are far from him. They have launched out into the sea of troubled waters, it is true. But oh! I may they have Jesus in their vessels as their conductor. Then let lightnings flash, thunders roll, and the tempest overthrow the bark, and quite cover it with surging waves, the comforting words may be heard, "Peace, be still." Behold a great calm! Therefore may they trust in Jesus, their worthy conductor, and he will safely conduct them into the haven of eternal.

"How is This?" Answered.

I find on page 167 brother James Y. Heckler, criticizing a correspondence by brother S. S. Mohler, regarding the Danish Mission. I did not understand brother Mohler to denounce the measure, but it only gave rise to the question of propriety, in his mind, to the sending of missionaries to the western states and territories, predicated on the many urgent calls for preaching. Bro. Heckler also said "When a brother has no more regard to the church than to move away hundreds of miles to some place where he cannot hear the brethren preach, he is not to be pitied." I confess I am at a loss to see the spirit of enterprise in such an assertion, either for self or for the church. Many of our large congregations in the west have been built up by a few pioneers, who have formed a nucens and foundation for much good, by contributing of their means assisted by the spirit of enterprise; while, if they had remained at home where the brethren were thickly settled and know, and hid their talent in a napkin, they might have become drones in the cause. The Danish Mission is a commendable enterprise; so is the cause in the west and south. We can attend to both, if properly managed. All that is required is the means. I think there is a great lack on the part of the brotherhood to contribute to such enterprises. Laborers are ever ready, when the means are afforded. The majority of the brethren in the far west are in limited circumstances, and have not emigrated thither because they had no regard for the church, but have done so for the purpose of securing homes for themselves, and are no doubt earnestly praying for the enlarging of the borders of Zion. If the apostle Paul's zeal for the church at Damascus or Jerusalem had been so great as to have prevented him from prosecuting his extensive preaching tours, he certainly would not have accomplished as much good as he did, and it is certainly wrong to throw cold water on Missionary enterprises.

Church News.

Brother Editors:

Inasmuch as church news seems to be of general interest, I will give your readers a sketch of our arm of the church, namely, the Duncansville branch. We have had several meetings during the winter. Brother Stephen Hildebrand was with us one week, and labored faithfully in holding forth the words of eternal truth. Brother John Kuisely was with us at another time. Had three meetings at Lamersville, and one at Carson Valley meeting-house. These meetings were well attended, considering the inclemency of the weather, and we feel assured that there have been good and lasting impressions left. May the good Lord simply reward those dear brethren for their labor of love. We have received four during the winter by baptism; and we have reason to believe that there are more almost persuaded to turn in with the people of God. Our church is in a prosperous condition. We number in membership now about one hundred. Oh, that the Lord may enable us all to so conduct our lives, that when we are done with these meetings and the church in its militant state, we may enjoy a membership in its glorified, exalted, and triumphant state, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Nettle Creek arm of the church, Ind., March 14th, 1876, sister MARY RITTER, aged 70 years, 3 months and 26th. Funeral discourse from Rev. xiv. 12, 13, by Elder Jacob Bowman and Stephen H. Bashor, to a large congregation.

Also, in the same church, March 16th, at 12 o'clock, m., 1876, sister HANNAH BURGET, aged 74 years, 11 months and 11 days. Funeral discourse from Isa. xl 1-8, by Elder Jacob and David Bowman, to a large congregation.

Also, at 2 o'clock, p. m., same day, sister CATHERINE ULRICK, aged 77 years, 10 months and 3 days. Funeral discourse from 1 Cor. xv. 22, by Stephen H. Bashor and Elder Daniel Bowman, to a large congregation.

These three sisters were mothers in Israel, who have stood the storms of many winters, and the privations of early settlers. Their husbands had gone to rest before them, and were waiting to welcome them home. To the relatives and friends we can say, Prepare to meet your mothers; profit by their walk and conduct; and finally you may be permitted to strike glad hands on the sunny banks of deliverance. The death of those sisters found them in peace and ready to die. Our loss is their eternal gain.

JOS. HOLDER.

In Smoketown, Washington Co., Md. March 30th, 1876, sister TRACY, wife of Elder Andrew Cost, of the Beaver Creek congregation, aged 50 years and 20 days. Her remains were followed to the Beaver Creek graveyard by her husband and son, the balance of the family being afflicted and not able to attend the funeral. The occasion was improved by the Brethren, from Rev. xiv. 13, to a large congregation, who seemed to share with the affliction and sore bereavement of brother Cost and his family. Sister Cost was afflicted for a number of years, and bore it all with Christian fortitude, but was in her usual health till a few days ago, when she was attacked with a severe chill, and then thrown into a violent fever, which carried her off suddenly, and unexpectedly to all. She has left an affectionate husband, an only son, and two interesting little daughters, to mourn the loss of one who can never return.

D. F. STOFFER.

Brother JOHN RITTER was born in Stark Co., Ohio, April 5th, 1818, and died March 14th, 1876, near Rochester, Fulton county, Indiana. He left a wife and 8 children to mourn their loss. He left them in good circumstances. Six days before his death, he called for the elders—David Bechtelmeier and the writer—to be anointed. Disease, lung and typhoid fever, with an abscess of the lungs. Brother John seemed to be a good, faithful member of the church. Funeral services by the writer, from John v. 24-30.

NOAH HESTER.

[Pilgrim please copy.]

In Dunkirk, Ohio, March 23rd, 1876, little JAMES M., daughter of W. H. and Ann, of the Wise, aged 6 months and 5 days. Funeral services at the United Brethren church by the Rev. Ogle, assisted by the writer from Lamentations, iii. 31-33, to a large, attentive, and sympathizing congregation.

S. T. BOSSEMAN.

In the bounds of the Yellow Creek congregation, on the 23rd of March, 1876, our friend CHRISTIAN REASY, son of brother Oiver and sister Catharine Reasy, aged 20 years and 11 months, less 1 day. Disease, lung fever. Funeral occasion was improved by the Brethren. Text, 1 Peter, i. 22-24.

DANIEL S. REFLOGLE.

In Ringgold, Md., March 14th, 1876, ALICE E. ARNHART, daughter of Samuel Barabart, aged 2 months and 18 days. We laid her down in sweet hope, to sleep in her little grave, by the side of her mother, until the voice of the Archangel shall call her from her silent slumber. Funeral services by brother J. F. Oller. Text, Heb. x. 34-37.

E. FLORY.

In Indian Creek congregation, Westmoreland county, Pa., March 16th, Elder Jos. BURGER, aged 70 years, 7 months and 19 days. Brother Burger was called away very suddenly, and leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. But they mourn not as those without hope. Funeral services by brethren D. D. Horner and James Bennett.

J. M. MILLER.

In the Somerset congregation, Ind., March 23rd, 1876, sister MARY HAYNE, wife of brother John Hayne, aged 18 years, 10 months and 6 days. She was burned and lived only 27 hours after the accident occurred. There was none present at the time and it is uncertain as to how it happened; but as nearly as I can ascertain it was as follows: She made a fire in the heating stove, then lay down with her feet near the draught,—which she had done several previous days,—and fell asleep. We suppose a coal fell from the stove, firing and nearly burning her clothing from her person before she awoke. When she discovered it she immediately called for her husband or any one who might hear, and at the same time, as she went out of the house, pieces of flesh were left upon the door-facing. No one coming, she started for her husband, but on seeing a neighbor's house, nearly half a mile distant, she ran to it, having nothing on save her shoes and stockings, which were not so much as scorched. A report was, that a spark fell from the flue on her back as she made the fire, setting the clothes on her back on fire, but from the remains upon the floor, the other is more probable; besides, her hair was not even scorched nor burned.

Friendly reader, let this sad affair be a warning to us all. Funeral services at the meeting-house by the Brethren, from Job xiv. 1, 2.

H. R. MINNICK.

Near Urbana, Benton county, Iowa, October 28th, 1875, SILVAN ROBINSON, son of John and Susa Robison, aged 22 years, 6 months and 8 days. He was a friend to all and left many friends and relatives to mourn their loss. He spoke to the last to all present and bade them farewell to try a world to us unknown.

Also, a daughter of the same parents, Feb. 28th, 1876, aged 20 years, 2 months and 24 days. She leaves a husband and five children. She was the last of a family of ten children. They are the only parents I ever knew who raised so large a family and have survived and buried all their children. In her last words she admonished William to raise their children so that they can meet her in Heaven, and for him to try to meet her there. She kissed them all and said, "Oh, how bright!" and passed away.

E. TROXEL.

In the Newton church, Miami county, Ohio, March 5th, 1876, brother DAVID DEXTER, aged 71 years, 3 months, and 20 days. Brother David had been a deacon in the church a number of years, and was useful in that place; and will be missed very much, as his house was a home for the brethren. He and his family were kind and free, always ready to administer to the wants of the brethren.

Also, in the Covington church district, SHERMAN LUCAS. The subject of this notice died at the house of his uncle, brother David C. Decker, March 27th, 1876, aged eleven years, eight months and 21 days. Funeral services of both the above by the Brethren.

The huge, drastic, griping, sickening pills, constructed of crude, coarse and bulky ingredients, are fast being superseded by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-bilious Granules—the "Little Giant" Cathartic or Mildum in Parvo Physic. Modern Chemical Science enables Dr. Pierce to extract from the juices of the most valuable roots and herbs their active medicinal principles, which, when worked into little Pellets or Granules, scarcely larger than a mustard seed, renders each little Pellet as active and powerful as a large pill, while they are much more palatable and pleasant in effect.

Dr. IRA A. THAYER, of Baconsburg, Ohio, writes: "I regard your Pellets as the best remedy for the conditions for which you prescribe them of anything I have ever used, so mild and certain in effect; and leaving the bowels in an excellent condition. It seems to me they must take the place of all other cathartic pills and medicines."

LYON & MACOMBER, druggists, Vermillion, D. T., say: "We think they are going to sell like hot cakes as soon as the people get acquainted with them and will spoil the pill trade, as those that have used them like them much better than large pills."

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. OVER THERE.

BY CARRIE HOLSINGER.

I often think of heaven,
That fair and beautiful chime;
Of pleasures Christians shall enjoy
Beyond the shores of time;
The glories which they all shall share
In that city Over There.

Oh, there will they see Jesus,
Who suffered, bled, and died!
Ye ransomed, what a glorious sight—
Jesus, once crucified!
The cross of Calvary be here.
Praise him forever Over There.

There now have gone our loved ones.
What rapturous joy to meet—
To join them with the harp and lyre—
And sit at Jesus' feet!
Oh, then, for heaven now prepare;
Exalt our Savior OVER THERE.

When shall I reach that haven?
Jesus, to thee I cling.
Grant me to join redemption's song
To the Almighty King—
To dwell in Eden's fields so fair—
Sing glorious anthems OVER THERE.

For The PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Not Your Own.

BY S. T. BOSSERMAN.

"Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit, who is in you, whom ye have from God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." I Cor. 6: 19, 20.

In the chapter from which we have selected the above text, we have several arguments from the eminent apostle, to the Corinthian brethren, against uncleanness, and following after the lusts of the flesh. He appears to think that they knew differently, and that they were going against their better judgment. This we infer from his language, "What! (as though surprised at them,) know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" &c. i. e. "Do not ye know that your bodies are temples which are peculiarly consecrated unto God and his service, and they ought not to be profaned or polluted? But the bodies of Christians are temples for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and hence they ought to be kept pure and undefiled. They are sanctified by God for his habitation and for his services." Now if the Holy Ghost dwells in a man really, he certainly is a good man; for the Spirit will guide him into all truth. Oh, how chaste should this house be kept! How pure must the temple be to court the favor and friendship of God. Let nothing suffer us to defile that house, and grieve that Holy Comforter away. David says, "The Lord loveth those that are of a clean heart;" and his testimony and experience we all must accept.

Another argument against uncleanness is that "ye are not your own." Our bodies are not our own, but God's.

1. We are God's by creation. Man came not forth of himself, nor by the authority of man. Science has revealed to man his wonderful construction, and all his component parts; and in the anatomy of man, the bones and sinews, arteries, muscles, heart, brain, &c., are carefully dissected and examined; and by this process the God recognizing man is led to exclaim that he is "fearfully and wonderfully made." But to the skeptic it strengthens his unbelief, as he discovers by the anatomy of the brain and by the experience of the medical fraternity, that to remove a certain portion of the brain the mind is gone, but the remainder is capable of directing locomotion to the body; removing another portion the mind or intellect is pure and strong, but the body is inactive. Hence man seemingly has the knowledge of the construction of man, and is ready to conclude that he is but a piece of machinery that wears but a little while then ceases to live and is but a myth. Past experiments have revealed the fact that by the application of a galvanic battery to a corpse the limbs have been brought to action; the muscles, nerves, lips and eyes brought into action; but notwithstanding all this, the subject was a corpse still, showing conclusively that man's wisdom may be great, yet he cannot create, but must give God the honor, for it is in "him that we live, move, and have our being." We are then his by creation. We are bought with a price, purchased out of our own hands, and therefore have no right whatever to rob God or wrong him by not giving him the service both of our bodies and spirits which are his. Christians are not their own but God's. They are bought with a price. They have not the power to live at their own disposal, to live after the flesh, but to live for God and his service, and to do him homage.

2. We are God's by preservation. Though we have lived a life aversive to God's law, lived a life full of neglected duty, often transgressed his holy law, and incurred the wrath from heaven upon us, yet he is long-suffering to usward and letteth the rain fall on the unjust as well as the just. Though we have lived far from God, and are away out in the miry clay of sin, he still preserves us, and it is unto him that we are indebted for our being.

3. We are God's by redemption. Alienated from God as we were, he has "bought us with a price,"—the precious blood of Christ, a full price of inestimable value,—and we are God's own again by redemption and purchase; and God now has a triple claim upon us. We are purchased by the blood of Christ (Acts 20: 28), and by this purchase he also has purchased eternal redemption for us. Heb. 9: 12. We are not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but by the precious blood of Christ. 1 Peter 1: 18, 19. We are all bought with a price, a great price. The Lord having so great a claim upon us, oh, why should man attempt to raise the puny arm of rebellion against him, our best and eternal friend? We should be subject to him and glorify him in our bodies and spirits in obedience to him and his divine laws; and if we so do, he will finally fashion our "vile bodies like unto his glorious body," and "make our spirits as 'just men made perfect.'"

Sinners, if those lines meet your gaze, remember that God has a claim upon you. You are bought with a price; you are not your own; you have not the authority to do with yourself as you please or fancy. "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the way of thine heart and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." Eccl. 11: 9, showing conclusively to us that if we do walk after the desires of our heart, contrary to the law of God, we will be brought to judgment. In consideration of the magnitude of this price, God demands the return sinner. "Go ye out into the es and highways and compel to come in." But still you ut in your sin. Suppose you ough a farm for which you a vast sum, and the person whom you purchased this farm

 d refuse to give you possession, would keep you anxiously wait-or years ere he would surrender.
 d you not think him heartlessly
 ? Certainly you would. Christ ased the sinner with his pre-blood—a great price that none od can estimate—yet you refuse me. But he is waiting still.
 are bought with a price. Just-ys, "Cut him down." Christ ediator says, "Spare him yet er year, feel about the lost Christian love; give him the fertilizing soil of the gospel, perhaps, ere long, the thorns about his heart will give way, instead of thorns the fig will
 , and instead of briars the myr-ill predominate." "Ye are not own." Oh! come to Jesus and ill abundantly bless you. Let of us who have embarked for en, be more God like. Though annot equal God in his "natural ctions"—cannot be sinless like —omnipotent and omniscient im—yet in our "measure and e" we can imitate him: for he
 "Be ye merciful as your Father ven is merciful." Let us tell dying world the goodness of the sweets of the Christian ren. If we have "spied out the ised land" and tasted of its
 , let us hold them up for the aragement of the sinner to em-and for the strengthening of faith of the believer. Let us up the truths of the gospel to a g world, and show them the of the promised land, that they be persuaded to embark in the cause, and finally all be permit-to enter that haven of eternal e, to ascribe all honor to Him hath purchased for us "eternal mption."

Ministerial Support—Reply to Landon West.

BY G. E. REPLOGLE.

Ministerial support, a general distinction of the doctrines of the h, schools under the immediate ce and control of the Brethren, and complete report of the do-and sayings of those who rep-us in council—who legislate r souls and rule over us,—are ed topics, and involve prodigresults. Without the first it is sible to accomplish the second;

without the third, we suffer the youth of the brotherhood to fall under the immediate, most fascinating, and most powerful influence of other sects, thereby losing (as a church) hundreds of the most talented of our offspring. Without the fourth the laity must remain ignorant of many of the most weighty reasons that decide questions, and are therefore forced to a blind submission, or to open disregard of the council. I have noticed several cases of bishops, who being absent from the Annual Meeting and not knowing fully the reasons that governed the council in arriving at certain conclusions, wholly disregard them, and exert all their influence against them, public and private; but I have never known a bishop to disregard a decision that was passed in his presence.

So far as my knowledge extends,
 those who plead for ministerial support are mostly of the laity and of the poorer class (in worldly goods); hence it would appear that their pleadings are not prompted by selfish motives. This gives matter for thought! Why is it that so few of the ministers express themselves on the subject? Why is it that they come forward so slowly, and yet are coming one after another? Why do the rich brethren nearly all stand opposed to supporting ministers?
 There are causes creating these facts; some are commendable, some are not. We are not yet ready for a radical change; but the heaven is working, and it is working upward.
 Brother West in stating his position, stated exactly what I have been laboring for, which will readily appear by what I have from time to time written and said on the subject. See C. F. C., Vol. 9, pages 28, 173, 221, 632. My pleadings have been mostly in favor of a general dissemination of the truth among the people; and as it is very clear to me that ministerial support underlies successful evangelizing, I have given some attention to that point.
 I fail to see how brother West could understand me to say that "the disciples were to receive in all ages such things as coats, &c., from those who heard them preach." This is stating the case too strongly. All that I said or intended to say is couched in the text to which brother
 West refers me (Luke 22: 36),
 "But now let him that hath a purse take it;" henceforth, if you please.
 Then do as Paul did, to wit, draw on your base of supplies—on the churches. See 2 Cor. 11: 8.

The remark that "it is impossible for any man, or set of men, to preach among all nations," &c., I did not like to hear. It seems to me that it betrays a want of confidence in the wisdom or candor of Jesus. If the brethren would exercise self-denial and pour out their means for the conversion of the world as freely and profusely as Jesus poured out his blood, it would be unreasonable to predict anything less than a complete fulfillment of the divine commission.

I will now notice an objection that I have not previously attempted to answer. It is founded on Matth. 10: 8, "Freely ye have received freely give." It is claimed that this has reference to their preaching, notwithstanding the Savior said, "The workman is worthy of his meat" (Matth. 10: 10),—
 "hire" (Luko 10: 7). Here there seems to be a contradiction between the teachings of the objector and those of the Savior and Paul. It is a feature worthy of note, in the controversy on this question, that the opponents to ministerial support have kept themselves aloof from commenting on the teachings of the great apostle to the gentiles on this issue. They cannot set them aside or metaphorize them successfully; hence they avoid them. We admit that the Greek of Matthew 10: 8, might be rendered "Gratis ye have received," &c. But the Lord had just conferred upon the apostles the "gift of miracles," to "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, and cast out devils;" and immediately says,
 "Freely ye have received freely give;" and shortly says, "Provide neither gold, nor silver * * * the work man is worthy of his meat."
 Matth. 10: 8-10. The injunction,
 "Freely ye have received," &c, being in direct juxtaposition and connection with "Heal the sick," &c., and the idea of "gratis" preaching not being the idea taught by the Savior and Paul, and contrary to the "shadow of good things" in the law of Moses, (Col. 2: 17; 1 Cor. 9: 8-14), it must necessarily refer to "Healing the sick," &c. That this is the only consistent explanation of the passage is strengthened by the consideration that the miraculous power of healing would have afforded the apostles a fruitful source of immense gain if not restricted by the Lord. Preaching the gospel would not afford much opportunity for temporal gain, especially at a time when the doctrine was accepted by few. People were then, as now, willing to give almost anything and everything they possessed to be healed of their maladies; hence the wise restriction. He who would hire himself out in a bargain and sale way is not fit to preach.
 He who runs a farm, or mill, or tannery, or woolen factory, &c, and preaches only when it is convenient, who takes no pains to store his mind with divine things to pour into the hearts of his hearers, who is growing rich in "lucre" by his traffic in "mammon," has no claim on the church. Such are often so cold in spirit and ignorant of "the wisdom that is from above," that they are a hindrance or stumbling-block rather than otherwise. I believe the best thing that could be done among the Brethren at present would be for each council district to appoint one or two faithful brethren to travel and preach all the time. Their field of labor to be in the district, among the churches, around the churches, around the district, wherever there may be a call or a door open. Their office should be to convert men and women, to plant churches, to organize churches, to set in order whatever may be wanting. Their term of office, as such, to continue from one district council to the next. Their expenses, and in case that may not be able to bear the loss of the time, that, too, to be made good to them by the district. May God add his blessing to the good, and pardon that which may chance to be of the contrary part.

For the Primitive Christian.

Mourning and not Feasting.

BY A PILGRIM BROTHER.

"It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting; for that is the end of all men." Eccl. 7: 2-5. "When thou makest a feast, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen nor thy rich neighbors: lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee," &c. Luke 14: 12-14.

It is not said that the man of God, the follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, must always be weeping and mourning and shedding tears. If there is any one under heaven who has a just cause of rejoicing, it is the humble follower of Christ. He can truly rejoice in the God of his salvation. The humble Christian can look forward with the greatest anticipations of joy and happiness. He can safely rely upon the promises of Christ, which are sure and steadfast, an anchor to the soul.

The true Christian rejoiceth in adversity, as well as in prosperity. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God. (Rom. 8: 28.) The apostles suffered persecution, imprisonments, stripes, mockings and scourgings. "They departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name." Acts 5: 41. Our adorable Redeemer saith, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven." Matth. 5: 11, 12. My dear Christian friends, there is a time and a cause for the true Christian, the sincere follower of Christ, to rejoice. Let us beware that we are not deceived in our rejoicing. The apostles rejoiced in adversity, when under persecutions, in bonds, and afflictions, in prisons and dungeons. They could sing praises to God, and rejoice in their afflictions, and God answered their prayers.

The wise man saith, "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting." In going to the house of mourning, we feel solemn; we are brought to reflect upon our latter end; we think of death and eternity; we mourn with those who mourn; we sympathize with the afflicted; we feel for them, we pray for them, we weep with them, we try to soothe their sorrow and dry their briny tears by words of comfort and consolation. We feel for our broken-hearted, sorrowful neighbors and friends; we mingle our tears with theirs, and if the mourning, sorrowful, broken-hearted see and feel that we in reality sympathize with them, it gives them, at least in a measure, relief. Our sympathetic tears are a soothing balm to their sorrowful and broken hearts. Soft words, a heart overflowing with love toward our sorrowful, mourning friends, are to them an invaluable balm. This is the pouring of oil into their wounded hearts; it buoys them up and gives comfort to the soul; and consequently "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting."

"The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning, but the heart of fools, is in the house of mirth." This is a very solemn truth. "The heart of fools"—the desires, affections and delight of the wicked (fools), are in the house of mirth; the ball-room, the theatre, the billiard saloon, the grog-shop, all these places are haunts for the wicked. You will not find any of the children of God in these dens of wickedness. These are places where the wicked resort. The true, cross-bearing Christian will shun all these places as he would the pestilence.

"Sorrow is better than laughter." Yea, verily, it is better to be sorrowful, sober-minded, reflecting upon our past sins and the sins of others, than to be laughing and jesting, carousing and revelling, dancing and sporting, &c. All these things belong to the unfruitful works of darkness.

"When thou makest a feast, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee." Do we heed this important injunction of the Savior? Is it not rather that we invite those whom the Savior tells us not to invite? Why do we not invite "the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind?" Do we not seek to be recompensed? do we not seek honor, and worldly gain and applause? Most assuredly we do, if so be that we call the rich and the great, &c. If such be the case, dear brethren, our motives are not pure.

We hear a great deal in these latter days, of church festivals, religious balls, banquets, &c. These feasts are published in the papers, invitations are given, a glorious time is anticipated, the reverend A. B. is to preside, the proceeds of the festival are to be devoted to the decorating of the pulpit, or to the paying of the minister, or to defray the expenses of the getting of an organ, &c. These festivals are noted for jestings, jokinings, laughing, vulgar talk, &c. All this is done under the garb of religion, with pretended sacredness, for pretended sacred uses. I presume this is what Peter terms, "walking in lasciviousness, lusts, revellings, banquets," &c. All this comes under the head of "unfruitful works of darkness," "idolatry, mockery," "spiritual wickedness in high places," abomination of abominations, &c.

In conclusion, by way of warning, let me ask, Are we not also drifting toward this gulf of abominations? O brethren, let us stand aloof from this many headed monster, Mystery Babylon, mother of Harlots. If we take part in these unfruitful works of darkness, we become partakers of their abominations. "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18: 4. We are not be unequally yoked with unbelievers. If we participate in these festivals and banquets, religious balls, &c., we become one body with them, and consequently become partakers of their evil deeds, and of their plagues. "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Fare ye well.

WE'LL MEET AGAIN.

"We'll meet again." How sweet the word,
How soothing is the sound!
Like strains of far off music heard
On some enchanted ground.

"We'll meet again." Thus friendship speaks,
When those most dear depart;
And in the pleasing prospect seeks Balm for the bleeding heart.

"We'll meet again" the lover cries;
And oh! what thought but this
Can e'er assuage the agonies
Of the last parting kiss?

"We'll meet again" are accents heard
Beside the dying bed,
When all the soul by grief is stired,
And bitter tears are shed.

"We'll meet again" are words that cheer
While bending o'er the tomb;
For oh! that hope, so bright and dear,
Can pierce its deepest gloom.

"We'll meet again"—then cease to weep—
Whatever may divide;
Not time nor death can always keep
The loved ones from our side.

For in the mansions of the blest,
Secure from sin and pain,
In heaven's serene and endless rest,
We'll surely meet again.

Israel.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Brother Jonas Harley, of Montgomery Co., Penn'a.

Locality can never make a Heaven. Although Heaven is a place, it is not the place that constitutes the beatitude. I have known children to stand beside a coffin and toy with the silver-plated holders, and be in glee over the glittering paraphernalia of death, while the parents rained tears of agony on the wasted, ghastly form that lay within: To the one it was a Mount Tabor, and to the other a Valley of Achor. All localities are God's, but all places are not Peniels. There must be a self-emptying discipline, life-threatening Esaus, stone-pillows, scorching days and shivering nights, and dislocating wrestlings, before Jacobs become Israels. "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." 2 Tim. 2: 5. We cannot gain or maintain a regnant relation to sin, while we are in antagonistic relation to sin's Atoner. Mahanaim is the place of encouragement, and Peniel of victory. Having conquered ourselves and prevailed with God, and been honored with a title such as the greatest generals never wore, we will meet a friend in the once menacing, blood thirsty Esau.

Names should be significant. In primitive times they were so. Adam denoted the material of his inferior constitution. Eve indicates universal maternity. Primarily the man included the woman. In the masculine name he looked into the past: in the feminine, he looked into the future. In the one he contemplated his origin: in the other, his increase. Abraham is also a God-given name, and may well be perpetuated in Eternity. Even the Heaven of the saints can be designated by no dearer subjective appellation, than Abraham's Bosom. Isaac is a faith-name, which must needs be a name of joy. Heaven is full of Isaacs, for it means laughter. No Isaac will ever reach Hell, for there is "weeping and gnashing of teeth." With God Names mean truths, and He never suffered a Judas to go to perdition, nor a Jabez to enter Heaven. With God all names are the symbols of character. Judas had a name of high sanctity, and the character of a devil. Every time his name was called, his hypocrisy was declared and his doom pronounced. He is no longer Judas but Merodach-baladan. The Judases are all God's elect, and spend their Eternity with Him. The God-born are all Isaacs, all Benjamins, all Judases, all Israels.

It is a glorious indication when people intelligently and reverently blend the Great and Awful Name of Deity with their own. Each Angel has a name which is a personal index as truly as the Name of God. El is a talismanic Name among all the sanctified in Heaven and on earth. What an honor for the august visitant of the Virgin Mary to announce, I am Gabri-El. So dear to God, so high in His favor, and so deep in His counsels, that He bestowed upon him His own Name. No sooner did Jacob awake from his celestial vision at Luz, than the locality must henceforward be known as the spot where God rests His ladder of Grace—Beth-El. It was too early in his history to have the El as an adjunct to his own name; but he is on the way to Peniel, although twenty years intervene. Now the hour is come, he is alone by the Jabbok, the guilty past and the dreaded future converge like two raging seas, threatening to break him to pieces. Acts 27: 41. "There wrestled a Man with him until the breaking of the day." He knew not His Name, but He knew His character, evinced by the persistent contest, and his determination not to let Him go without His blessing. Who was the Nameless Wrestler who had the prerogative to confer so sublime a name and all that was signified by it? The Name, itself and the context, open up glorious tracts of Divine truth. "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Now the names of both parties are disclosed. Power with God, and prevailed. Thou hast contended even with Me, and hast not relaxed thy earnest grapple of body and soul until thy suit was gained. Thy name shall be called Israel, FOR—let us allow this for all the scope that inspiration has given it. God is revealed in it, and the character He will honor with copartnership in His Name Kingdom, and Glory. The new cognomen was bestowed as an indication of victory over God. Isra-El, to overcome, or prevail with Deity. The fact that God has a nature capable of being moved and won by the right kind of wrestling, is the key that unlocks the whole Bible and the human soul. In the image of God made He man; in the form of man He made himself; to the image of God He restores man through His own Divine human constitution. There is something in man's spiritual constitution into which the elemental Deity fits as two halves. This makes Israel possible. The dove-tailing of constitutions in identity of character, makes Emmanuel. And just as certainly as the El is achieved by wrestling in a line with God's ordinations, will it also become the complement of our being. Where there is a true Isra-El there is also an Emmanu-el. No one overcomes God who is not first overcome of God. El is accommodating, but only in accordance with all the attributes of His being. His first approach after sin was in a promise that represents Him riding on the "pale horse" by His name JAH. Ps. lxxviii. 4. In that promise was death for sin, and life by death: love that spares the sinner, and righteousness that smites his daysman. Job ix. 33. That death must be far-reaching enough to cover all sin and all its consequences, provisionally. There is no deficit with God in the apostasy of angels and men. God is not impoverished in the ruin of souls. His creative power was not exhausted in framing the Universe, and populating Heaven and earth. Had the realm of glory been emptied of every spirit, and naught remained but the Holy Three who had been their own all-sufficient blessedness through a by-gone Eternity, a Word could have thronged the Upper Courts with the number of the fallen multiplied by itself. But to redeem such of the lapsed as had constitutional capacity of redemption, the Word must be made flesh, and bleed and die and live. The life and death of Emmanuel has in it more value than all finite beings; so that in Him God is indemnified for all the evil of sin. That Christ died for all does not necessitate the salvation of any. God's law and government received more honor by the life of His co-eternal Son, than by the obedience of angels and men to all Eternity; and more satisfaction by His death, than by the everlasting sufferings of all rebellious finite intelligences. He, as Emmanuel, has "made an end of sin, and brought in an everlasting Righteousness," which the endless aggregate woes of revolted immortals could not do. So that neither the nature, nor the law, nor the government of God are dependent for indemnification on the obedience or punishment of men or devils. The first consideration of the work of Christ on earth was Godward; and this is the ground and hope but not the certainty of salvation to sinners. Redemption does not contemplate our recovery volens volens. Neither is it compulsory. Nor yet compensatory save substitutionally. No fallen creature can meet the requirements of Infinite Law by a stainless life, nor exhaust its penalty by suffering. To mar God's image is easy; to restore it, impossible. The death of Christ is not the restoration of man, but the restoration of the rectoral relations of Jehovah. This being done, we are to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling." In the death of Christ we have a motive, and in the Spirit of Christ the power, to "make our calling and election sure." "Who soever will." If none will, the purpose of God in Christ is not defeated any more than if but "few find the strait gate." An exhibition of His character in relation to law and sin was the primary, and the salvation of apostates the secondary object of "God manifest in the flesh."

Jacob was familiar with the economy of grace as unfolded to Adam, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to himself; and when he wrestled at Peniel, he was perfectly aware that he was in the hands of One who represented the JAH of Eden, the Faithful Promiser of Mamre, and the Comforter of Bethel. The blessing for which he agonized was not in the power of man's bestowment. Sin merits death. When life is forfeited, it can never be restored but by the exercise of a higher will, and the sacrifice of a better life. Just so soon as this higher will becomes ours, we have overcome ourselves, and then it is not difficult to prevail with God, for we are within the circle of His purposes, and He is ready to yield, and has as much deeper joy in reconciliation than we, as His feelings have greater capacity for it. No wrestling, no supplication, no weeping, no sacrifice on our part, could secure the favor of God so long as His governmental relations are not rectified by the death of His Son. As soon as Jacob died, and died in YAHIRAH, or the promised Sacrifice for sin, Israel was born. When once this name is ours by Divine right, who can tell how many and great the blessings it enshrines. No matter whether it be in the world's morning or evening, an Israelite is one who prevails with God through the merits and mediation of Jacob's Shiloh. Gen. 45: 10. What answer can we return to the question from the lips of the Wonderful, what is your name? What is the name of your immortality? Is it Israel or Ichabod? Is it a name musical with the anthem of redemption, or hissing with the flames of sin and wrath? WHAT IS OUR NAME ON THE ROLL OF ETERNITY?

Pride and Humility.

BY JAMES WIRT.

Pride stands in opposition to humility. The former is an elation of the heart, and is sinful in the sight of God, who cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance; the latter is lowliness of mind, and when it is the ruling element in the heart, with meekness and quietness, is regarded by the Lord as of great price.

The children of men exhibit pride in many different ways; in their conversation, in their dress, in a vain display of their conceived attainments, and in their general deportment in the world. The humble, to the contrary, are apt to esteem others better than themselves. Pride ruling in the heart of man is a great disadvantage, for it puts a greater estimate upon self than rightly belongs to it.

Humility is an advantage to any person, for it helps to improve other qualities of the renewed mind. Pride is denounced in the Scriptures in terms so strong as not to be mistaken; it is a growing evil in the church. Humility is encouraged; for those who are humble are not so easily led into error, and the many abominable practices that are at present in the world. What a pitiful object to see, is a poor, puny man, carrying a pound and haughty spirit with him! How much better it is to be humble, and of a contrite heart, as Christians are instructed to be, and to walk worthy of the vocation with which they are called, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith.

Faith is a pre-requisite to a willing obedience. We should cease imitating the practices of the world, and conform to the rules laid down in the gospel, our only criterion.

Humbleness of mind is a characteristic that appropriately belongs to believers in Christ, as they are not their own, being bought with a price, and have nothing wherewith to boast. Where pride exists in some degree, there too are also many other evils ready to crop out and grow. The Savior says "he that exalteth himself shall be abased; but by humble now, exaltation will come in due time to all those who by being patient in well-doing secure to themselves the crown of life.

Humility, quietude, and meekness are bearings that enable the Christian's career on earth and add luster to the cause of our Master in exemplifying to the world the precepts of the New Testament, and by this means will constrain others to glorify their Father which is in heaven.

Pride, vanity, and conceit disgrace all who make any pretensions to a higher life, and are favorable to the influence which Satan exerts in deceiving morally disposed people from the path of rectitude, that, instead of growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord, they continue to descend the steps of sin and immorality.

Humility facilitates our progress in the divine life. It will enable the true disciple to more readily obtain the cumulative virtues and graces of the Christian. Neither can the fact be discarded that this disposition of the mind always exerts an influence for good to all around, and raises in us an ardent aspiration for greater perfection than what we have in the past attained, and brings us to acknowledge that we are but poor, erring, mortal man at the best.

Little Deeds of Kindness.

BY SADIE E. ROOP.

There is nothing that will secure the affection and confidence of those around us like constant and unremitted kindness. Nothing will cheer the weary laborer as he returns from the field of toil as much as to find kind friends waiting to greet him with their kindest expressions and sweetest tones; it causes him to forget his weariness and animates his troubled mind. Nothing will have a greater tendency to draw young men from those places of vice, that are frequented so much in this age of the world, and induce them to spend their evenings at home, than for them to know there are always kind words and kind faces waiting for them: it enables them to find pleasure at their own fireside, instead of having to join the motley crowd that throng the store or bar-room. Let our circumstances be as they may, if our general tenor of life indicates a kind heart we surely cannot fail to promote the happiness of all around us.

Then since these little acts of kindness are so conducive to our enjoyment, can any of us have any apology to offer for giving utterance to an unkind word, even to the dumb beasts? We certainly cannot, for even they are not unsusceptible of the influence of kindness.

Missionary Work.

BY LANDON WEST.

In our first we aimed to show that the Jews who had had such excellent opportunities for embracing the gospel, were broken off because of their unbelief, that the Gentiles might be grafted in. In Romans 14th chapter this subject is treated at large by the great apostle who will have us to know "that blindness in part is happened unto Israel until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in." Now is the time when the Sun of Righteousness, in all his splendor, sends faith his rays of life, and light, and love over the Gentiles; and if it was needful for preachers to go to the Jews, we ask, how can the Gentiles, which are always represented by Scripture as being in darkness, "hear without a preacher? and how can they preach except they be sent?"

At Antioch, Paul said to the Jews, "It was needful that the word should first have been spoken to you, but seeing that ye put it from you * * * lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

From that day to the present the great work of saving souls has been confined almost entirely to the Gentiles; sometimes with no opposition, and sometimes with much; sometimes slow, and not often fast; but still it goes on; for God is in the work. He hath said, "My name shall be great among the Gentiles." And although Bibles have been sent out by millions, there is greater call for them now than ever before. Millions of the race can now be found who never heard of it, but who will regard it as the true leaven of improvement, as indeed it is; "For righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Of these times have the prophets spoken. David says, "Ethiopia shall soon stretch forth her hands unto God." Ps. 68: 31. Malachi says, "For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place shall increase (the prayer of saints. Rev. 5: 8.) be offered unto my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts." Chapt. 1: 11. Jesus says, Matth. 24: 14, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." See also Matt. 26: 13, and Mark 14: 9, for an account of Mary and the anointing of Jesus, which act shall, with the gospel, be preached in all the world as a memorial of her. By Luke he says, "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day. And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem Chapp. 24: 46, 47. Jerusalem was the starting point. If the preaching of the gospel to one people be glorious, shall not the preaching of it in all the world be rather glorious? If the beginning so great, what shall the end be!

A few thoughts more and we are done, but this great subject has just begun with us as a people. The Jews have heard the gospel, or could have heard it, for their Bibles tell of its coming, whilst the Gentiles, to a great extent, are yet without its preaching, or the Bible. If it was proper for preachers to go to Jews, who had the word, and urge them to believe and obey it, how much more need that both Bibles and preachers be sent to those people who have neither! Bibles and Preachers must go together, and if others have sent Bibles, we are for two reasons the very people who should send preachers: First, because as we have done nothing in this direction we ought to labor for that which we pray; and second, because we will not be satisfied with the preaching done by any other people; and we would be certain, then, that the nations were correctly taught, provided however that we went and were faithful to what we profess.

In regard to Red Cloud, the Indian Chief, we will say that the red man always recognized the guidance of the Great Spirit, not only in public affairs, but in everything; yet they know nothing of Jesus until he is preached to them. They are not idolaters in strict language, but are without any direct revelation from the Great Being whom they adore, and will remain so until God's children send it to them. We heard an Indian Chief from the Rocky Mountains, Kawshawgance by name, say that since he had come amongst the whites and heard of the gospel he loved it, and was then going back to his people, in the far west, to urge them to embrace Jesus as the only Saviour. He had left his son in the states, to be instructed, so that he, too, may labor for the salvation of their people.

We offer no plea for the system of religion spread by the Roman Catholics, or any other people who presume to daub the temple of Truth with untempered mortar (see Ezek. 13: 10, 15); but we commend the zeal of even the Catholics, for it was worthy of a better cause. If the people called "Dunkard Brethren" had shown only half the zeal and patient labor, in preaching Jesus and his word, which other people have shown in preaching what we condemn, our people's camp fires had been lighted on other shores, and nine tenths of the people who now live would not have been totally ignorant of our brethren's existence. We are not and never have been a missionary people, and we lack this much, if no more, of being doers of the Master's work. We have, to an alarming extent, kept our light hid under a bushel, while it should have been ever kept as a Light-House Lamp to all the passers by.

Jesus was the first and greatest missionary the world has ever had. We think Paul to have been the second, and he did more to spread the truth in the time that he preached, than is now being done by all the ministers named in the Brethren's Almanac. He says to us, and all Christian people, "Be ye followers of me even as I also am of Christ." Can any one be a follower of those two great leaders in the great vineyard of the Lord, and not be favorable to Missionary Work? We know not how; for it was the great theme of their life. Shall we who have done nothing toward the salvation of the world, condemn all that others have done, and are yet doing, because we think their work to be a partial one? Shall we stand idle all the day long, refusing to go into the Master's vineyard and work, saying that the sound of the gospel has already been preached in all the earth, and at the same time condemn the work of all who do go into the work? "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth."

Brethren, we hope better things of you in the future; and when you do go forth in the work of Missions,

THOUGHTS ON THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The attention of many of our brethren at this time is directed to the subject of our Annual Meeting, and the best way of holding it to make it the most successful as a business meeting, and to make it the most satisfactory to the Fraternity. This great annual gathering of our brethren has not been regarded simply as a business meeting, but also as a meeting for devotional exercises, and as affording our brethren and sisters a very good opportunity for the free exercise and enjoyment of their social feelings as the children of God, and as members of the household of faith. In former years there was considerable preaching at the place at which the meeting was held, and also a lovefeast. It was very pleasant to have these seasons of worship when it could conveniently be done. But it was found necessary to discontinue them. And although these services have been discontinued, the number of the members of our Fraternity has become such that it is found exceedingly difficult to accommodate all who attend the A. M. without interfering with the business of the meeting. Hence it seems necessary to adopt some course by which the attendance at A. M. shall become further reduced. But to do this without encroaching upon the privileges of the members, or without interfering with their social habits, may require judicious counsel. It is very desirable that our brethren and sisters themselves should see the propriety of reducing the attendance at A. M., without anything being done that they might consider unpleasant restrictions. And we hope there will be a disposition on their part to do that which will best promote the interests of the meeting as a business council, although by so doing they may have to deny themselves of some things.

The Annual Council proper is not formed by the great number of the members of the church present at our Annual Meeting. According to the order adopted by the A. M. of 1866 for holding our general Council meeting, the delegates sent by the district meetings, and the elders present, constitute the Council. The following language occurs in the regulations for holding the A. M.: "We recommend that the Annual Council be formed by the delegates sent by the district meetings, and by all the ordained elders present." We see from this provision in the order for holding our A. M. that the Annual Council proper consists of the delegates sent by the district meetings, and the elders present. Had this order been kept in mind and carried out, our Annual Councils for the last few years could have been held more in order, and more satisfactory than they have been held. So, perhaps, we do not need as much change in the general order of holding our A. M. to make it satisfactory to the brotherhood, and successful as a business meeting, as many may think we do. If the order that was adopted in 1866 is carried out, it will greatly facilitate the business of A. M. and prevent the disorder that sometimes occurred on such occasions.

Many of the brethren believe that if a satisfactory report of the proceedings of the A. M. is published many who have heretofore attended the meeting will not attend, as by reading the report of the proceedings they will be satisfied, and this can be done without incurring the expense of going to the meeting, and without occupying the room that those need upon whom the labors of the meeting devolve. Many have so expressed themselves.— And the idea is worthy the consideration of the brotherhood in considering the propriety of a report, in view of the fact that the conviction is so general among the brethren that the attendance at our A. M. ought to be reduced. And there are at least two reasons why this should be done. First, the expense and labor in holding the meetings are such that there is a reluctance in many localities, as we have seen, to receive it. It is true, the money could be raised and the labor performed, if the feeling were not so general that there is an unnecessary amount of these required. It is thought by many that we can and that we ought to hold the meeting in a more simple and economical manner. But in the second place, the necessity of holding the meeting in a more simple and in a different way to what they are now held, arises from the consideration that the great multitude of persons present interferes in different respects with the transaction of the business of the meeting. The meeting is a general church Council, designed to do business for the brotherhood, and this should be kept in view, and everything avoided that might lessen the facilities for performing the solemn labors devolving on the Council. We hope that the change that is much desired and called for can be made, to the satisfaction and prosperity of the brotherhood. We have some other thoughts in regard to the A. M. that we designed to offer, but we must defer them until our next number.

RELIGION MAN'S DISTINGUISHING PROPERTY.

In contemplating the world of wind and matter, there are many things to wonder at, and many things which impress the thoughtful observer with awe as well as wonder, and which are well calculated to lead him to not only admire the wisdom and goodness of the great Author of creation, but likewise to adore him on account of his greatness, "for he hath shewed us his glory and his greatness." If we consider the animal creation, what a great number of animals exist! Everything seems to be the dwelling place of living creatures.

But the variety of beings in the world is no less wonderful than their number. Then the regular gradation of beings from the lowest to the highest, is another subject highly suggestive and pleasant to contemplate. There are living creatures but little advanced above mere matter. And then there are others a little higher in the scale of being, and thus the gradation goes on until man, who was made in the image of God, is reached. And indeed this gradation in the order of beings is not only observed between the lower animals and man, but it probably pertains to the higher order of intelligences, occupying the space between man and God.

But it is man's distinguishing faculty or that which gives him a character and position far above the inferior animals that we designed to offer some remarks upon. And the subject suggested the foregoing remarks as introductory. Man is distinguished from the inferior animals in the structure of his body. He is made to walk erect, which attitude is an advantage to him; he has hands, which are a convenience the lower animals have not; he has the faculty of speech, by which he can clothe his ideas with words or signs and thus intelligently and readily communicate with his companions. But then the lower animals have too a kind of natural language by which they can likewise to some extent, communicate with one another. While their bodily organization admirably adapts them to their places and for the purposes for which they were designed. And whatever superiority of bodily structure man may possess over the inferior animals, it is not that which mainly distinguishes him from them.—Man is also endued with reason; he forms ideas; he can compare these ideas together, and judge of their correctness, and then act in regard to them as his judgment may direct. But the lower animals possess instinct. This is explained to be "that power of volition or impulse produced by the peculiar nature of an animal, which prompts it to do certain things independent of all instruction or experience and without deliberation, where such act is immediately connected with its own individual preservation or that of its kind." Mr. Coleridge calls instinct "the power of selecting and adapting means to a proximate end." And he farther says, "When instinct adapts itself, as it sometimes does, to varying circumstances, there is manifested by the inferior animals, an instinctive intelligence, which is not different in kind from understanding, or the faculty which judges according to sense in man." Instinct, undoubtedly, as it has at times manifested itself in the lower animals, approaches to reason in man in some of its common operations. This being the case the presence of the reasoning power in man does not seem to be that which distinguishes him from the lower animals, since these also possess a power which approaches so near in its results to that of reason which is possessed by man.

Then that fact which most distinguishes man from the lower animals is not the peculiar structure of his body, nor his intellectual faculty; it is his moral nature; his sense of right and wrong; his tendency to believe in a future state, and his inclination to believe in a supreme Being, and to fear and worship that Being, and to seek his favor and avoid his displeasure. This religious nature may manifest itself in various ways, and in different degrees of intelligence and correctness. But however weak and erroneous we may sometimes find it to be, wherever we find man, we find some indications of it.—Cicero and Plutarch declare that before their time not a single nation was known among whom no indications of religion were found. The same may be said in this age of the world.

"Even the poor Indian, whose untutored mind Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind, Whose soul proud Science never taught to stray Far as the solar walk or milky way— Yet simple Nature to his hope has given Behind the cloud-topped hill, a humbler heaven; Some safer world in depth of wood embraced, Some happier island in the watery waste, Where slaves once more their native land behold, No fends torment, no Christians thirst for gold,—

And thinks, admitted to you equal shy, His faithful dog shall hear him company."

But brutes show no indication of this religious nature. They are altogether ignorant of the Power that created them. They have no sense of responsibility. In short, they have none of the attributes of a moral nature. Man then is man, and entitled to the distinction that is given him among created beings on earth, not simply because he is a reasoning, but because he is a religious being. He alone can soar in his thoughts to God, and comprehend in any degree his relation and duty to him. And because of his capacity for communion with God, he condescends to reveal himself to him; as his Creator, Preserver, Redeemer, Benefactor, and his everlasting portion. And man, appreciating his relation to his Maker, and receiving in a proper spirit the revelation with which he is favored and honored, he obtains a knowledge, for which he has a capacity, of divine things and divine Characters, which constitutes eternal life. "This is life eternal," said our Lord in one of his prayers, "that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

And in the enjoyment of this "life eternal" man enters upon a career of glory and improvement which will increase the space between him and all inferior animals, and which will bring him to a greater resemblance to, and a closer communion with, the great "Father of lights."

RECIPROCAL LOVE.

We fully reciprocate the kind feelings expressed toward us by brother Brumbaugh of the Pilgrim. We have tried under all the circumstances through which we have passed to maintain Christian feelings toward our brethren of the press, and we trust a faithful examination of our record as given in our own paper, will not disprove what we here profess. We have a very exalted view of the dignity of Christian character. And though we have not "attained" to that dignity, we can say with the Apostle Paul, we are "pressing toward the mark." And with our own Christian character as editors is closely identified the character of our papers. In a considerable degree they reflect the characters of their editors.—Hence we are exceedingly anxious that a high Christian character is maintained by the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. We despise anything that is low, mean, or dishonorable. And while we are desirous of obtaining a liberal patronage for our paper, we are no less desirous that that patronage be obtained by means in strict accordance with Christian honor, truth, and justice.

But we editors do not our work alone. We and our work are subject to influences outside of ourselves. Brother Brumbaugh remarks, in alluding to the events of the past, which he calls "adverse breezes," "These things, we are made to believe, are not so much the fault of the editors as it is of some of our readers who seem to delight in their endeavors to throw a bone of contention between us." Well, if this should be the case, we hope we may exercise discretion, and resist such temptations.

Our position as editors is one of responsibility, and we hope we will all appreciate that responsibility, and work together for the promotion of the cause of our divine Master. "I am for peace," said David, and so say we. "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." And may editors, contributors, readers, ministers, Christians, and all men enjoy abundantly of this righteousness, which is the righteousness of Christ.

PROFESSOR MILLER AND OUR YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Prof. Miller of the Plumcreek Normal School, has very kindly promised to write a series of articles for our Youth's Department. Natural History will be the subject of at least some of the series, and Botany is the branch of Natural History he begins with. The first of the series is given in our present number. We hope our youthful readers will appreciate the kindness of Professor Miller, and derive instruction and entertainment from his articles. And we hope that many of our adult readers, as well as the youthful, will be interested in the articles. We think, from the Professor's knowledge of the subject, that he will make his articles instructive. It is desirable that the subject be made as simple as possible, that it may be the more readily understood by those for whose benefit it is designed.—This, no doubt, the Professor will understand, and make his explanations and applications accordingly.

be careful that you teach no more than the Scriptures teach, for if you do, you are no better than the people you condemn. They, you say, do not teach enough; we may teach too much. They err upon one side, we may err upon the other. No doubt the reader will say, "Physician, heal thyself." We are now at it. We are now doing Missionary Work we think, too, where it is much needed; and we do not want our brethren to oppose the work that was begun by the Lord himself and has been partially kept up ever since. Brethren, let us still pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth." And then let us watch and work to the same great end. Farewell.

Admonitory.

BY H. P. BRINKWORTH,

"So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief." Heb. 3: 19.

The text above referred to has especial reference to the children of Israel. By reading their journeyings through the wilderness, we see more than once where they murmured against their leader, and showed signs of unbelief in the ability or power of God to lead them safely to that land which had been promised to them. This hard-heartedness and unbelief, we see, grieved their God, and he suffered them not to inherit the land: "Surely they shall not see the land which I swear unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that provoked me see it." Numbers 14: 23. "But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have despised." 31st verse.

So ought we, dear brethren and sisters, be very careful lest we come short of the glory of God, and fall through the same example of unbelief. Let us not murmur against the kindness and the blessings that are continually bestowed upon us, but let us rather have kind and obedient hearts; and though the world may scoff at us, or point the finger of scorn, let us remember our Master when here on earth. "He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Isa 53: 3; and he says, "The world hated me before it hated you." Oh! if we could only view him derided, mocked, scourged, and spit upon, yet bearing all meekly; and in the midst of all, while the weight of the sins of the world rests upon him, and his very life-blood is eeking out upon the cross, we bear him yet breathing a prayer for his very murderers—"Father forgive them, they know not what they do." Oh, what love must this be! And yet, dear reader, He suffered all this for you. Yes

For you he shed his precious blood,

On the cross, on the cross.

Oh, hear his all-important cry,

"Eloi, Lama, Sabachthani!"

Draw near, and see your Savior die

On the cross, on the cross.

A Specific for Wounds and Sores.

In reading on page 12 of PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN, "A Confession," I was so well pleased that I thought it might be of good use to call the special attention of the readers to its contents; hence I shall name some of its ingredients.

First, then, Good will to men; 2. compassion; 3. a little patience; 4. a goodly portion of meekness; 5. a large part of humility; 6. love without dissimulation—no danger of the quantity, use it unmeasured. Apply with a free will in the manner brother M. M. Eshelman did, as the case may require. It will heal wounds a thousand miles off; provided, however, there hath been no obstruction made, such as taking advantage of a person; in such a case of making a wound, it requires a restoration in addition to the above specific. Hundreds, yea, thousands of wounds and sores are made inadvertently; such as appear in the upper corner of page 13, by using the word "we" in a rather sarcastic way! It is calculated, at least, to make a sore if we insinuate insincerity. Oh! when shall we be able to love our neighbor as ourself? When shall Adam learn not to put the blame on Eve, and Eve on somebody else? "Nothing warms the heart more than to own ourselves in the wrong." Why struggle so desperately to appear righteous? Better say, "I am sorry, very sorry, to have caused grief," when even you are not convinced that you have done wrong. Dedicated to those whom I love in the Lord.

F. P. LEHR.

God Wants You.

Oh men and women, God wants you! A mighty conflict is in progress. It is the war of the centuries between truth and falsehood, holiness and sin, good and evil, God and the devil. This conflict deepens; there is not a soul on earth who does not bear a part in it. Each and every one is for or against; neutral positions in this war, there are none. He or she that is idle is against God; and to be against him is to be in peril of irretrievable loss, for Jehovah will at last certainly win. There is so much to do and so short a time in which to do it, that to do nothing is a crime of the deepest dye. Besides, to sit down and sit still is personally perilous. Resist, or be swept away. All may and should work. Wisdom cries, Work well. Some can do much; others but little; each can do something; all can do more than they dream.

Mankind are treading the verge of a wonderful age. Mighty foes heaven and toss society. Mighty activities accelerate its masses to a pitch of speed absolutely headlong. Rest or calm there is none. Hurry, hurry, haste, haste, goads on all men. A trumpet-call sounds, "To arms!" Under a bloodstained banner, or beneath a black flag all are ranging. Where is your place? Come out of your hiding, come into the light. Report for active service. You are wanted in the King's grand army. Cling to the evil, and you will go down in the swift-coming struggle. Awake! Bestir thyself. Fold not your arms in lazy lock. At the foe. Dare to do right, dare to be true. Do your own work. No other can do it for you. The conflict intensifies as the age's end approaches. It is the last age of sin's reign on earth. The sinful cherub rages, and his dragon voice roars hideously. His day of doom is fast nearing. Men may well be alarmed at his fury and power, but God is not alarmed. God's hour of eternal victory cometh. The storm will end in glorious, ceaseless calm; all that sin has disjoined and marred shall return sweetly into its assigned place, and be restored to its oldtime beauty. The conqueror shall rest from toil, and wear the laurels of the hard-won fight.

Once more I charge you that you are wanted in this sacred war. Again I say, Do something for God. Do it, even though it is but little. Enlist not for a day, not for an hour, but for life. Join the thinned ranks of the holy. Inquire reverently, "Lord, what more can I do?" Do nothing rashly nor impetuously, but in the calmness of assured hope and conscious salvation. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." To the warriors on time's battle field, eternal day will come ere long, its throne will be sure, and its rest will be sweet. The King cries, "Behold I come quickly, to give every man according as his work shall be." Then work, O reader, work for your Lord; he wants you.—The Christian.

—Could we see things as God sees them, we should not have a solitary wish for a single alteration in our circumstance; we should say, "it is well."

For The Young.

FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

Natural History--Botany.

To the Boys and Girls who Read our Paper, Greeting.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS:—The editor of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and I have arranged for a series of talks on Natural History, and I have chosen Botany for the first lot of articles. Now the way I happened to think of it was this: Scattered all over the country, in the thousands of happy homes where the paper goes, are thousands of boys and girls who will go tramping over the fields full of plants and flowers that are getting ready for their appearance soon, and a too great number of them will not know anything about them in a scientific way. Now this ought not to be so, and I propose taking charge of about ten thousand of you and telling you something of the way plants grow and behave, and what they are called when they get their scientific dress on. I will try to make everything as plain as I can, though I give you all fair warning that I am going to use some hard words, which must be used, and which must be committed to memory, so that wherever and whenever I use them you will know just what I mean.

We will just proceed, with all the older boys and girls looking on and listening as if they knew all about it,—which, by the way, confidentially, they don't.

The first thing a man or woman does, who studies the nature of objects, living or dead, on the earth, is to group or classify what he is dealing with. The person who pursues these studies is called a Naturalist. If he studies plants, he is called a Botanist.

Now, boys and girls, and older persons who don't know all about it, let us consider some plan of classifying plants; and if we look all around us we can see that there are some plants like the rose, the sunflower, and the Johnny-jump-up, that always produce flowers; and there then are some like the puffball, the mosses and the toad-stool that never produce any flowers. So let us begin the classification by dividing the whole vegetable creation into two great parts—those which produce flowers and those which do not.

Now for the first hard names. Spell them, learn them, commit them to memory; for after this when I speak of a flowering plant I will say that it belongs to the Phenogamia (fe-no-ga-me-a), and when I want to speak of a flowerless plant, the word will be Cryptogamia. An apple tree belongs to the phenogamia, because it has flowers; so do the ragweed and morning-glory for the same reason. The mushroom has no flowers, and consequently belongs with the cryptogamia. Now where is the boy or girl who can't remember that much in one week? One thing I want to caution you about is that you must not regard as belonging to the cryptogamia, such plants as have only small or almost invisible flowers; for the ragweed flowers just as well as the rose, and is phenogamous just as well. Now for some questions to see if you understand what you have been doing.

Is red clover phenogamous or not?

Is a toad stool cryptogamous or not?

Is corn a cryptogamous or a phenogamous plant?

In our next talk, next week, we will classify plants as to their growth; and now, at any time that you want to ask any questions about Botany, if you will write to me at Elderton, Armstrong Co., Pa., where I am teaching in our Plumcreek school, and if you will put a postal card or a stamp in your letter, I will answer your questions, if I can, and will be glad to hear from you about anything connected with this interesting branch of study.

Prof. HOWARD MILLER.

Locust Eating.

We read in the Bible that the food of John the Baptist was "locusts and wild honey." A great deal of pains has been taken by commentators to prove that it was not what we call locust, but the fruit of the wild carob tree, that John ate with the honey that he found in the wilderness where he lived.

But I do not think that anyone who has traveled in Arabia, found rest and shelter in an Arab's tent, and been a guest at his hospitable board, would thus judge of what the Bible means by "locusts." In Turkey, Persia, Arabia, and all that region of country, locusts—genuine, bona fide locusts—have been eaten from remote antiquity; and to this day they form an important item of the food used by the common people. The Bedouins collect them in immense quantities, and after a partial drying, pack them in sacks. Then at their convenience, when the season for collecting is over, they steam the insects in close vessels over a hot fire, winnow them in broad baskets to remove the legs and wings, and then pulverize between flat stones. When wanted for food, they are only moistened with a little water, just as the Arabs do in preparing their date-flour, and then the repast is all ready.

The Turks eat locusts in the same way, and by very many other Orientals they are regarded as the choicest of dainties.

The Moors boil or fry them, seasoning with salt, pepper and vinegar; and they pronounce them even superior to quails and pigeons. The Hottentots make from the eggs a delicious soup; they also roast the locusts over a slow fire, and eat them as we do caramels or bonbons. Dr. Livingstone says he used them at first from necessity, when deprived of all other food; "but, strange to say, grew daily more fond of them, and at last preferred them to shrimps or oysters."—St. Nicholas.

What Idleness Does.

Many young people think an idle life must be a pleasant one, but there are none who enjoy life so little and are such burdens to themselves as those who have nothing to do. Those who are obliged to work hard all day enjoy their short period of rest and recreation so much that they are apt to think that if their whole life were spent in rest and recreation it would be the most pleasant of all. But this is a sad mistake as they would soon find out if they made a trial of the life they think so agreeable. One who is never busy can never enjoy rest, for rest implies relief from previous labors; and if our whole time were spent in amusing ourselves, we should find it more wearisome than the hardest day's work. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us; the idle can know nothing of it. Many people leave off business and settle down to a life of enjoyment, but they generally find that they are not nearly so happy as they were before, and are often glad to return to their old occupation to escape the miseries of indolence.—Sel.

THERE are thousands of our successful money makers who are paying a big price for their fortunes. It is not charged that they are dishonest or in a wicked line of business, but simply that they sacrifice too much that is better than money, in order to get money in quantities which make a burden rather than a comfort, and which, so far from adding joy to life, in many cases bring life itself to a premature end. The price is surely too big.—Pres. Tuttle.

—We learn to climb by keeping our eye, not on the hills that lie behind us, but on the mountains that rise before us.

The Great Teacher directed his disciples to the flowers of the field, as receiving the special attention of our heavenly Father, that they might learn to trust in him, and not give themselves an unnecessary or undue amount of care for the necessary blessings of life. And he used the vine to illustrate the important and close connection between himself and Christian believers. May the articles alluded to lead our readers to think more of God, that they may know him better, and love him more. We hope their character will be such that will produce this tendency.

"Oh! for the expanded mind that soars on high,
Rang'g afar with Meditation's eye!
That climbs the height of yonder starry road,
Rising through nature up to nature's God.
"Oh! for a soul to trace a Savior's power
In each sweet form that decks the blooming flower;
And as we wander such fair scenes among,
To make the Rose of Sharon all our song."

A REQUEST.

Having had a considerable amount of money to pay this spring, more than we expected, we find ourselves in much need of funds to meet approaching liabilities, and to pay our current expenses. We are therefore compelled to call upon those who are in arrears with us for our paper and for books received in 1874 and 1875. We have been indulgent and waited with our patrons a reasonable length of time. We now ask them to remit at once the amount due our office. Our paper costs us much time and money, and we hope our patrons will appreciate our situation, and spare no effort to respond favorably if possible to our request. Our appeal is to those who owe us on old accounts, for debts made in 1874 and 1875. These should now be settled if possible. Brethren and friends, please give our request your early and earnest attention. And by remitting the amount due us, whatever it is, you will greatly oblige us.

ERRATA.

Our proof-reader in reading the proof of our article in our last number on brother Miller's book, overlooked a typographical error which entirely obscures the idea designed to be conveyed. We said in the second paragraph of our article when alluding to the subject of Non-conformity, "He draws his arguments from the Bible, and none who accept that book as the standard of Christian faith and practice, can consistently object to his general conclusions." Such was our language in our manuscript, but in the printed copy the word "constantly" is used where the words "can consistently" should have been used. In the same paragraph read "difficult" for "difficultly."

MINUTES WANTED.

We should be pleased to have the Minutes of 1839. If any of our brethren can furnish us with them, they will confer a favor upon us by sending them at once. They can be returned if desired.

Gleanings and Gittings.

Bro. Isaac Kilhefer, Ashland, Ohio, April 2nd, says:

"As you published what I wrote to you in regard to brother D. M. Witmer, I will inform you that he has passed over the river of death. He died on the 30th of March, and was buried on Saturday, April the 1st. We feel very sorry to part with our dear brother. He was an extraordinary man for kindness and uprightness in all his dealings with his fellow men, and was, consequently, much beloved by all his neighbors; but we hope and believe that our loss is his great gain.

Bro. George W. Keim, Creston, Union Co., Iowa, April 5th, says:

"Some want to know if we have any brethren living here, or any prospect for a church. I would say, I am receiving letters almost daily, from brethren, since my last notice in our papers. Brethren are writing to me from all parts of the United States, or near about, and quite a number of them say they are coming here to look at this country this coming summer. I have up to this time received about thirty-five or forty letters, and I think, out of so many, surely some will make up their minds to stay with us. I have letters from several ministers that will perhaps be here sometime sooner or later. Brother Studabaker of Illinois will be here in May, the Lord willing. I am at present rejoiced to think of the prospect of a church. I am yet prepared to furnish real estate Journals. Send along your names; I will send you one free."

Bro. A. M. T. and sister M. C. Miller, Marshalltown, Iowa, writing April 2nd, say:

"The Seventh-day Advents have sent a missionary in here this winter. It is said that he is a very good talker, and quite a number have been converted to his belief. Some are reading for themselves. A gentleman was here yesterday, and though he is not of their belief, generally, he cannot see why we, as Christians, do not keep the seventh day as the day of rest, saying, "It has been blessed," &c., and that he hath looked through the testament and cannot find where the day was changed from the seventh to the first. We would like some help from you in regard to the time, and by whom it was first kept as the Christians day of rest. We presume history would disclose if it was kept by the apostles. We believe it (the first day) to be the Christian's holy day, but would like to have more light on the subject. We want you to send us the best treatise on the subject that you know of, or tell us where to obtain one. We will remit the price of it. We would also like an article on the subject, from your pen. We wish to post ourselves better in regard to this matter, that we may be ready, when opportunity presents itself, to do a little good. Please let us hear from you at your earliest convenience and very much oblige."

In response to this appeal we will say that next week we expect to publish an able article on this subject from the pen of brother R. H. Miller.

Bro. J. W. Stein, in writing from Linside, Monroe Co. West Va., March 31st, says:

"We desired much to stop with you, and a number of dear brethren who had solicited a visit before our return home, but time forbids. We have had seasons of spiritual pleasure and profit since we reached Va., though our time has been partly spent with relatives and old Baptist friends, entirely away from the brethren, during which, standing alone, with the Divine assistance, we did the best we could to give a reason of the hope that was in us. According to promise, we will try, if the Lord will, to reach brother R. H. Miller's at Ladoga, Ind., next week, on our return homeward, where brethren may address us for some days. Would love much to be at our A. M. this summer if our time had permitted, but we begin to feel anxious to see our little body at home."

In another column of this issue, will be found a letter from our Danish missionary. We are glad to hear that he and his family have reached their destination, but sorry that they had so much sickness on the way. Now brother Hope is in his field, and, no doubt will soon learn that practical missionary work is very different from fine, speculative theories in relation to it. Let us bear him up in prayer and by rendering assistance in every possible way. The following is of a later date:

W. OYENS IN SCHLESWIG. }
March 20th, 1876. }

I have traveled all over Denmark to get the Danish Fund. I have not been able to rent a house or rooms; as the custom is they only move twice a year. I saw a place here that I may perhaps get by May next. To board, will cost us $40.00 a month; but if we keep house, we will have it cheaper. But everything costs double what it used to when I was here. The mission has a good prospect here, as the Germans force the people to hear German preaching every second time, and that they do not like. I cannot see that we can carry on this mission for less than $400 00 a year, when we expect to cover some of our expenses by our own hands. Will you please send us the papers. Address Christian Hope, Smed R. Madsen, Eiby Station, Denmark, Europe.

Were We Right?

I see in No. 12, present volume, Bro-Miller of Deer Park, Md., asks, "Were we right" in "starting a prayer-meeting?" I would say, yes; and in support of the affirmation, would refer the brother to the Acts of the apostles. 2: 5-12. At the time when the disciples were persecuted above measure, and James had been slain with the sword, and Peter was apprehended, and put into prison, and bound with two chains, see how the prayer of the church prevailed, and Peter was delivered in a miraculous manner by the hand of an angel of the Lord. And when he came to the house of Mary, he found them praying. The admonition of the apostle Paul is, "Pray without ceasing." And our Savior says, "Ask and ye shall receive."

But I have also a question to ask. Where brethren are too far apart, as is often the case here in the west, and cannot meet in a prayer-meeting capacity, should they attend the prayer-meetings of other denominations that differ so much from us in faith and practice? May God in his infinite wisdom and mercy guide us by his Holy Spirit into all truth.

How was it Done?

Will some of the brethren inform us how the soldiers cast lots for Christ's vesture? Math. 27: 35. Did each one give his voice as to who should have it? Or did it become the property of one of them by chance, through an unforeseen occurrence? It seems according to St. John 19: 23, that there were four soldiers engaged in the parting of his garments, and they made four parts of them, to each soldier a part. Now the coat was without a seam, woven from the top throughout, and consequently they would not rend it, but agreed amongst themselves to cast lots for it, whose it should be. What does casting lots mean? Brethren, tell us. How was it Done?

Dear Primitive Christian:

As you have solicited news from all parts of the brotherhood, I will say that in this part of God's moral vineyard, we are all well, as far as I know. We had a remarkably nice winter till the first week in this month (March), since which time it has been raining or snowing nearly every day up to this date. There is nothing being done in the line of farming.

Brethren John and David Holler of New Lebanon, Montgomery county, Ohio, landed here on the 9th inst., and have settled amongst us. We hope some more of the dear brethren will follow their example. There is plenty of room. Brethren, come on, and help us to build up a church. You can get good land here at from $2 to $10 per acre; and there are some second-hand homesteads to be had yet for almost nothing. Now is the time to come and get good homes; for in a few years land will all be gone, and it is rapidly advancing in value. We insist on those who have to rent or who have small farms to come here and secure homes, while land can be had for almost nothing, and thus form a church at once. I will give any desired information to those who will apply to me by writing.

We now number about fifty members, with two speakers and five deacons; but we are scattered over seven or eight counties. The field of labor is so large that we want to divide our district; and we pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers. We have set the second Saturday of April for the time of our council to consider this matter, after which we will write you more fully concerning our spiritual progress. There is a great field open here for doing good, and there are many calls for meeting that cannot be filled. Brethren, the call is great. Who will come over and help us? Both speakers and lay-members are invited. We think you can do well both temporally and spiritually. Do not think that we are out of the world. We have fine lands, well watered, and can raise all kinds of grain and vegetables in abundance. Any of the brethren passing through on the Union Pacific R. R. are invited to call and see us, and look at our country. We live 50 miles west of Omaha, and 4 miles north of Roger's Station.

Pray for us that our little church may prosper, while we shall look forward with the hope of a large church in a few years. I remain your weak brother in the Lord.

Editors Primitive Christian:

Where give you a little church news for your worthy paper.

On the 18th of March brother S. W. Wilt and myself started to visit our brethren in the Glade Run district. On the evening of the same day we commenced meeting in the John meeting-house, and continued to meet for the worship of God, day after day until Tuesday, 21st, on which day five were added to the number of disciples, by being immersed in the name of Jesus Christ.

On the evening of the 21st we commenced meeting at the Glade Run meeting-house, and continued the same, day and evening, until March 29th. During these services four more were brought to feel the necessity of salvation, and were added as those above. One of this number was formerly a prominent member of the Baptist fraternity, and although her friends opposed her very strongly, and forbade her to enter their dwellings if she would unite with the people of God, the Lord enabled her, by his grace, to do as our blessed Savior taught, that is, to love him more than father or mother, houses or lands. Though her father and mother have crossed the Jordan of death, she manifested the same spirit taught by the immaculate Son of God. Although friends are very near and dear to us, and while we should esteem them very highly and love them much for their charity and all the good qualities they may possess, yet when they stand between us and our God, may God help us to do as we are taught by one of the holy Apostles,—"Serve God rather than man." We should love our blessed Jesus more than we do our friends. He is said to be "the chiefest among ten thousand" and "altogether lovely." He also "sticketh closer than a brother." May God enable our dear sister to be faithful with all God's chosen and peculiar people, and may we all unitedly pray for those who oppose the divine behests of high Heaven, and by so doing oppose their own happiness. We feel truly grateful to our dear brethren and sisters for the special interest they manifested in our welfare while we tried to labor for the salvation of sinners. May they yet, in the future, see the fruits of their prayers, is the sincere desire of your weak brother in Christ.

Poor Fund.

Brother Quinter:

This is a subject of considerable importance, but I desire to express my opinion in as few words as possible. This subject has been on my mind for some time; and I think it should be taken into consideration by every brother and sister in the church. I rejoice to know that the brethren have instituted a Poor Fund; though I think it might be improved on considerably. I fear many will be subject to disappointments, as the amount will vary, from year to year, according to circumstances. Now I will try to give you my plan, hoping some one will have a better plan than this.

First, I think our A. M., as it has been conducted, is a great and unnecessary expense. Let us send our delegates there to do the required work, and the rest of us stay at home. What is the use in providing for thousands of people that have no special business there? Would it not be better to take the money that is unnecessarily paid out there and apply it to the Poor Fund? Let the A. M. organize a general fund, say of ten or twenty thousand dollars, and that money to be loaned to the brethren for good purposes, such as building churches, or any other good work, at six per cent. per annum, and the interest be applied to the Poor Fund, in order to supply the poor with reading matter, and to bear the expenses of travelling ministers. The call is from all sides for help, and I think the brethren are fully able to supply the demand, if the proper course will be taken.

Brother Quinter:—

Please give this a place forthwith in your paper, in reply to brother B. F. Miller of Garrett county, Md., in No. 12, p. 187. As to the land, it is good, and can be had on good and cheap terms, and is at the head of market, and as to the ministerial help, that is much needed; but as to the organization and prayer-meeting, to leave it in such a gloom and darkness would be injurious to the good cause. I am a lover of prayer and prayer-meetings, but all things in order. I shall try to give some light on the subject.

There were some members gathered in that place, mostly by Elder Jacob M. Thomas. Then arrangements were made by J. M. Thomas, Solomon Bucklew, Jeremiah Beeghly and myself to give them a monthly meeting, so each one preached for them every four months; and after a long time the brethren gave it into my charge, as I was nearer, and I proposed to them to have a prayer-meeting on Lord's day between preaching days, and they willingly consented to it. This was carried on for some time, and the number of members still increased,—some coming in by baptism, and some moving in from other localities. Then we organized, and this was and is called Oakland, and not Glade Valley church. Now they had one minister, Thomas Nair, and two deacons. In a short time after this (which was not last fall, but last fall a year ago), the church thought it would be better to stop the prayer-meeting for the present, in the manner in which it was conducted, of which I will say nothing now. After this, Chambers Glenn, a minister, moved to Oakland, and they had preaching every Lord's day. So no more was said about the prayer-meeting till it travelled all over the United States in the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN. Last summer there were two more deacons elected in that place; and last fall one of the ministers and one of the deacons moved to the Valley of Virginia, and one of the other deacons to Ritchie county, W. Va., and this winter the other minister moved away from that place, and several of the laity have moved to other localities. Is the downfall of that organization due to the removal of members, or the want of a prayer-meeting, which they can have at any time they agree on the subject?—Judge ye, brethren and sisters, and readers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.

I think I am the person referred to in the above article. I do not subscribe my name S. Fike, but S. A. Fike, or SAMUEL A. FIKE.

Brother James:

If you will permit, I would like to answer some of the many questions I have been asked by our dear brethren. It is almost impossible to answer all and all the letters I got, but I will do the best I can.

First, I live two miles from the Kansas, Pacific rail road. We have a good school-house and get the tax of twenty-nine thousand dollars from the railroad Co. and the bed and railing stock of the road in our district. The water is good, and there are some good springs. Wells vary in depth from ten to sixty feet, in our neighborhood. There are five or six coal banks opened within seven miles of us. Timber is middling scarce. There is no alkali or hard-pain; soil, dark loam and deep. Lumber dressed, from twenty-seven to thirty-five dollars, per 1,000. Shingles $3.00 to $5.00 per thousand. No fear of Indians. Splendid stone for building. On the bluffs, land mostly rolling; some very level too. Every other section is railroad land which is nearly all sold. Near by it sells at from two to ten dollars per acre. There is some Government land on the same section I am on yet to homestead or pre-empt. There is a good deal vacant yet. All kinds of small grain grow; good spring and fall wheat. I don't claim corn as a sure crop. Mellons grow very plentiful. We had a good crop of corn last year. Fall wheat looks well, that was sowed early. Our roads are always good, winters dry and not as cold as in Pennsylvania. The land is nearly all prairie, and no brush or anything to hinder one from plowing. The grasshoppers were here and did some damage, but I think they will not soon come again. The people have plenty of wheat here now. We have men here now that used to make their living at chopping wood in Pennsylvania and last year raised 150 bushels of wheat.

Now, my dear brethren, your and our prayers have been answered. The brethren of the Solomon's Valley, Kansas, were here, and preached for us, and we had the best meeting I ever was at. One precious soul was baptized, and there are a good many that are nearly persuaded to come. But Satan is going around as a roaring lion; and we would ask you again to pray for us. We feel certain that God is for us. There are eight members here now. We are all well for which we always try to be thankful. From your weak brother,

W. B. HIMES.

An Acknowledgment of Favors.

Dear Brother James:

I wish to acknowledge through the columns of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN the reception of a bundle of tracts and pamphlets from brother J. H. Moore; also, several numbers of the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN from sister Sarah Beckly, of Iowa, also, a treatise on Trine Immersion sent by brother B. F. Moomaw. These kind brethren and sisters have been made to feel for those in Kentucky that are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and those that are seeking for the strait gate and narrow way. I feel very thankful to them for the interest they have taken in my friends, and my duty to God and man by distributing them where I think they will do the most good. Yes, I feel truly thankful that there is a way open for me to work for my Savior. I have long wished that I could make myself more useful in the Redeemer's cause, but the force of circumstances and the condition I was placed in, seemed to retard my efforts. But as our Savior does not require any thing more than a reasonable service, I hope he will forgive the past, and in the future I hope to make myself more useful in his cause. I feel that I must put in my time as best I can to his service. I must do his will while it is called to day, "for the night cometh when no man can work." Brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may be able to let my light so shine that others seeing my good works may join in and feel like assisting me in convincing the ungodly of their errors and leading them to Christ.

Your sister,

HAMILTON, Mo., March 28th, 1875.

Dear Friends:

I left Dallas, Texas, Feb. 18th, on the 7 o'clock train in the morning, and arrived at Parsons, Kansas, at 1 o'clock the next morning, where I stopped two days to visit cousin Walter Deardorf, formerly from Goshen, Ind. They bought a beautiful farm two miles from Parsons, and were building a nice house on it. That is a beautiful country, but I think timber is rather scarce.

I left Parsons on Monday morning and arrived at St. Joseph, Mo., the same evening. I stopped there two days to visit my nephew, John S. Welch, also from Goshen, Ind. I had a pleasant visit. I left there on Wednesday evening at 5 o'clock and arrived at home about 8 o'clock. My husband and children met me at the train. This was again a happy meeting after an absence of ten weeks and two days. I found my family and son-in-law's all well, and got along well while I was gone. I can truly say I felt that I had much to be thankful for, as the Giver of every good and perfect gift watched over me, guarded and protected me through a strange and distant land.—I enjoyed my trip very much, and had a pleasant time while in Dallas, Texas, with my children. They spared no pains to make me comfortable while I stayed.—They insisted on my staying longer, but as I had never been away from my family so long, and they wrote and told me what beautiful winter weather they had (I think milder winter weather than we ever before had since we are in Mo.), I concluded to return, as they were already planting potatoes at Dallas, and thinking we would, perhaps, have mild weather the rest of the winter. But I am sorry to say it changed soon after I came home. On the 27th of February we had quite a snow-storm, and I took a severe cold, and have had more or less ever since. Yesterday, the 27th of March, we had the greatest snow storm we ever had since we are in Mo., which is 8 years. There were snow drifts from three to four feet deep. You need not wonder that I have wished myself in Texas again, to stay till the cold weather was over; for while I was there the weather reminded me of April and May, with the exception of about one week. I enjoyed better health while there, and coughed less, than I have for years. The climate agreed very well with me. I do think there are good openings in Texas for good farmers. They have some very poor farmers there. If some of our eastern and northern farmers would go there, they might teach them considerable. I am pleased to hear that my first letter has created quite a stir among some of the brethren. My son received a number of letters of inquiry before I left. I received one from sister Sarah A. Daggett, Ashton, Ill. Did you receive my letter? If so, please let me know what conclusion you have come to, and how many think of going. Dear sister, should you or any of the dear brethren move to Texas and be dissatisfied, cast no reflections on me. I do think it will make a splendid country. I heard an old settler on the cars remark that Dallas was bound to make one of the finest cities in Texas, as the surrounding country is good. People come 125 miles from the frontier to buy wagons from my son, and do their main trading; and besides they bring in a vast amount of cotton. I saw two wagons hitched together, the front one had eleven bales of cotton on it, and seven yoke of oxen hitched to it; and two teams with six yokes. Cotton raising is a great advantage that we do not have here. Some wished to know if wood is plenty. They buy the best in Dallas for from $3 to $4 per cord.

Brother Martin and sister Swank from Cerro Gordo, Piatt county, Ill., visited our children, and they were well pleased. We had a letter from them while I was there, and they talk of spending next winter at Dallas. Brethren and friends, you that wish to go to a warmer climate, can now form a faint idea from this whether you would like to go there to live, and help build up a church and extend the borders of Zion's kingdom. There is one thing, brethren, we should always consider, and not look on the bright side alone, and flatter ourselves that everything will suit us. I have lived in four different States, and I have always found some disadvantages and many disappointments, and I never expect to find perfection until I reach the other shore. I can truly say I was made to rejoice while in the sunny South among entire strangers (except my children); yet I was not alone.—I had a true friend that I could hold sweet communion with, when all around me were asleep. Yes I could worship the same God I do at home. My mind was often seriously impressed while so far from home, not knowing whether I should ever meet my family again. I knew that I had three in the spirit world waiting for me to come, and one has made the good choice. My sincere prayer to God is that I may live to see my children all happily converted to God. Brethren, I feel that there is not enough missionary spirit amongst us, when I see so many that know nothing about the Brethren; but how can the poor ministers go unless the church sends them? Let us arouse to a sense of our duty.

Your weak sister in the Lord,
ELIZABETH WITWER.

WESTER BRONDERSLEN, }
March 16:h, 1876.

Dearly beloved brethren and sisters in America, the grace of Jesus, the blessings of God be with you all. Amen.

To day I write to you from our dear Christian Hanson's home. Long has he been waiting, and now he is glad, and I with him. We have been conversing together about his standing, and of you as God's people, and about your peculiarities as such; about the mission, and where to start, &c. He holds the same views as before; and even in things not known to him, as nonconformity in dress, he sees the propriety in it. On war, oaths, and other things, he is a conformed brother; also the doctrine of baptism is clear now to him. He requested me to tell you that so far as he knows he is of one mind with the church; but he would like to know all about us, as a church, and then would the question of admittance come up.

ABOUT THE MISSION.

We have come to the conclusion to go to a city in Schleswig, there rent us a little home, buy some furniture and board ourselves; and from there try to proclaim the gospel. I expect to get printed five hundred copies of each of our different tracts, and see how they work before we get more. I see no prospect for us, as some thought we should, to work for our living and preach the gospel; for here are plenty people to dig, and even plenty who are not ashamed to beg. Though this much we have promised and will try to keep, that when time and digging meet us in our way, we shall be just as faithful in digging as we desire to be in preaching; but for the rest we look with an eye of faith, through you, to our dear Father, who moved you to send us to this strange land; for, indeed, we find it strange. We are still strangers to our relations, and can expect no help from them.

Our journey was a trying and troublesome one. We were on the stormy ocean 12 days, the greater part of which I was more sick than I ever was; still, I had to attend to my little Anna, as my wife's ill health got worse, and worse, every day, by sea-sickness and cold. Then, too, our little baby took sick, very severely, the last two days on the water, and is still very low. By those circumstances we came also into many unforeseen expenses; especially since we came on land, for our friends, the Germans, thought good in our weakness to relieve us of all our money, if possible. Had we not received $12.00 the Danish Fund of brother Brumbagh, in Huntingdon, Pa., we would have been compelled to sell our clothes. But the Lord, who tries us in the furnace of affliction, knows how to provide and prepare his little ones for temptation. We know we were afflicted in his cause, and that if we had to roll to and fro, up and down, having plenty and good things to eat but never permitted to enjoy them, that we still were on the way to carry out the great commission of our Lord, in your name; and even if it should cost us our little one and our dear companion, we knew the Lord would bring us here for your sake, that you, as his church, could obey his commands. We thought of you in your comfort and plenty, and thanked God that you did not know our pain or distress. We thought, too, of some who think this is carried out for a big name and honor, that it would do such good to be in our place a few hours, to acquaint themselves with the reality. We thought of others who were on their knees pleading for us. We remembered those who have been doing all for us in our wants, and spared themselves no trouble to help us. We see you all in the spirit, this minute, and we can weep in this sheet. We wish you the best blessing of our Father. We groan to be kept faithful to our trust. We commit you and ourselves into his hand, praying to gather all into his kingdom. We ask you to pray for us, and bid you farewell.

Yours in love,
CHRISTIAN HOPE.

MACEDON, Mercer Co., Ohio, }

Dear Editors:

I will give you some news from this part of God's moral vineyard. Brethren Samuel Murray and Samuel Butterbaugh were with us on the 3<sup>d</sup> of March and had some meetings; and five precious souls were made willing to come out on the Lord's side, and were baptized, and are on their way rejoicing in the God of their salvation. There was also one reclaimed. We now number 17 members. Brethren S. Murray and Peter Cauffman expect to be with us on the 10th of April, and we expect to get some more then, as one has already said so.

As there have a dozen or more brethren written to us about the country, I would say that we have just as good land as there is in any part of Ohio. I would say for the benefit of all the brethren, that a great many people want to sell out here and go west, and consequently offer their lands cheap. For a sample, there are 80 acres, about 40 acres cleared, good land, good log house and log barn, and a splendid well of water on it, and lies on a good road and close to a saw-mill and a school-house—price, $2,400. There are plenty more such close to us. And timber land can be bought. There are 170 acres of timber land—good timber and good land—price, $2,000. A tract of 40 acres, land good—$500. There is some cheaper yet. There is a brother about to buy a farm here for $3,000. Health is as good as anywhere else. Water is good in most places.

There are parts here where the people never heard the Brethren preach yet, and there is a large field open here for much good. Brethren, I have often been deeply impressed when looking over the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and seeing how many speakers assemble together, and we are out here by ourselves, and sometimes are for three months without meeting, while there is such a good prospect of doing so much. Let us be a little in earnest for the heavenly land, and try to bring others into the fold.

This is a good place for those who have but little money; and as there is a prospect of doing so much good, I think some will come. Come, brethren, lay members and ministers. Those who intend to come, should come in the spring, or the price of land might advance. I will now close, hoping to see some dear brethren coming in. Brethren and sisters, pray for me that my faith fail not.

Yours in gospel love,
CHRISTIAN BIRK.

MARRIAGES.

March 23<sup>d</sup>, 1876, by Elder Joseph I. Cover, Mr. JOHN F. HESS and sister AATTIE HIBBS, both of Fayette county, Pa.

OBITUARIES.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Middletown, Henry county, Ind., Feb. 8, 1876, ANNA CLARA daughter of brother Daniel and sister Miller, aged 15 years, 4 months and 29 days. Disease, consumption. The funeral was conducted by brethren Geo. Hoover and J. W. McClure, in the Christian meeting-house in Middletown. Her remains were interred in the Brethren's burying-ground two miles east of Middletown.

LIZZIE HOOVER.

August 10th, 1875, FRANKLIN, son of brother Amos and sister Justina Smith, aged 4 months and 29 days. Funeral discourse by Eld. Heil Hamilton and A. Rinehart.

Within the bounds of the Mobern church, Wayne county, Ohio, March 25th, 1876, JACOB MOWRY, aged 87 years, 11 months and 10 days. He was born in Cumberland county, Pa., April 15th 1788, and came to this country many years ago. He was the father of 7 children, and had 23 grandchildren and 19 great-grandchildren. He was buried in the Mennonite graveyard on the 27th of March. His funeral was largely attended, and the occasion was improved by the writer and Peter Truxel (Mennonite), from Heb. ix 27. He had made no profession of religion. How sad it is to see so many golden opportunities and precious hours pass by unheeded. Sinners, take warning, and put out of your return to God; as we have but this lifetime to make our peace with him, and there is no repentance beyond the grave.

CHRISTIAN HALDEMAN.

In the Nettle Creek congregation, Wayne county, Ind., March 29th, 1876, brother JOHN A. HOOVER, aged 79 years, 11 months and 6 days. He was born in Bedford county, Pa. At the age of 17 he moved to Ohio, and afterward to Indiana where he resided until death. He and his surviving companions raised a large family of children, and have seen them come into the church of God. His death came to him as a thief in the night. He arose in the morning, ate his breakfast, and was apparently as well as usual. He went out to attend to some of his domestic affairs, when suddenly he fell to the ground. His son carried him into the house after which he drew only a few breaths and then expired. Oh, may the broken family realize that they are not without God in the world, neither without hope in a glorious resurrection. May this visitation cause them to think much of Heaven and eternal things and to pray without ceasing, and cause them to feel that what God does is well done. Funeral by the Brethren from Matth. xxiv. 44.

LEWIS W. TEETER.

In Spring Creek branch, Ind., Nov. 4, 1875, GEORGE MESSINGER, aged 74 years, 11 months and 7 days. The deceased was born Nov. 27th, 1800, in York county, Pa. He emigrated with his parents to Ohio, in 1813. Was married April 24th, 1823, and lived with his companion 53 years. Had 6 children, all of whom are living; 23 grandchildren, and 16 great-grandchildren. Had been a member of the German Baptist church some 18 years. His remains were conveyed to the Brethren's cemetery, near Dodge-town, Kankasko county, Ind. Funeral discourse by Davis Younce and other brethren.

Also, in Whitley Co., Ind., Jan. 28th, 1876, ELIZABETH ECKER, aged 40 years, 4 months and 21 days. Funeral discourse by the writer from Luke xii. 40. JONAS UMBRAUGH.

Within the precincts of the Big Grove congregation, near Dysart, Tama county, Iowa, March 30th, 1876, of rheumatism, friend JOEL S. McFARLAND, step-son of brother George Aschenbrenner, aged 19 years, 2 months and 25 days. He was a kind and obliging young man, beloved by all who knew him. A short time before he expired, he expressed a strong desire to be united with the church by baptism, but his physical condition would not permit. Another solemn warning against delays. Funeral discourse by Elder Peter Forney, from Rom. x. 13, to a crowded house of friends and relatives. GEO. W. THOMAS.

(German paper please copy).

On the 22nd of Feb., 1876, sister POLY CAVAN, of Panola, Woodford county, Ill., aged 67 years, 1 month 14 days. Sermon by the Brethren from Revelations: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, said the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

April 1st, 1876, of pneumonia, friend JOHN YOUNG, Nicholson township, of Fayette county, Pa., aged 66 years. Friend Young was a worthy citizen and pleasant and agreeable neighbor, and a warm admirer of the Bible and the gospel practice of the old Brethren. Not being in the circle of his former brethren, he allied his company to us, yet never became a member in the full fraternity. Funeral services by the undersigned and Elder David Johnson of the Mennoite fraternity. Discourse from 1 Cor. xv. 26, to a large and attentive audience. JOSEPH I. COVER.

In the Monticello church, Cass county, Ind., on the 19th day of March 1876, our much esteemed brother JACOB YOUNG, in his 52nd year, leaving a widow (a sister) and 9 children to mourn the loss of a dear husband and father, though not sorrowing as those who have no hope, as he tried to live faithful to his profession, and in his last sickness had the elders called, and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. Funeral by the Brethren, from latter part of Matt. xxiv, to a large and sympathizing congregation of neighbors and friends.

JOHN S. SNOWBERGER.

In the Astoria arm of the church, Fulton county, Ill., sister HANNAH SMITH, wife of Jas. M. Smith, of apoplexy, on the 13th of October, 1875, aged 74 years, 1 month and 14 days. Her maiden name was Hannah Eymann. Born in Virginia, near the South Branch of the Potomac river, on the 4th of September 1801. At the age of 8 years she moved with her parents to Ohio. Married Henry Walker in 1824. Became a member of the church in her 44th year.—Moved to Illinois in 1840, and after her husband's death, she was married to Jas. M. Smith in 1862, and resided in Fulton county, Ills., until her death. She died in full fellowship with the church, and was loved and respected by all who knew her. Funeral exercises some time after by JACOB NEGLY.

The Successful Physician.

There is probably no man to whom the community owe so much as to the honest, fair-spoken physician, who does his actual duty, both to himself and to his patients. Really skillful physicians are not so numerous that their virtues need no mention, and hence the advertisement of Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, may well claim the reader's attention. Dr. Pierce is a type of a class of men who obtain success by careful and well-directed effort, not attempting too much, or creating false ideas as to ability. The only reliable physician in these days of complicated disorders and high-pressure living is the "Specialist," the man who understands his one branch of the business. Such in his line is Dr. Pierce. For the benefit of his readers he has written a "Common Sense Medical Adviser," which is well worth reading by those who need such a work. With strict business honor, high professional skill, reasonable fees, and a large corps of competent assistants, Dr. Pierce will doubtless make his name familiar as "household words."

The above is an accurate picture of the Waterbury Eight Day Clock, (with or without strike) which I have been offering as a premium to those who aid me in establishing agents for FAHRENEY'S PAIN-EXCER, in localities where it is yet unknown. Those who have received the clock are highly pleased with it, and as an evidence that they appreciate the gift, offer to do much more in the future. I therefore extend the time to the middle of May, so that others may avail themselves of this opportunity of securing a handsome and durable clock. I will then discontinue to give clocks. is published every Tuesday at $1.60 a year, postage included.

This Christian journal is devoted to the defense and promotion of Primitive Christianity, as held and practiced by the Church of the Brethren, or German Baptists.

They accept the New Testament as the only proper rule of faith and practice, and hold to the observance of all its commandments and doctrines; among which are Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Trine Immersion, Prayer, the Washing of the Saints' Feet, the Lord's Supper, the Communion, Non-Resistance, Non-Conformity to the world, and the Perfecting of Holiness in the fear of the Lord.

As space will permit, some attention will be given to such secular matters as may be judged instructive to our readers.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. For further particulars send for a specimen number.

THE TIDE OF DEATH.

The tide rolls on, the tide of death,
The never ceasing tide,

That sweeps the pleasures from our hearts,
And loved from our side,

That brings afflictions to our lot,
And anguish and despair;
And bears from youth's unfulfilled brow
The charms that lingered there.

The tide rolls on; wave after wave,
Its swelling waters flow;
Before it all is bright and fair,
Behind it all is woe.

The infant from its mother's breast,
The gay and blooming bride,
Are swept away and borne along
By that resistless tide.

The tide rolls on, the soldier's eye
Grows dim beneath the swell,
The scholar shuns the mystic lore,
That he hath loved so well;
The monarch puts the crown aside,
And labor's weary slave
Rejoices that his limbs will know
The quiet of the grave.

The tide rolls on; like summer brooks,
It glideth to the sad;
But like the winter's angry tunc,
It rusheth to the glad:
From kingly hall and lowly cot,
From battle field and hearth,
It sweeps into oblivious sea
The dwellers of the earth.

Roll on, thou dark and turbid wave,
Thou canst not bear away
The record of the good and brave;
That knoweth not decay.
Though fierce may rush the billows strife,
Though deep thy current be,
Still faith shall lift thy beacon high,
And guide us through thy sea.

Old and New Things.

BY WM. HERTZLER.

And so man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish. But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved. &c. Luke 5: 37-39.

In the language of Christ, just quoted, we can see the nature of the kingdom of God. The parable, or similitude, of the wine, and new and old bottles, is beautiful in explaining the characters and features of the old and new. The new wine represents the gospel, or new dispensation; the old wine represents the old dispensation, or Mosaic law. The new bottles represent the new creature, or new man in Christ; but the old bottles represent the old man, or the unregenerate being.

"No man putteth new wine into old bottles." Why so? Well, because they do not agree; their natures are so very different. New wine cannot but ferment. That is the nature of that substance just drawn fresh from the grapes; and the language of our Savior tells us that in those days the art of preservation in its first state was not known; for he says, "no man." Again "new wine must be put into new bottles." Why so? Because new bottles have an elastic nature, are of flexible material, just adapted to the new wine with its fermenting disposition. And it appears that this process is necessary to cure or rectify the wine. For our Savior says, "No man also having drunk old wine, straitway desireth new; for he says the old is better." In saying "no man" Jesus includes all men; not only the drunkard pronouncing it better.

But leaving the literal point, I shall try to make a spiritual application on this occasion.

The new wine, as said, represents the Gospel of Christ, which is of a self-denying character, just the contrary to that of Moses. The old law allowed self defence and a retaliation for incurred grievances; but the new says, "Love your enemies," &c. Now this last injunction or precept, we cannot observe unless we are new creatures; for no sinful or unregenerate man is able to live out the requirements of the Gospel. Hence the necessity of those new bottles which the ancients made use of in putting up new wine, which were not made of glass, stone, and earth as ours are, but of hides, converted into leather, of which those ancient bottles were manufactured. When new, they stretched, so making room for the fermenting stuff which they contained, allowing the new wine to go through the process of fermentation without bursting. But the next year they could not be used to put in new wine, having lost the nature of giving by the first year's process. Hence pronounced old bottles.

Now for new bottles. But we must remember that those ancient bottles could not be had without a sacrifice of life: a death was necessary in those creatures whose hides were to be used in making those bottles of a giving nature. And so in a spiritual sense with us, our life must be sacrificed; we must first die before that new creature, or new bottle, will be visible. But to die, even a natural death, is one of the most distressing scenes I ever witnessed; when death in the shape of a disease is fighting against life, and by degrees advances, and makes conquest on the premises to such an extent that all hopes of recovery are gone. Oh, how many sighs and groans are rising from such a bed of affliction heaven-ward! But finally life is overcome, and the battle fought in favor of death; the subject himself submits, and fully surrenders to the conqueror; and all connected with the deceased are compelled to say AMEN to the work, although they do it with reluctance. Just so with the sinner; his sinful life, the delights of nature, and the amusements of the carnal mind, must be sacrificed. But oh, how many tears are shed! The considerations will be that heaven will require a full surrender in the great struggle! But without dying to sin, there is no life for us. But the apostle says, "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God." Then it is our work to "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service." Now the new creature is at hand, the very object, fit for the Master's use, to put in the new wine, the gospel; and as old things have passed away, behold all things are become new. We find a longing in that new creature to feed upon the gospel, to live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God, receiving the gospel as the proper diet, and by so doing obtaining power to be at service to the gospel when it says, feed thine enemy. The new bottle is flexible, and yields, or complies, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, entertaining strangers, loving enemies, and praying for such as persecute us. These things indeed take new creatures, who have imbibed the gospel with its moulding powers. By self-denial the Lord Jesus overcame even the world, death, hell, and the devil.

Those ancient bottles were also excellent vessels for traveling purposes. They could be thrown on wagons, hauled over rough roads, carried on camels, set down and pushed into corners, without breaking; indeed not so much as to give an unwilling answer, No! "dumb as the sheep before his shearer." Again that kind of bottles did not go to pieces as ours do when they suffer a blow. No, but it they got a buff, striking in a dinge that was pushed out gradually again, by the new wine they contained, so much so, that men could see no mark of the blow.

Now, brethren and sisters, how is it with our bottles? Claiming to be of the new kind, are we thus of a flexible nature, and a yielding disposition, imitating those ancient bottles while on our heavenward travel! If the roads are rough can we stand the shaking, the setting-down rather ungentlely, and the crowding into-corners? Are we altogether dead; or does the nature of the old bottle manifest itself, which bursts? Or if we get blows, is the dinge out again? Or do we allow that mark to be visible for days, weeks, months, or even years, showing a cold side and an untorgiving disposition?

The old wine represents the Mosaic Law. That tastes much better if we are allowed to avenge ourselves—to retaliate—for an injury by means of such measures, being a great improvement in the house of God, if we only once understand its benefits.

Elizabethtown, Pa.

For the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN.
Church Government,

BY JAMES WIRT.

Rules and regulations observed, will maintain order and discipline in the church.

There is one church that Christ established on earth, and ample provisions were made for the admission of all who are willing to partake of the water of life freely. All should feel the necessity of rightly appreciating the benefits conferred by an humble submission to what the church requires of all her members.

The church will prosper when a strict regard is had to the officials, enforcing the rules that should govern all those who compose the body of believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. All pious and devout persons are interested in the extension of Zion's borders in the world. The work of evangelizing all nations is committed unto faithful men; and after this is accomplished it is incumbent upon the rules of the church to keep love and harmony among the members. On this account the utility of obedience to church government will be readily acknowledged; for it is that system of discipline that enables it to retain all that embrace the true doctrine of Christ in one corporate body.

The duties of the elders of the church are clearly set forth in St. Paul's epistles to Timothy; and much depends upon their faithful labors, whether the church will prosper. They are to be examples to the flock—to those who are under their respective charges. All the members have their proper position in the church and are expected to observe the several and appropriate duties belonging to their capacity. "Let every man abide in the calling wherein he is called." A proper regard should always be had to the following injunction: "Ye younger be subject to the elder, and all be subject to one another;" neither should the members of the church neglect to frequent the assemblies of the congregation when they meet for divine worship; for upon this depends, in a great measure, the prosperity of the church. Jesus has promised that when two or three are gathered together in his name, he would be one in their midst. Without his divine help nothing can be done that will in anywise glorify God, and all efforts to worship him aright will be unavailing. The church is the representative body of Christ on earth, and the rule of authority is invested in a properly delegated power. His commissioned ambassadors who continue to carry on the designs of God, are permitted to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, to be instructed from the words of inspiration, the only criterion the church has for the transaction of her affairs until the close of this dispensation, when the marriage supper of the Lamb occurs. Then Christ himself will reign in person, and the millennial era will be ushered in with all the glory attending the reign.

Sister M.'s Seed Basket.

PACKAGE NO. 6.

Some persons try to justify themselves in their evil course by saying that they are just as good as certain persons in the church. That is a poor screen to hide behind. The righteousness of all the Christians in the world could not justify you, how much less their sins. In the sight of God your sins are all the greater, because you seek to justify yourself. Your deeds may be no worse than those of some Christians;

but there is this difference, they repent and endeavor to do better, and you do not. It is a heartfelt repentance, and a striving to overcome their evil natures, that keep Christians in favor with God. Read the 51st Psalm, which is a prayer of a servant of God who had fallen into sin. Can you see no difference between such persons and yourself?

When the prophet Nathan came to David to reprove him for the great sin he had fallen into, he said to him: "By this deed thou hast given great occasion to enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." And Paul directs his brethren, that were servants, "to count their Masters worthy of all honor, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed." And the young women he commands to be "discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed." Titus 2: 5. How solemn to think that the failings of Christians will give occasion to the world to blaspheme God and his word! And what carefulness this solemn thought should work in us! "Yea, what clearing of ourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear." Every time Christians irreverently speak the name of God, or fail to honor their parents, or take the advantage in a bargain, or depart in the least from the truth, or speak disrespectfully to those who are in authority, they give occasion to the unconverted to blaspheme. Oh! fellow Christian, let us ponder this thought.

When Jesus commanded his disciples to feed five thousand men, besides women and children, they answered him: "We have here but five loaves and two fishes," and one of them asked the question, "What are they among so many?" But having brought them, as he commanded, he so multiplied that small portion of food that they could feed a great multitude, probably ten thousand persons. Is there any brother or sister, when thinking of the mission to Denmark, and the work to be accomplished, and the small sum they are able to give, ready, like Andrew, to say, "What would my little mite be worth in so great a work?" Just do as the disciples did, carry it to Jesus. In his hands your pennies can be so multiplied so as to feed his missionary "many days." If we cannot preach to sinners ourselves, we can be ravens to feed God's prophets. Think of the pleasant sequel to the miracle of the loaves and fishes. After feeding so many people, they gathered up twelve baskets full—more than they had at first. Would you not be happy if God would "so multiply your seed sown" that at another time you could give twice as much? We must sow if we would reap; and don't forget that "they that sow sparingly shall reap also sparingly."

We sometimes murmur in our hearts at our tribulations, forgetting that "tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope." The Scriptures teach, and our experience verifies that which is taught, namely, that when all is prosperous and our skies the brightest, then it is that we are most liable to forget God. When Israel "waxed fat, then he forsook God who made him; and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation." Perfect and entire happiness, in this life, would lessen our desire to attain unto the life to come. Heaven would in a measure lose its attractions.

If all our lives were one broad glare
Of sunlight, clear, unclouded;
If all our path were smooth and fair,
By no soft gloom overshrouded;
If all life's flowers were fully blown
Without the sweet unfolding,
And happiness were rudely thrown
On hands too weak for holding—
Should we not miss the twilight hours,
The gentle haze and sadness?
Should we not long for storms and showers,
To break the constant gladness?

If none were sick and none were sad,
What service could we render!
I think if we were always glad,
We scarcely could be tender.
Our patient misadventure,
Earth would grow cold, and miss indeed
Its sweetest consolation,
If sorrow never claimed our heart,
And every wish were granted,
Patience would die, and hope depart—
Life would be disenchanting.

And yet in heaven is no more night,
In heaven is no more sorrow!
Such unimagined new delight
Fresh grace from pain will borrow—
As the poor seed that undergound
Seeks its true life above it,
Not knowing what will there be found
When sunbeams kiss and love it.
So we in darkness upward grew,
And look and long for heaven,
But cannot picture it below,
Till more of light be given.

Individual Responsibility.

God deals with us singly, and we must deal with God singly. We have little concern with what others do, but everything with what we do ourselves. Let us live, and think, and speak, and act as if we and God were alone, and as if the whole weight and responsibility of his work upon earth lay upon us, as lie upon us it does, to the full reach of our power to bear it. We are responsible for our own souls, and for the souls of others. I constantly feel in what a very different state the church and the world would be, if every man who is called a Christian had his heart on fire with divine love, and like the Christians of apostolic days, went everywhere preaching the word. I do not mean the speaking in public to many, which must ever be the gift and calling of a few, but I mean the frank, candid, spontaneous and unaffected speech, with which one who loves Christ may tell another of the beauty of his Master. Were every Christian thus to act, what an enormous power would be set to work, and an agency which holds at once in its hands all the avenues and influences of our vast social life! What a blessing might be expected from above, if every man did what he might do for Christ! I use the phrase advisedly, because I am sure that God puts it in our power to do what God means us to do. He that does nothing in vain, but in his exact economy never wastes a drop of water or a dead leaf, has not given time, talent, money, position and influence, to be thrown away. We only need the zeal—the heaven-given fire of the Spirit—the all constraining, all-subduing love of Christ.—Sel.

The Salutation.

BY J. F. EBERSOLE.

Salute means to address with civility. The ancients saluted according to rank. The common salutation consisted in laying the right hand on the bosom, and inclining the body. Inferiors kissed the feet, knees, or hands of superiors; equals kissed the beard or cheek.

There is a curious bit of history on record which illustrates the idea set forth in the salutation. Philippe vi. was crowned king of France A. D. 1328, whose title to the throne was disputed by Edward III. of England. Edward would not acknowledge him as his lord, or superior, but the matter was compromised by the King of France kissing the King of England.

In some parts of the old countries the salutation is still recognized, and especially at the vatican, where the visitor is expected to kiss the feet or hands of that dignitary, the Pope of Rome, which is repugnant to the ideas of the Christian, for "Ye are brethren," and if so, must be on an equality.

Hand shaking seems to be very customary, yet few that engage in it know the idea or meaning of the custom. To extend the right hand to an acquaintance, implies that we are unarmed, bear no ill will or hatred, and that we hold no weapon of destruction in the hand, as he can see or feel; and coupled with the salutation, they denote friendship and equality.

Dear token of love, what earthly bliss
To thee can we compare?
A brother's love a holy kiss—
Is life and hope, and not despair.

Many persons excuse themselves for not participating in the salutation upon the ground that Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss. But that only shows to what extreme measures humanity will resort to betray a friend by a token which was recognized between them as a seal of friendship.

The kiss is also a natural symbol of affection. What Christian mother has not stood by the bedside of a darling child, that had been stricken by disease? When she had administered the various remedies that skill and science had prescribed, and the last faint ray of hope expired; when on the very shores of the river of death, the dark waters of which divide time from eternity, she could stoop down and imprint a farewell kiss on its aching brow, while angels were in attendance to bear the little wanderer home. Oh, how many of us have witnessed such scenes, and felt as though we would fain leave the shores of mortality and bear them company to the realms of eternal bliss! And it is ever so, when the feelings are wrought up to the point of exultation, immensity of eternity, and at such times all seems goodness and love, which are attributes of Divinity.

McComb, Ohio.

THERE is a spirit of Jesus Christ more God like than even his words—a spirit which all may feel, but which none can express, just as one may feel in his bosom the beauty of a day in June, but can never embody that heart-beat in language. But such a spirit there is. It will sit down and talk with theological science as Jesus talked with the women at the well, or with the ruler by night. The wider the difference of opinion, the more eager the spirit to show its benevolence. It leaves the ninety and nine in the fold of truth, and goes forth toward the one infidel, or atheist, or skeptic, who may seem to be wandering in the wilderness of entangled thought.—Prof. Swing.

It was not an unmeaning or inappropriate prayer of the good deacon, who, sighing for the enlargement of the church in faith and love, cried, "O Lord, bring us all out of the seventh into the eighth chapter of Romans!"

BE NOT WEARY IN WELL DOING.

BY MRS J. S. THOMAS.

Go, bury thy sorrow, thy sighing and fear,
Behold thou the dawning of day.
Arise! 'tis thy Master. Oh! he of good cheer.
He calleth thee. Hasten—obey.

Go, seek thou the poor, and the halt, and the blind;
Admonish, and comfort, and cheer.
Oh! gather the sheaves for thy Master to bind,
When he shall in Judgment appear.

Go out into highways and gather them in;
And teach them of Jesus' great love.
Tell them there's a crown, which the faithful shall win,
At home—glorious home—home above.

Say not, "I am weary;" say not, "I am faint"
Remember the cross wears the crown;
And if thou wouldst be a victorious saint,
Thou canst not till death lay it down.

The Seventh Day.

BY R. H. MILLER.

Are we under obligation to keep the seventh day a Sabbath unto the Lord? This is an important question, and unsettled in the minds of some good people, and settled wrong in the minds of others. It is necessary to know what the law on that subject was, by whom it was given, whom it was given to, and what it was given for. When we have learned all these things concerning the seventh day, we may know whether it is to be kept under the Christian dispensation. All these questions are settled in the 16th chapter of Exodus, where the seventh day is for the first time given as a law. Then it was given to Israel, and bound upon them alone. In the 25th and 26th verses, God, by Moses, commands Israel to gather manna six days, but on the seventh day there should be none. Then he says in the 29th verse, "See, for that the Lord has given you the Sabbath; therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days. Abide ye every man in his place. Let no man go out of his place on the seventh day." 30th verse, "So the people rested on the seventh day."

These Scriptures show what the law of the Sabbath was, and how it was to be kept when first given to Israel. They were not to go out of their houses, or tents, on that day. Surely such a law is not binding upon us in this age: it only could apply to Israel under their peculiar circumstances at the time it was given. We would observe, too, that this command was given before the law at Sinai,—before the ten commands were given to Israel, but when they were given, it was included among them. The manner in which it was given at Sinai shows that it had been given before, (Ex. 20: 18): "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." This phrase, "Remember the Sabbath day," shows that it is a renewal of the former command given in the 16th chapter.

Further, concerning the law of the Sabbath given to Israel, Ex. 35: 2, "Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest unto the Lord; whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death." 3rd verse, "Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day." This law that a man should build no fire on the Sabbath day surely could not be intended for the whole earth. How could it be kept in the cold regions, where christianity has spread, in countries covered with ice for months?

Again, in Numbers 15: 52-36, "And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, * * * and all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; from these Scriptures we learn that this law was a part of a penal code which belonged to Israel alone, and could not be incorporated into the church now unless it was changed. But we have not the right to change God's law so as to suit us, and then keep it in our own way. If we were under that law now, no man could build a fire on that day. If he carries a bundle of sticks to build a fire, he must be stoned to death. Would it not be a terrible thing now to see a congregation of professed Christians stoning a man to death for gathering sticks on the Sabbath day? Yet that was the law given to Israel, to teach them the awful consequence of violating the commands of God.

Surely this is enough to convince us that the law is not in force now. But the Sabbatarian says we shall keep it in a different way. Then if we change the manner of keeping it, we must have divine authority for the change. But as we have no divine authority for changing that law of the Sabbath, adapting it to the Christian dispensation, we cannot believe that that law was ever changed, but taken out of the way and nailed to the cross, as the other carnal ordinances were. We know nothing of any way of keeping the Sabbath, or seventh day, by divine authority, except the way God gave it to Israel; and as none will contend for keeping it in that way, we now have a right to demand of those who ask us to keep it, to give the law teaching it to be kept in a way different from that given to Israel; for we cannot keep it in that way. Then let no man put a yoke upon us which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.

Paul gets this subject before us in its true light, in Eph. 2: 14, 15, "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances." This shows that the law which was given to Israel did not survive the death of our Savior; and for that reason is not binding upon us. Paul says again, "We are free from the law, that being dead wherein we were held."

We might rest the whole matter here, and call upon the Sabbatarian to find a law for keeping the seventh day, different from that given to Israel; for until that is done, we are under no obligation to keep it. Not only that, but he must find a law teaching us how it is to be kept under the gospel; and still further, he must show that keeping the law in a different way from that given to Israel will be acceptable in the sight of God. Until this is done, (and we are confident it never will be), we are under no obligation to keep the seventh day as a Sabbath.

We would observe further, that the world was more than two thousand years old when this law of the Sabbath was given in Exodus; and since it was taken out of the way by the Savior when he died upon the cross, the Sabbatarian must find something as evidence to prove his cause besides the law given to Israel. And in order to do that, he takes this position, that the seventh day was blessed and sanctified before the law was given. From this fact he argues that the seventh day, or Sabbath, should be kept after the law was taken away. But that kind of reasoning is not sufficient to sustain his cause, where there is no command of God or divine precedent under the gospel to support it. That course of reasoning, if admitted as an argument, would bring the sacrifices of the patriarchs over into the gospel church; for they, too, existed long before the law was given, and were accepted of God in their worship. In Gen. 4: 4, "And Abel he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering." Here we see that sacrifices were accepted of God from the very beginning—long before the law was given; and when the law was made, these offerings were incorporated into it like the seventh day, and made a part of the law. Now we might argue, like these Sabbatarians, that the sacrificial offerings should continue after the law was taken away, and give as the reason that they were accepted of God from the beginning—long before the law was given.

If, then, the seventh day must be kept because it was blessed before the law, and did not depend upon the law for its existence, so the offerings of Abel, which God accepted, must be continued under the gospel; for they, too, were before the law, and did not depend upon it for their existence. Such reasoning, or argument, founded on the existence and acceptance of either the sacrifices or the seventh day because they were sanctified or accepted in the days of the patriarchs, cannot without a plain command of God be made a law in the Christian dispensation. It requires a command and precedent to enjoin either of them upon the Christian, just as much as it required the command and precedent to enjoin them upon Israel. The command to Israel does not enjoin them upon us; and the command, if there had been one, to the Patriarchs would not bind either of them upon the Christian, in the absence of gospel command and precedent. We have a right to demand of the Sabbatarian an example or command, of some one of the inspired men, for the church to keep the seventh day after the Jewish law was abolished. We want them to show one Christian assembly meeting to worship together on the seventh day; then they will have an argument. The apostles met with the Jews and Greeks on the Sabbath, because they there had an opportunity to preach the gospel to them; but those meetings were not Christian congregations; they were Jewish assemblies, therefore, not a precedent for us. But before we are done, we will find the precedent of the apostles' meeting with Christian congregations on the first day of the week.

We will now return to the second point to be noted, that is, By whom was this law given? We would not notice this point, were it not a fact that the Sabbatarian makes an unwarranted distinction, which leads him into error, when he says, "God gave the decalogue and Moses gave the law," when the truth is clear that God is the author of the whole law; as the apostle says, "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." God gave the law through Moses. The error in making a distinction here, as Sabba-tarians do, when they say the law of Moses passed away but left the ten commandments binding upon us, is proved to be a dangerous theorem, by the language of our Savior in Matth. 22: 26-40. A lawyer says to the Savior, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

Here are two commandments, on which all the law and the prophets hang, and neither of the two is in the decalogue. As the ten commandments are a part of the law, and all the law and the prophets hang on these two commandments, and they have passed away, according to this error of the Sabbatarian, then, the law and the prophets went with them, and the decalogue must have gone too, for it would have nothing to stand on. As this is the result of his own logic, he has nothing to hang the seventh day upon; and it, too, is gone. We refer to this for the purpose of showing that the Savior condemns the unwarranted distinction they make between the ten commandments and the law—two commandments which lie at the foundation of the law, yet not in the decalogue.

We will now notice the third point in reference to this law of the Sabbath, that is, To whom was it given? We presume none will deny that this law was given to Israel, and not to the church under the gospel. All its ceremonies and penalties had reference to Israel alone. The manner of keeping it, prescribed in the law, applied to none but Israel. And that law to Israel did not bind the Christian any more than it did the Patriarch. Then we have several important questions settled in regard to the law: 1. It was given to Israel alone; 2. It was not binding upon the patriarchs, for it was given after their day; 3. It was not given to the Christian, therefore he is not under obligation to keep it; 4. It must have passed away when the Jewish dispensation wound up, for they were the only people to whom it was given. But the Sabbatarian says the seventh day was given to the patriarchs before the law. We say, too, the sacrifices were given to the patriarchs before the law. Then when their dispensation was wound up and ended, like the Jewish dispensation, its laws ended with it, and are not binding upon the Christian dispensation, unless made so by the command of God an precept of inspired men.

We will now notice the fourth point, that is, the object for which it was given. Gal. 3: 19, "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions till the seed should come." There we have one reason why the law was given—"because of transgression;" and also the length of time it should stand—"till the seed (Christ) should come." In Romans 7: 6, 7 we read, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held. * * * * Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Paul makes three points here worthy of note: 1. The law under which we were held being dead, we are freed from it; 2. In the sixth verse, he declares the law to be dead; 3. In the seventh verse he connects the phrase "thou shalt not covet," with the law which he tells us is dead; and notice, that is a part of the ten commandments, showing again the Sabbatarian to be wrong when he makes his distinction between the ten commandments and the law, saying one passes away and the other is perpetuated.

When God gave the law of the Sabbath to Israel, he said, (Ex. 16: 26) "that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no." Here we have the object for which the Sabbath law was given to Israel—"that I may prove them," not to the Christians, or Gentiles, or Patriarchs, for they are to be proved by a different law. It was given to see if Israel would "walk in it or no;" not to see if the Christian, Gentile, or Patriarch would "walk in it or no."

In conclusion, upon this point, we would observe that the law was given to Israel to fence them in—to separate them from other nations—constituting them a peculiar people; making them the depository of God's law until Christ, the promised seed, should come. When Christ came, it was his work to break down "the middle wall of partition between" the Jew and Gentile, "to make in himself of twain one new man"—one new church; not to revise the old law and reenact it; not to the revise or change the old seventh day and reenact it; but to take it out of the way. The Scriptures do not teach that the Jewish Sabbath is changed to a Christian Sabbath; but that it is taken away and a new one, with a new law, made for the Christian. Then we shall not try to prove that the Jewish Sabbath is changed, but taken away, and kept no more by inspired men after the law was dead.

THE FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK.

We now come to consider the authority for keeping the First day of the week, in the new church, as a sacred and holy day. In this investigation we do not contend that the Jewish Sabbath, or seventh day, is changed to the Christian Sabbath, or to the first day; but the old one is taken away, and the first day is a new day of rest, given by a new law, in a new church, to be kept in a new way, by another people, where there is neither Jew nor Greek. When we come to the new church, we ask for a command to keep the Jewish Sabbath; but we ask in vain, for there is none given to the new church. We ask for an example of the apostles in the primitive church, keeping the seventh day as a day of meeting together—a day of rest; but we ask in vain, for there is no such example in the gospel.
